and his descendants. There will be times when things are difficult. We may need to do things that we are not comfortable doing. But we need to follow God— even when his plan doesn't lead us down the paths we had expected or hoped for.

Gen. 12:11-13

The lie that Abram told here showed that he lacked faith in God. He didn't believe that God would protect him, so he took things into his own hands. We may feel that a little lie is justified if it is intended to protect something important to us. We may even succeed in getting away with it for a while, but all lies reap long-term consequences. It is best to trust God to protect us as we tell the truth. The God of truth will stand with us as we dare to speak the truth.

Gen. 13:5-11

A conflict developed between the families of Abram and Lot over pastureland for their flocks. To strengthen the strained family relationship, Abram offered Lot first choice of the land. Abram realized that people were more important than possessions, so he sacrificed his right to the best land to maintain harmony between their families. We need to learn this important lesson: Our relationships are more important than the things we own.

Gen. 13:11-13

One bad choice often leads to another. The choices Lot made here and in the following chapters led him toward his later fall. Here, he selfishly chose the best land and the easy lifestyle that would accompany it. In 13:12-13, he chose to move closer to the wicked city of Sodom. In 19:1-18, he chose to become an important man in a wicked place. In 19:30-38, his fall reached its final depths as he had incestuous relations with his daughters. We need to think ahead, reflecting on the probable consequences of our present decisions.

Gen. 14:14-16

A number of important character traits emerge as we examine Abram's prompt military action. He proved himself to be a man of courage, always ready to act when the situation demanded it. He was willing to give up certain luxuries in order to follow the plan God had laid out for him. These are important traits for us to emulate as we seek to maintain spiritual gains.

Gen. 15:4-5

God's promise of numerous children must have stretched Abram's faith to the very limit. God's plan for Abram seemed an impossibility—thousands of descendants from an old man and a barren woman. But God's promise did actually come about. God's plans for us may be beyond belief—even impossible. But with God, nothing is impossible!

Gen. 15:6

This is one of the most important verses in the Old Testament. Abram believed God, and God considered him righteous. In other words, it was Abram's faith, not his works, that made him righteous before God. For us to continue growing spiritually, we need to trust God more and trust our works less. We don't have the power to overcome sin alone, but God will help us through the toughest temptations if we trust him. He will count us righteous because of our trust in him, not because we try to be perfect.

Gen. 16:1-4

About two years had passed without anything happening since God's promise of a child had been given. Sometimes the hardest part of surrendering to God is the waiting. Here Abram and Sarai show us what not to do when things don't progress as quickly as we had hoped. Rather than accepting God's timing, they took matters into their own hands. They assigned a servant girl, Hagar, to be a surrogate mother for Abram's son. This "solution" has been a source of conflict to this day. Abram's descendants through Hagar are the Arab nations, whose conflict with the Jews keeps the Middle East in constant turmoil.

Gen. 16:7-13

When Hagar was helpless to help herself, and when she recognized her desperate need, the Angel of the Lord came and ministered to her. Often God waits and does not enter the situation to help us until we recognize that our situation is desperate without outside help. But when we see the truth and admit our need and cry out to God, he is ready to step in.

Gen. 17:5-6

Since Abram was childless, his name (meaning, "exalted father") must have been a source of embarrassment to him.

Here it is changed to Abraham, which means “father of many.” Abraham’s name, in a real sense, became his promise from God. It would have been a continual reminder and source of hope that God would come through for him in the end.

Gen. 17:9-10, 24-27

Many of our significant relationships are symbolized by an outward sign. For example, married people wear rings as a sign of their marriage commitment. Circumcision was a sign of the agreement, or covenant, between God and Abraham. It was a mark by which Abraham’s descendants were set apart as God’s special people. Inner changes need to be accompanied by outer signs; beliefs need to be proven by actions. As changes begin to take place inside, we need to express these changes outwardly in our actions and lifestyle.

Gen. 18:1-6

Hebrews 13:2 urges the practice of hospitality since some have “entertained angels without realizing it.” Abraham’s treatment of the three strangers here may have been the background for this verse in Hebrews. Surely this is an example to be followed. As we progress spiritually, one of our goals is to help others to discover the new way of life that we have found. What better way than to be hospitable toward others?

Gen. 18:17-19

Many people wonder why God chose one man and his family out of all others. Was this fair? These verses show us that God had an important purpose for choosing this one family. God picked Abraham so he could teach his descendants God's ways, for through his ancestral line would come Jesus the Messiah, a source of blessing for all the nations of the earth. God never planned to bless only one family. God chose one family to bring blessings and a means of redemption to all of us.

Gen. 18:22-32

Often, we are urged to pray for others who have problems and difficulties. In these verses, we hear Abraham as he entreats God on behalf of Lot and his family. He is deeply concerned for their welfare and intercedes for them as he speaks with God. We, too, are to reach out and help others who are in need. Prayer is a powerful means of doing this.

Gen. 19:16

Even after Lot became aware of the impending doom of Sodom, he and his family continued to linger there. The angels had to physically force them to leave. Sometimes, even when we know what course of action is required, we need a push to get us moving. Let us thank God for the "angels" he has provided to help us through times of crisis. At other times, we may be needed to pull others out of situations that are dangerous for them.

Gen. 19:17-26

As we seek to escape our sinful ways and the consequences of them, there is no looking back, no lingering. Doing so will only result in our destruction. Lot's wife failed to follow the instructions the angels had set out for her family. They were to run from Sodom, never looking back. Lot's wife did look back, and it spelled her destruction. As we leave the destructive situations in our lives, it will be tempting to look back. But this final episode in the life of Lot's wife demonstrates the fatal consequences. We need to run without looking back.

Gen. 19:30-38

The incest in Lot's family was a direct consequence of Lot's irresponsible decisions in the past. He had spent his years in a wicked city and had failed to find suitable husbands for his daughters. Their desire for children led to deceit and incest. But there is hope beyond the shocking details of this story. Even though Lot failed in so many ways, many centuries later the apostle Peter used him as a clear example of one whose righteousness came by grace through faith (2 Peter 2:7-8). Lot was an extremely flawed person, but God is a gracious God. There is hope available for each of us, even if we are leaving behind a sordid past.

Gen. 20:1-18

Why is it so difficult to learn life's most important lessons? To protect himself, Abraham lied, telling Abimelech that his wife, Sarah, was his sister. The sad truth is, Abraham had made this mistake before (12:10-20). He had fallen into a pattern of using lies and deceit to protect himself. But this practice only caused pain to everyone involved. It also displayed how weak Abraham's faith in God was when confronted with difficult situations. The truth is crucial to building healthy relationships. If we stand by the truth, we can trust God to stand by us when things get tough.

Gen. 21:1-2

God keeps his word. When we claim his promises, we know that our sovereign God is able to fulfill them. Under normal circumstances there was no way that Sarah could have become a mother. But God gave her a child anyway. We may find ourselves in situations that seem just as impossible, but with God, anything is possible.

Gen. 22:1-2

God's request that Abraham sacrifice his son was a great test of faith, perhaps the greatest such test in history. Abraham's lifelong dreams were being realized in his beloved son Isaac. Wasn't God's promise of numerous descendants to be fulfilled through this child? But Abraham believed that God had his best in mind—and Abraham was right! He believed that no matter what God required of him, his obedience to God's plan was most important. He trusted that God would still make his promises come true, even without Isaac. Our faith in God's plan for us may be similarly tested. Are we ready to follow through with obedience?

Gen. 22:8-13

Here we find Abraham about to sacrifice his son Isaac. Much to the relief of Abraham and Isaac, however, God provided a substitute. We do not know what Abraham had in mind when he told his son that God would provide a sacrifice, but we do know that God has provided a sacrifice for us—not simply a ram caught in a thicket, but his only Son. Anyone who believes in him will have the means for discovering a new life now, and through eternity as well.

Gen. 22:16-18

The love Abraham must have felt for this long awaited son! How his heart must have ached at the thought of killing him! How could this have been right? At the end of the story we see that God spared Isaac by providing a ram as his substitute. God has provided a substitute for all of us—Jesus Christ. God did not spare himself the pain of seeing his Son suffer and die. He suffered so that we might be spared suffering and be redeemed from sin and its destructive effects.

Gen. 23:1-2

In this chapter we see Abraham mourning for his precious wife, Sarah. His grief was genuine, and he wanted to make proper preparations for paying his last respects. Grief comes into each of our lives, and proper channels for its expression must be found. If we fail to grieve properly over our personal losses, releasing our sorrows to God, it will be easy to fall away from God as we try to hide the pain. If we express our pain constructively, it will be less likely to undermine our relationship with God and inhibit our spiritual growth.

Gen. 24:67

When we lose someone close to us, it is important that we take some time for rebuilding. It is encouraging to notice that, after losing one major family relationship, Isaac found comfort in a new one. As people are taken away from us, God will provide others to give us the support we need to live a healthy and productive life.

Gen. 25:23

This prenatal prophecy concerning Jacob and Esau portends conflict between the brothers—and it goes beyond just normal sibling rivalry! Unfortunately, the subsequent family history amply bears this out. Sibling rivalry is often very destructive to family relationships and can easily get out of control. Siblings often separate for life, carrying with them years of hard feelings that taint all their other relationships. Reconciliation with those we have hurt is one of the goals of spiritual renewal. Let us take steps toward restoring our important relationships.

Gen. 25:34

Esau traded his rights as a firstborn son for a bowl of stew to fill his empty stomach. He was indifferent to the things in life that were really important. His primary concern was his physical satisfaction, with no thought at all for his future. He hadn't learned how to wait. The lesson Esau needed to learn is important for all of us. We need to view things from a long-term perspective. If we can picture the positive results of life as God intended it, we will be able to give up the momentary pleasures of sin that threaten to keep us from that life.

Children learn from their parents. Unfortunately, they are not necessarily selective about what they learn. They don't always learn the good things and ignore the bad. These verses demonstrate what Isaac learned from his father, Abraham. Doubtless, he had heard how Abraham had passed Sarah off as his sister to protect himself (12:10-20; 20:1-18). It is amazing how the sinful patterns of our parents are often repeated in our own lives. How often our family patterns of sin repeat themselves generation after generation! Isaac would have been wise to tell the truth and trust God to protect him. Trust in God is one weapon we have in fighting against destructive family patterns.

Gen. 26:23-24

Isaac was afraid, and he had good reason to be. He was surrounded by hostile neighbors who greatly outnumbered his household. He didn't have a place to call his own, except the burial site of his parents. He lived in Gerar by permission, as it were. At this time, God came to Isaac with this soothing message: "Do not be afraid." We may feel as if we don't belong anywhere. We may have forfeited our place in society. It may seem as though there are enemies all around us. But even when things are at their worst, we need to be aware that God is with us, whispering, "Do not be afraid."

Gen. 27:1-29

It is heartbreaking to watch Rebekah and Jacob conspire to deceive Isaac. Notice the great lengths to which they go to fool the old man. They already knew that Jacob was the heir to God's promises through Abraham (see 25:23, 29:33), but through their deceit they were trying to make God's plan happen. That never works without causing pain or added trouble somewhere else. God is in charge of the timetable of our lives. We need to stick with the truth and move at his pace.

Gen. 27:33

At this point Isaac realized he had blessed Jacob instead of Esau, but he could not take his blessing back. Jacob would receive the inheritance and blessing of the firstborn son. It became clear that it was God's plan that Jacob should be the recipient of God's promises to Abraham, so Isaac acquiesced to God's will. There are often times when God, through circumstances, will veto our plans. Through grace, he often delivers us from making bad choices and protects us from the terrible consequences. However, we must continually surrender our will to God if we are to progress spiritually.

Gen. 27:34-40

Here, Esau demonstrated tearful remorse, but according to Hebrews 12:16-17, it was too late. As a young man he had sold his future for a bowl of stew. Now he had to suffer the consequences for not waiting to fill his hungry stomach. He chose to sell his future for immediate satisfaction, for something to dull the pain he felt inside. Some of us may have done something similar, compromising the good future God intended for the fleeting pleasures of sin. But even though time has been lost, there is hope for those of us who are willing to confess our sins, accept responsibility for our actions, let go of what has been lost, and ask God to redeem our lives.

Gen. 28:20-22

Jacob's vow to God here is possibly just another of his schemes—something like a “foxhole” prayer. But God still honored and blessed Jacob. God's dealings with Jacob should give us some idea of how gracious he really is. Jacob wasn't exemplary or wise; he didn't know the God of his fathers as he should have. Yet God still was willing to work with him and bless him.

Gen. 29:25

Jacob's response to Laban's trickery reveals an interesting principle. Nobody resents being cheated more than a cheater. If there is a characteristic in others that we find particularly annoying, we would be wise to examine ourselves. It is probably one of our own.

Gen. 30:25-43

God always treated Jacob far better than he deserved. God blessed him in spite of his trickery and deceit. Often God works that way with us, too. He blesses us when we don't really deserve it. None of us really deserves God's love; all of us have failed in many ways. But God still reaches out to help us when we look to him in faith.

Gen. 31:3

Moving can be a time of major crisis. It is interesting to note that during all the major changes of Jacob's life, God always reestablished contact with him. Here, as Jacob faced a crisis with Laban's family, God gave Jacob instructions concerning his next move. God revealed to Jacob the next step in his divine plan as it was needed. God is always there to help us during our crisis moments. During these times we need to learn to stop and listen to what he has to say.

Gen. 31:14-15

Leah and Rachel left their father's home willingly. This is not surprising. We have enough evidence to know that Laban's family was not operating in accordance with God's will. At this point, Jacob's family needed to move on if they were to become the family God intended them to be. Sometimes our home and early family life are sources of pain and confusion. In such cases, it is important for us to surrender the pain and confusion of the past to God in order to build a new life in keeping with his design for the family.

Gen. 31:17-20

Even though God was very active in Jacob's life, the old patterns still persisted. The transformation of Jacob's deceitful nature was an ongoing process. This time he deceived Laban. Jacob's habits and tendencies certainly didn't go away overnight; neither will ours. We need to be aware of our weaknesses and continually look to God for his help.

Gen. 31:49

This verse is often quoted as a sweet benediction, but in actuality, it is a very negative wish that becomes almost a threat. It is as if Laban were saying, "I can't watch you anymore, so when you're out of my sight, I pray that God will keep his eye on you, you rascal!"

Gen. 32:3

Twenty years prior to these events, Jacob had run away from Esau, afraid for his life. Jacob had no way of knowing whether his brother had let go of his old wounds and resentments. Since he did not know, he had to make elaborate preparations for reestablishing contact. Jacob's example in this chapter gives helpful hints to those of us seeking reconciliation with people we have hurt in the past.

Gen. 33:4

Although Esau does seem genuinely delighted to see his long lost brother, we can only speculate about his true feelings. This happy reunion certainly didn't signal the end of the brothers' feud. Conflict between their families continued throughout Old Testament times. The book of Obadiah records the joy that Esau's descendants, the Edomites, expressed over the Israelites' defeat. Obadiah, an Israelite, also joyfully announced the doom of Edom. Even in the New Testament, the hated family of Herod traced its lineage back to Esau. Some conflicts are not easily resolved, but if they are left unresolved, they can become a burden to generations far in the future.

Gen. 34:2

The act of rape is always hideous in itself, but the consequences are usually just as heartbreaking. In this occurrence, rape led to deception and ultimately to murder.

Sinful patterns and the acts that flow out of them feed cycles of deepening destruction and hurt. Someone has to choose to break the cycle and begin the process of spiritual renewal and healing.

Gen. 34:20-31

Vengeance belongs to God, and when an individual takes revenge—no matter how just the cause may be—there usually are serious consequences. Because of their deception and slaughter of the Hivites, Jacob and his family became extremely unpopular with their neighbors. Because they were a small clan at this point, such a situation presented them with grave danger. Revenge is extremely counterproductive. It only breaks down the reconciliation process that is necessary for personal growth and healthy relationships.

Gen. 35:22

The families in the book of Genesis seem to be prone to every kind of human weakness and sin. Deceit and lies are often used for the sake of convenience. Communication between family members is poor. The incidence of incest is high. Here we see that Reuben slept with one of his father's wives. This kind of sexual sin reaps a bitter harvest. Reuben's blessing and inheritance as the firstborn son was forfeited because of this single act of sexual gratification (49:4). Reuben needed to keep the long view in focus. If he had thought about what he stood to lose, he might have withstood the temptation.

Gen. 36:6-8

Esau and his family could not live in the same area as Jacob and his family. For some families, no amount of room is enough for them to live together. The reconciliation of these brothers was started, but it seems never to have been completed. We need to expect reconciliation to take time. It doesn't happen with one happy reunion. It needs to be worked out over a period of time, in the everyday situations of life.

Gen. 37:2

Many commentators have noted that nothing bad is ever said about Joseph. That may be true of his adult life, but as a boy he was irritatingly overconfident. Here we see that he was also a tattletale. Joseph's arrogant behavior as a youth, along with his father's favoritism, planted seeds of hatred in his brothers' hearts. Consequently Joseph suffered years of slavery in Egypt. Joseph was certainly more worthy of praise than his brothers, but he can hardly be given perfect marks.

Gen. 37:3

The biblical account does not hide the fact that Joseph was Jacob's favorite son. Joseph had no choice but to accept the blessings of his distinction, along with its accompanying sufferings. It is interesting to note that the pattern of parental favoritism did not start with the life of Joseph. It had been played out in the life of his father Jacob and his grandfather Isaac as well. It is never healthy for parents to play favorites among their children. It is a pattern that causes untold suffering many generations down the road.

Gen. 37:19-20

The terrible impact of jealousy is portrayed in this passage. The brothers were at the point of planning Joseph's murder. They almost followed through on their plan, but cooler heads prevailed. They ended up selling Joseph into slavery and then lying to their father, Jacob. Here we see the tragic, cumulative effects of the patterns of deceit and favoritism in the family context.

Gen. 37:31-35

All Jacob's life he had manipulated people and circumstances to serve his own purposes. He was a schemer and a trickster. Here the trickster was being tricked once again—by his sons. Again we see a destructive family pattern being passed on to the next generation.

Gen. 38:1-5

We are told that Judah moved from his family home, married a Canaanite girl, and settled down among the Canaanites. Some of Judah's unsavory activities in this chapter seem out of sync with what we might expect of one of Israel's patriarchs. We cannot help but wonder whether some of his behavior was not influenced by the people he was living with. The Canaanites were known for their immoral lifestyle. For us to progress spiritually we need to spend time with people who will encourage us to live in a way that agrees with God's will for our lives. We may also need to give up the relationships that lead us into destructive activities.

Gen. 38:1-30

Judah's more sensational sin of propositioning a prostitute often blinds readers to his primary failure. According to the laws practiced at the time, if a husband died before fathering a son, his family was responsible for providing his widow with a husband. This was Judah's responsibility, but when his second son died soon after marrying Tamar, Judah was understandably shaken and delayed giving her his third son. It seems that Judah was hoping he would never be called upon to carry out his duty. His attitude didn't solve the problem but only led to the sordid events that followed. It is easy for us to act like Judah, ignoring our problems, refusing to see the truth, or refusing to accept responsibility for our lives, blaming our problems on something or someone else. But a key to solving any problem is admitting we have it. Then we can take responsible steps to solve it.

Gen. 38:12-26

When Judah failed to deal with Tamar in a responsible way, Tamar decided to take action. And though what she did was not exemplary, she wisely confronted Judah in a way that caught his attention without alienating him. Like Tamar, we should strive to resolve our conflicts with others rather than let our pain simply fester within us.

Gen. 39:2

God blessed Joseph even in the worst of circumstances. Even as a slave in a strange household in a foreign land, God made Joseph a success. It should not be inferred that God will also make us successful. Rather, our chief goal should be to follow Joseph's example of being faithful to God's plan, no matter what the consequences.

Gen. 39:7-18

Joseph withstood the temptation of Potiphar's wife even though he was far from home and the temptation continued day after day. This was not a onetime crisis but a constant, wearing temptation. How did he stand up to it? Two things seem to have helped: Joseph's respect for his master and, even more important, Joseph's respect for God. As we draw closer to God, we will begin to sense his presence in our life. Doing something that runs counter to his plan will cause us pain. Walking close to God will provide us with added protection against the temptations we face.

Gen. 39:19-20

Good guys often appear to finish last—the innocent seem to suffer. Here it looks as if Joseph's faithfulness to God was rewarded with years in prison. This may have discouraged Joseph, but it didn't stop him. Even in prison he continued living according to God's plan. In the end, after a number of setbacks, he was rewarded. We may need to look past present difficult circumstances to see that God has a purpose in our suffering. It may be an important part of our preparation for future work God has for us.

Gen. 39:19-23

God was with Joseph even in prison. We are told that he prospered in everything he did. And through all his trials, Joseph remained faithful to God. It would have been easy for him to forget God's promises and just give up. When we forget God's promises, we may start to blame others and ignore our ability to act. We need to stop blaming and start working, doing our best in the situations in which God places us.

Gen. 40:1-8

Here we see how Joseph's consistency gained the respect and trust of his jailer and his fellow prisoners. One can imagine that the normal prisoner then, as now, was a pretty sullen character. This makes Joseph's acceptance by them even more significant. Joseph recognized that he could do nothing to change his circumstances, so he sought God and surrendered to him in the midst of them.

Gen. 40:23

After prophesying the cupbearer's release, Joseph must have felt disappointed when he was forgotten. But here again, Joseph refused to give in to despair. He didn't poison his life by complaining and assigning blame. He didn't give up and grow bitter. Instead, he continued to live a life of faithfulness to God, trusting God to fulfill his plans.

Gen. 41:14

At last Joseph was given the opportunity for freedom. God's perfect time had come. We may get discouraged by our slow progress, but we need to faithfully follow God the best we can. Someday we may find we are truly free of the things that now bind us. If we experience such deliverance, we can then rejoice. However, we may have to depend on God day by day to help us say no to things that would detour us from God's will. If we find ourselves in this situation, we can still rejoice, knowing that through it all we are building a deeper relationship with God.

Gen. 41:38-40

The primary quality about Joseph that Pharaoh mentioned was his dependence on God. He ignored the fact that Joseph had a questionable past, colored by rumors and a long prison term. Pharaoh could see that God's Spirit was in Joseph, making him a very wise young man. This more than made up for any questions Pharaoh might have had about Joseph's past. So Pharaoh promoted Joseph to be the prime minister of Egypt! We may believe that our past has destroyed any hope of a prosperous future. But when we give ourselves to God, asking for his help, no past is too terrible or dark to overcome.

Gen. 42:7-20

When Joseph recognized his brothers, he took some time to test them. He wanted to discover something of their attitudes before he revealed himself to them. One key to spiritual renewal is to work toward reconciliation with the important people in our lives. We need wisdom from God to do this in a way that will bring healing to both ourselves and the people close to us. Joseph didn't instantly jump back into a relationship with his brothers. He took the time he needed to do it in a wise way.

Gen. 42:21-22

After many years Joseph's brothers were still haunted by their guilty consciences. They had sold their brother into Egypt with no plans of ever seeing him again—and no hope of reconciliation or forgiveness. We may wonder how many times during those years Reuben said, "I told you so." It is clear that this period had been one of misery for the brothers. Another key to spiritual growth is seeking reconciliation with those we have wronged. Only then can we experience the healing we need to live a healthy and peaceful life.

Gen. 42:36

How bitter with grief Jacob had become! He had harbored years of resentment and sadness. His relationship with his sons was built on dishonesty. Walls of lies had been built up—layer upon layer. This separated Jacob from close fellowship with his family. He was all alone in his grief, trapped by the fear that he might lose yet another son. Yet even though Jacob was alone in his pain, he was not helpless. God had a plan for his redemption. He would soon be set free from many years of bitterness and grief.

Gen. 44:18-34

Judah stepped forward to plead for Benjamin's freedom, fearing what his enslavement would do to Jacob, their father. Many years earlier, the brothers had chosen to sell Joseph into slavery, just because of personal hatred. This had caused their father deep pain. But here, Judah was willing to put himself on the line for his grieving father. Judah and his brothers had grown up a great deal over the years. They had learned from their past mistakes and proved to Joseph that they were ready for reconciliation with their long lost brother.

Gen. 45:1-3

Joseph finally revealed his identity to his brothers. For him it was a beautiful reunion because he had experienced healing by walking with God. But for his brothers, excluding Benjamin, hidden guilt had burdened them for a long time. They were terrified when they recognized Joseph. It is frightening to expose long-hidden guilt to the light, but that is the only road to reconciliation and peace.

Gen. 45:3-7

Joseph told his brothers not to be angry at themselves for the mistakes they had made in the past. It was now time to rejoice in the present! This was true forgiveness. Joseph was able to see how God had used their mistake to save thousands of lives, including their own. God often turns past disasters into opportunities for great success. When we begin to see God working in our lives, we will be better able to forgive the people who have wronged us in the past. And if we can see how God has turned around the lives of people we have wronged, we will begin to understand how much God wants our guilt removed and our relationships reconciled.

Gen. 45:24

Joseph knew his brothers so well; he knew they were inclined to argue. Even though Joseph's brothers had matured a great deal since he had last seen them, they still had a long way to go. Deeply ingrained attitudes and habits are hard to get rid of. It all takes time. Joseph's parting shot here shows that he had a sense of humor. But it also reveals that he accepted his brothers as they were, arguments and all.

Gen. 46:1-4

Some may think it was wrong for the Hebrews to leave the Promised Land, but God's promise to Jacob here shows that God approved of this family reunion in Egypt. When our life is subject to God's authority, where and when we go are up to him. God often uses surprising means to work his will. Notice that God brought Jacob and his family to Egypt for their preservation and growth.

Gen. 46:29

God approves of the outward expression of emotion. He tells us to grieve and mourn, releasing all the pain that wells up within us. It is an honest display of feelings that draws us closer to others. To hide our feelings is a form of dishonesty. We need to learn to show our feelings in wise and loving ways. Our culture urges people to hide their feelings; we are expected to be stoic, even in times of extreme sorrow or joy. Jacob and Joseph embraced and wept a long while, openly expressing their emotions for all to see.

Gen. 48:1-9

Before blessing his grandsons, Ephraim and Manasseh, Jacob recalled the blessings that God had bestowed upon him. We know that the sins and failures of parents are often passed on to succeeding generations. But blessings are passed on as well. Abraham had established a relationship with God that he modeled before Isaac, which Isaac then passed on to Jacob, and then to the succeeding generation. Let us establish the kind of relationship with God that will endure in the generations that follow. That way we will be able to bless our children with the blessings God has given us.

Gen. 49:5-7

Simeon and Levi were characterized by violent tempers, and the history of these brothers in Genesis corroborates Jacob's assessment. After their sister Dinah was raped, they took revenge by deceiving and slaughtering all the men of the city (34:1-31). This tendency needed to be curbed. Many years later, however, when God called out for people to stand on his side, the Levites stood forth and vigorously defended God's cause (see Exodus 32:25-29). As a result, they were chosen as God's priests in Israel. Let us look to God to transform our weaknesses into strengths, just as he did with the descendants of Levi.

Gen. 49:13-27

The remarks by Jacob concerning each of his sons seem very harsh, but the information he shared, including a confession of his own failure as a father, should have given helpful direction to each of them. We have a lot to learn from our parents, but often they aren't willing to be honest with us. Or if they are, we aren't really ready to listen. We need to learn both to speak honestly and to listen with respect.

Gen. 50:15-21

When Jacob died, Joseph's brothers feared that he would take revenge for their past differences. They thought Joseph had spared them only for the sake of their father. Here they discovered that Joseph's forgiveness was complete, with no ulterior motives. Joseph had already granted his brothers complete forgiveness; his brothers couldn't believe it and thus had not yet received it. They had needlessly lived in fear of a coming punishment. God hands us forgiveness that is just as complete, but we need to believe it, and then receive it. Only then can we experience the freedom he offers.

Gen. 50:15-21

Here a clear message comes across: Man proposes, but God disposes. Joseph's brothers intended their actions toward Joseph for evil, but God turned those actions into good. It is wonderful that God can redeem our lives, transforming our mistakes and failures into the means for accomplishing his gracious purposes.

Exod. 1:8-12

The Israelites had not yet come to the point of admitting their helplessness. Even though they were being oppressed with increasing severity, they continued to rise to the occasion. This did not please the persecuting Egyptians. They feared that Israel would rise up against them, and in the event of war, they might join Egypt's enemies or even leave the country (1:9-10). It was not until the Israelites asked God for help that he responded with deliverance.

Exod. 1:18-21

In the short term, the Hebrew midwives had to overcome their fears of the Egyptian king. It must have been terrifying to face such a cruel and powerful person, not knowing how he would respond. Their wisdom not only allowed Israel to continue growing (1:20), but the midwives were also blessed by God with families of their own. They destroyed any hope of reward from the king, but God's reward for their patience was worth waiting for.

Exod. 1:22-2:8

Moses' mother had a problem: She knew that she couldn't hide her beloved baby from the Egyptians indefinitely. So she displayed remarkable wisdom and faith by literally obeying Pharaoh's command to put her son into the Nile River (1:22; 2:3). But she did it in a way that preserved his life, trusting God to look after him. We don't know whether Moses' mother hoped that Pharaoh's daughter would find the baby. But after doing all she could for her son, she was willing to leave him in God's hands.

Exod. 2:8-10

As we see in this passage, God graciously allowed Moses to be raised by his real mother. Not only did that allow for his normal, healthy development, but it also gave Moses a true understanding of who he was—a Hebrew. Apparently the education he received in the Egyptian royal court never altered Moses' sense of identity with his people. As he grew to manhood, his desire to promote their freedom figured prominently.

Exod. 2:11-14

Moses undoubtedly thought that he was helping his fellow Hebrew when he killed this Egyptian taskmaster. However, covering up his violent deed did not help the situation. He couldn't bury his mistake in the sand, or in the past, so as to keep it from being known and rising to haunt him. He needed to responsibly and honestly face what he had done. When we hide our mistakes, they have a way of coming back to haunt us. It is best to face them right away so we can put them to rest, once and for all.

Exod. 2:23-25

When Israel finally accepted the reality of their desperate situation, they confessed their need, sought God, and begged him to deliver them from their slavery. But God's deliverance didn't come right away. They had to wait patiently for God to change their dismal situation. We need to recognize that we need God's help and ask him to help us, but in doing so, we must recognize that we are also giving up control. We need to be willing to let God do things his way and according to his timing.

Exod. 3:10-11

Moses felt totally unqualified to fill the role God was commanding him to assume. He was well educated; he knew the ways of the royal court of Egypt (2:10); he also had great leadership ability, which he would demonstrate for the next forty years. These qualities made him the best man for the job. But Moses was unable to see or accept this reality. He didn't have an accurate sense of who he was. Perhaps he saw himself as a fugitive murderer, worthy of no task greater than shepherding his father-in-law's livestock. Often our past mistakes blind us to our present gifts. We need to see ourselves as God sees us and then respond accordingly.

Exod. 3:16-22

God called Moses to speak to the elders of Israel regarding the new life awaiting them in the Promised Land (Genesis 15:18-21). Along with the hope of entering such wonderful new territory, however, was the reality of dealing with the king of Egypt. The promise was wonderful, but the difficulty of the process could not be underestimated. The process of receiving God's promises can be difficult, but no matter what the pain, it will be worth it if we reach the promise of freedom and blessing.

Exod. 4:1-9

Here we see the series of miracles that God gave to Moses and the Israelites to bolster their faith in Moses' message and mission. God does not normally use such wondrous signs to strengthen our faith, but he has performed one miracle that should give us all the encouragement we need. He raised Jesus Christ from the dead, showing that he is no slave to the destruction of sin and death (1 Corinthians 15:1-6). This miracle should give all of us faith in God's promises and hope in the Good News he offers.

Exod. 4:10-12

Moses may have had a speech impediment, but that wasn't a legitimate excuse for not following God's plan. He didn't have an accurate perception of who he could become with God's help. While Moses was engaging in a kind of self-examination, he was doing so with a negative, fearful attitude. He was not yet willing to be changed by God. Our weaknesses should never be an excuse to avoid spiritual renewal. With God's help, anything is possible. We need to realize that God can capitalize on our strengths, helping us reach our full potential.

Exod. 4:13-17

Moses tried desperately to escape God's call for his life. He didn't want to go back to Egypt as God's spokesman. Apparently he was afraid to face the huge responsibility that this entailed. But God held Moses accountable to his divine plan. He laid out for Moses exactly how the mission in Egypt would be accomplished, despite Moses' presumed handicap.

God has a special plan for each of us. If we follow him, he will bring it to pass no matter what our weaknesses are.

Exod. 4:29–5:3

Moses and Aaron approached the elders of Israel with God's message. This alone took a great deal of courage, but by taking the chance, they were able to encourage the elders to seek freedom from the Egyptians. In an even greater step of courage, they confronted Pharaoh, demanding that things be set straight. God's word to Moses and Aaron gave them the courage to act on behalf of others. Their courage also sparked courage in others, which in turn helped them take another step. Courage begets courage. Our own spiritual renewal, if properly shared, will inspire others to move forward as well. This, in turn, will strengthen us to move ahead even further.

Exod. 5:3-9

Pharaoh refused to seek God and surrender to him. He refused to see the truth. He had no respect for the law of God or the people of God. He failed to respond properly when he was honestly confronted about the way he was treating the Israelites. He became upset when Moses sought freedom for God's people. Instead of examining himself, Pharaoh then accused the Israelites of being lazy and demanded even more from them. We can learn from Pharaoh's bad example. When we are confronted with our sin, we must honestly assess our spiritual state and ask God to change us. Becoming hardhearted and choosing to blame others will only make things worse.

Exod. 5:10-21

The Israelite foremen needed to understand how difficult the process toward their freedom would be. They were deeply discouraged by Pharaoh's additional demands because they had unrealistic hopes of an immediate and painless deliverance. They also became disillusioned about the leadership abilities of Moses and Aaron. They needed wisdom to see their troubles from a long-term perspective. These were only the first steps on the road to freedom—a road which proved long and difficult. There are few, if any, immediate and painless paths to freedom. If we realize this, we will find the difficulties we face less discouraging.

Exod. 5:22-23

Moses prayed to God with perplexed honesty. He faced a real problem. In following God's plan for freeing Israel, the people were encountering increased suffering. Moses, however, did not yet realize that God was preparing to force Pharaoh to let Israel go. God had not failed the test of trustworthiness. Freedom is often a lengthy process, and we need to recognize this as we seek spiritual growth. If we do, we will be less likely to be discouraged by the obstacles we face along the way.

Exod. 6:8-13

When we fail to realize how difficult the process toward freedom can be, it is all too easy to become discouraged and give up. After suffering a number of setbacks, the Israelites were ready to give up. At such times, patience and perseverance are absolutely essential. We also need to remember that difficulties and failures are often the backdoor to ultimate success.

Exod. 6:14-27

To a great extent, Moses and Aaron were the product of their family heritage, sketched briefly in the genealogy included here (6:14-25). Now they faced difficult opposition to their goal of freeing the Israelites. But out of their past came signs of hope, strengthening their courage to continue their quest for freedom. For example, God had promised Abraham and his descendants a land of their own, free from oppression. God's promises from the past gave Moses and Aaron the encouragement they needed to continue their fight for freedom. God's promises can do the same for us today.

Exod. 6:28-30

Once again we are reminded of God's insistence that Moses respond in faith, despite his fears and his perceived speech problem (6:30; see 4:10; 6:12). In the process of the Exodus, God repeatedly challenged Moses' personal insecurities and his negative, self-defeating attitudes by reminding Moses of God's name and his miraculous power. Faith in a trustworthy God was the solution to this problem. Trusting God with our problems and insecurities and releasing them to him is a key to spiritual growth.

Exod. 7:1-5

Nowhere is the stubbornness of Pharaoh's heart sketched more vividly. Moses and Aaron were fully involved in the process of confronting this unyielding persecutor. And at this point, their task of freeing the people must have seemed impossible. But God had assured them that their goal of freedom would be reached by his sovereign power. We may be battling a powerful, unreasonable enemy, internally or externally. But when God desires something to happen, it will happen, regardless of the opposition.

Exod. 7:7

Notice that Aaron is the older son, but God called Moses to be the primary leader. This cut across the grain of cultural expectation. The firstborn was always considered the first in line for a position of power or influence. But God often chose unlikely people to accomplish his plans. Consider also Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Joseph, Gideon, and David. None of them was a firstborn son, but all were given a significant part to play in God's plan. God often does things that surprise us; he uses unlikely people. No matter what our past, each of us has a special place in his plan.

Exod. 7:14–8:19

The first cycle of three plagues—blood (7:14-24), frogs (8:1-15), and gnats (8:16-19)—as intense as it was, did not turn Pharaoh from his cruel behavior. He still continued in his stubbornness. At the height of the frog plague, he nearly relented, asking Moses and Aaron to plead with God on his behalf (8:8-13). However, when things let up momentarily, he hardened his heart again (8:15). We must be careful to persevere to the end, not getting overconfident when things start to go well. We must realize our constant need for God, or we are doomed to failure in the long-term process toward freedom.

Exod. 8:20–9:12

The second cycle of three plagues—flies (8:20-32), death of Egyptian livestock (9:1-7), and boils (9:8-12)—is similarly resisted by Pharaoh. However, during the detestable onslaught of flies, Pharaoh tried to bargain with Moses and God. He agreed to allow Israel to offer sacrifices to God, first in Egypt and then a short distance away in the wilderness. But he made this concession on the condition that Moses pray to God on his behalf to stop the plague (8:25-28). Moses did pray, but Pharaoh went back on his word, hardening his heart (8:29-32). Pharaoh failed on two counts. First, he tried to bargain with God to get what he wanted. God is more than willing to give us what is best for us, but we must accept his terms, not ours. Second, Pharaoh failed to keep his word with God. This could only lead to continued disaster.

Exod. 9:13-35

During the devastating plague of hail, Pharaoh went so far as to admit that he and his people had sinned and that God was righteous (9:27-28). But after Moses prayed to God and the plagues had halted, Pharaoh and the Egyptian officials again hardened their hearts. Pharaoh still was not willing to face the reality of God's sovereign power, even though he had been clearly convicted of his rebellion. When we started seeking God, we may have recognized that our circumstances were too much for us. But then we may have reverted to self-sufficiency as we saw improvement. When we begin to make progress, we must remember to continually seek God and surrender to him. If we fail to depend wholeheartedly on God's power, we will be sure to fail once again.

Exod. 10:2

God's power over the Egyptians was to be celebrated by each successive generation of Israelites. The faith and spirit of God's people who experienced the Exodus would bolster the faith of their descendants, giving them the courage to conquer enemies in the future. God's powerful acts for his people can also give us hope as we face problems too big for us. And remember, the victories we win with God's help will influence and strengthen our descendants far into the future.

Exod. 10:1-20

During the plague of locusts, Pharaoh again attempted to bargain with God. He first consented to let only the men go out from Egypt to worship God (10:10-11), retaining the women and children as hostages. But the severity of the locust plague caused him to admit his sin and ask Moses to intercede before God (10:12-19). In the end, however, Pharaoh's heart was again hardened (10:20), and he still refused to let them leave. His continued stubbornness led him further and further away from obedience to God's will.

Exod. 10:21-29

After three days of darkness, Pharaoh agreed to let all the Israelites leave Egypt to worship God, but he refused to let them take their livestock (10:24). While this was a further concession on Pharaoh's part, it still was far from wholehearted repentance. Further perseverance by Moses only incited Pharaoh to escalate the confrontation with dangerous threats (10:24-28). Our spiritual renewal is dependent on admitting the reality of our problems and areas of sin in our lives. If we cannot admit the problems we face, we can hardly ask God to help us with them.

Exod. 11:1-3

People look at life differently depending on their previous experience. While Pharaoh obviously hated and feared Moses and the Israelites, the majority of Egypt's leaders and populace did not share his feelings because God had caused the Egyptians to look favorably on the Israelites (11:2-3). If Moses assumed that everyone was against him just because of Pharaoh's hatred, he would not have seen the reality of the situation. We are better able to accurately understand the realities we face if we take into account the way our experience influences our perception.

Exod. 11:4-8

Moses warned Pharaoh of the final plague—the death of the firstborn. This plague would touch people from all levels of Egyptian society, and their livestock as well. In ancient Egypt the role of the firstborn son was very important. And the firstborn sons affected by this plague included Pharaoh's son, who was heir to the Egyptian throne. It was this plague that finally caused Pharaoh to surrender to God—at least temporarily. It took this severe loss to get the attention of his hard heart. Let us learn from Pharaoh’s mistake to seek God and surrender to him while there is still hope. Continued resistance to God will only lead to suffering.

Exod. 12:1-2

The event of Israel’s exodus from Egypt marked a turning point for Israel. God’s people were leaving their lives of slavery and gaining new lives of responsibility and freedom. It is possible to build a new life that is so markedly different that we can declare a new phase or season of life. Such a “declaration of newness” can provide a new sense of identity and can be a healthy boundary line, setting us apart from our past failures. At this point in their history the Israelites were declaring such a boundary line—a turning point. We may find it helpful to do the same thing, reinforcing the process of spiritual renewal in our lives.

Exod. 12:3-13

Here we see that those who trusted God’s promise and put the sacrificial blood over their doors were spared the loss of their firstborn sons. Similarly, we who have faith in the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the ultimate Passover Lamb (1 Corinthians 5:7), are spared from eternal death (John 3:16). We also become brand-new people in Christ (2 Corinthians 5:17). God initiates and maintains the necessary spiritual and emotional development in our lives if we are willing to trust him to do it.

Exod. 12:14-16

The Passover was to become an occasion of celebration for future generations of Israel. It would be a time to remember their deliverance from slavery. Part of building a new life involves replacing old unhealthy thoughts and actions with healthy new ones. This may include taking on new traditions that celebrate our freedom from past problems. These should emphasize the positive differences between our old existence and the healthy freedom we experience in our new life.

Exod. 12:24-27

Children are usually curious as to why their parents believe and do as they do. They are quick to pick up on halfhearted or hypocritical actions. But they are also quick to learn when positive lessons and values are modeled and taught. The Israelites were to teach their children important lessons from the past, recalling God's great victories for their ancestors. This would then provide the groundwork for their faith in God, enabling them to step forward into life with a healthy confidence. We should remember that much of the present and future grows out of the past. Let us capitalize on the good things in the past to strengthen our prospects for the future.

Exod. 12:28-51

After this final plague, the Israelites were not just allowed to leave; they were commanded to get out! In the pain and shock of his son's death, Pharaoh didn't attach any conditions to the Israelites' Exodus. He only asked for Moses' blessing (12:32). God had worked out the timing and all the details necessary for the Exodus to take place. Similarly, the all-knowing and all-powerful God lays out the path to freedom for those committed to him.

Exod. 13:1-2, 11-16

The consecration of the firstborn sons of Israel points to the important position of the firstborn in family dynamics (see also 22:29-30). Since God had spared the lives of the firstborn of Israel during the Passover, in a very real sense they all belonged to him. As a result, the Israelites had to sacrifice a lamb to buy their firstborn sons back from God. All of our children should be viewed as being “on loan” from God. The public dedication of our children to God is a helpful tradition reminding us of this fact.

Exod. 13:17-18

Swinging southeast to the Red Sea was not the fastest route from Egypt to the Promised Land, but it was the route that God chose for the Israelites to follow. The shortest route between two points is not always the best. God’s will often calls us to take the more scenic routes. These, though longer and sometimes harder, are often God’s means for accomplishing his will. In the Israelites’ case, they were given the opportunity to see God overcome a huge obstacle—the Red Sea. This gave them additional fuel for their faith, building their courage for the journey ahead. It also helped them avoid dangers in the land of the Philistines that they were not yet prepared to face.

Exod. 13:19

Here we see that Joseph's bones made the journey to the Promised Land. Many years earlier Joseph had made his descendants promise that they would bring his body with them (Genesis 50:24-26). Joseph believed God's promise to Abraham that someday Canaan would belong to his descendants. Joseph was a godly example to his descendants, and here we see that he was remembered four hundred years after his death. We should accept the truth about our families—the good things should be remembered and treasured, even as the bad ones must be faced, dealt with, and used to teach us how to redirect our course.

Exod. 13:21-22

God guided his people out of slavery to a new life of freedom and responsibility by his visible presence in the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire. He led them to reclaim the promises he had given their ancestor Abraham centuries earlier. When we are committed to God, we, too, can count on his leading. He has sent his Holy Spirit to lead us (John 16:7-15) and has promised to never fail or abandon us (Hebrews 13:5).

Exod. 14:1-9

The Israelites were between a rock and a hard place—the Red Sea on one side and the Egyptian army on the other. And though the Israelites had already seen God do great miracles in Egypt (7:1-12:51), it must have been hard for them to wait and see how God would save them from this ominous situation. Our situations may seem just as hopeless, but nothing is a hopeless dead end for God. He will always provide a door leading to the next step in his plan.

Exod. 14:10-12

In all their fear the Israelites cried out to God for help. Their terrified complaints show that their faith in God was limited. But at least they saw their need for God in the situation and looked to him for help. As a result, their discouragement and fear were soon turned into amazement and rejoicing (14:21–15:21).

Exod. 14:13-31

Here we see a great miracle take place! God opened up a dry path through the Red Sea for the people to cross. Notice that even with this amazing miracle the Israelites still had to respond in faith. They still had to walk between the massive walls of water that could have become a tidal wave at any moment. These steps of faith required commitment to God, and this surely resulted in the growth of the Israelites' faith. The miracles that God works in our lives also require that we respond in faith, stepping out to receive all the blessings he desires for us.

Exod. 15:1-21

Israel's escape through the Red Sea took a mighty miracle from God and an act of faith by the Israelites. Often the road to victory is not easy, but it is still worth it. There will be something to rejoice about in the end if we depend on God to help us through. And when we have gained the victory, we need to stand up, sing, and rejoice, remembering God's miracles on our behalf.

Exod. 15:22-27

Those of us just beginning the process of spiritual renewal often have short memories. We quickly forget the important victories that have brought us to our present state of freedom. We also may tend to fall back into reacting to crises as we did in the past, before we began to seek God. Despite God's recent victories on the Israelites' behalf, they still became desperate when their water ran out. And this happened only a few days after the miracle at the Red Sea! They were still unwilling, or unable, to exercise faith in God. Even so, God came through with an immediate, abundant provision for their need (see Ephesians 3:20).

Exod. 16:1-36

Next to our need for water (15:22-27), our need for food is the most critical. Again the Israelites failed to believe that God would meet their needs. They lacked faith in God's power and still didn't understand their privileges as God's people. But God faithfully provided for them anyway, and their faith was further strengthened. This example of God's gracious provision should encourage us to seek help during the wilderness periods of our own lives.

Exod. 17:1-7

As we undergo the process of spiritual renewal, we may be hindered repeatedly by the same old mistakes. We have certain weaknesses that haunt us time and again. The Israelites displayed this same tendency. They rebelled against Moses' leadership just because of a short-term lack of water (see 15:22-27). To make this place a monument to the people's lack of faith, Moses named it Massah (meaning "the place of testing") and Meribah (meaning "the place of arguing"). These names would remind the people of their past mistakes and, hopefully, encourage them to be wiser the next time. We need to be reminded of our past mistakes from time to time in order to avoid them in the future.

Exod. 17:8-16

The people had just put God on trial, testing him and wondering whether he was with them (17:7). In response, God overwhelmed the Amalekite forces in battle. In so doing he employed an instructive visual aid. Moses stood upon a hill in full view of the people and the battlefield. When his hands were raised, the Israelite army prevailed. The raised hands did not speak of the power of Moses but rather of the power of God. Through such incidents, Israel was to learn that their freedom was dependent on their faith in God, not on their own strength.

Exod. 18:13-26

This episode reveals that Moses had a difficult time accepting his limitations and living a balanced life. Jethro gave Moses some wise and creative advice, helping him to protect himself from the extensive demands of the people. But even this good advice did not solve this problem for Moses once and for all. His tendency to assume that God expected him to do everything shows up later on in a slightly different way (Numbers 11:10-17). There Moses appears near exhaustion, just as Jethro had predicted (Exodus 18:17-18). We need to accept our limitations and set appropriate boundaries in our own lives, maximizing the use of the time and energy we have while also protecting ourselves from exhaustion.

Exod. 19:2-6

Israel's new sense of identity and ability was to be founded upon her relationship with God. The Israelites had suffered under Egyptian bondage. Their sense of identity had been defined by that terrible experience. God had graciously delivered them and had brought them to himself. Now the Lord called the people of Israel to be a kingdom of priests and his holy nation (19:6). They were no longer a nation of slaves. As we progress spiritually, we also need to see ourselves as people loved and blessed by God, not as slaves to sins, passions, and unwholesome desires.

Exod. 19:12-23

Here we see that God set limits or boundaries beyond which the people of Israel, or even their livestock, were not to step. There was mortal danger for those who overstepped God's boundaries. The unauthorized approach into God's holy presence meant certain death. We, too, must learn to respect the limits placed upon us by God's Word. We only invite painful consequences when we ignore them.

Exod. 20:1-11

The first four of the Ten Commandments provided the Israelites with a few foundational principles to govern their relationship with God. They were not to worship any other gods (20:3), make idols of any kind (20:4-6), misuse God's name (20:7), or violate God's Sabbath day of rest (20:8-11). Each of these principles represents boundaries that God had set to define his relationship with his people. Jesus later summed up this vertical relationship as the greatest commandment: "Love the LORD your God with all your heart, all your soul, and all your mind" (Matthew 22:36-38). Loving God includes living out a consistent faith and commitment to him.

Exod. 20:12-17

The final six of the Ten Commandments deal with principles that define boundaries for healthy human relationships. Only the command to honor our parents (20:12; see also Ephesians 6:1-3) is stated positively. The other five are negative: Do not murder (Exodus 20:13), do not commit adultery (20:14), do not steal (20:15), do not lie (20:16), and do not covet anything belonging to your neighbor (20:17). Jesus summed up these human relational boundaries like this: "Love your neighbor as yourself" (Matthew 22:39). This great commandment assumes that we have cultivated a healthy self-respect and follow it up with loving actions that respect the boundaries of others.

Exod. 20:18-20

Here we see the people of Israel as they shook with fear before God's holy presence. Fear is an emotion that can be either healthy or unhealthy. When we fear danger or the consequences of inappropriate actions, it is a helpful guide.

But when fear is constant or overwhelming and not connected to reality, it is unhealthy. The fear of God can be defined as thoughtful reverence for God; it is certainly a healthy emotion, based on the reality of God's holiness. Fear of God should result in a vibrant faith and motivate us to act according to God's plan for our lives.

Exod. 21:2-11

God showed concern for people in bondage and granted them a means of gaining their freedom. But as with any situation involving a network of relationships, there were possible complications. Some people may have been affected adversely by the freeing of a slave and set out to stop the process. And when slaves were freed, they needed to learn some difficult lessons about living responsibly without a master to direct their behavior. These same truths apply as we enter a season of spiritual renewal. Some of the people close to us may stand against us because they benefit somehow from our bondage. Such obstacles must be overcome. We also need to learn to live responsibly and unselfishly as we begin our lives of freedom.

Exod. 21:5-6

God offered each slave the option of becoming a slave for life. This idea of becoming a slave for life by personal choice was used in the New Testament to illustrate the commitment we should have to Jesus Christ (Philippians 1:1). Being a slave to a loving and gracious master is a wonderful thing. It has been said that we are all slaves to something—our passions, material things, alcohol, drugs, the expectations of others, or any number of things. But none of these masters is kind. Only God truly loves his servants. He is the only Master worthy of our voluntary, lifelong devotion and service.

Exod. 21:12-27

These laws deal with the consequences of inappropriate behavior. Notice that compensation for wrong behavior is emphasized, making it clear that God holds us accountable for our actions. These laws reveal God's instructions for maintaining an orderly, healthy society when proper boundaries have been overstepped. They safeguard human relationships and personal identities while also recognizing the worth of life and property.

Exod. 21:28-36

According to this passage, we are not only accountable for our own actions but also for everything we own. For example, the Israelites were required to control their animals so they couldn't damage the property of others. Even if the owners were not directly involved in an incident, they were still held accountable for the actions of their livestock or members of their household. This kind of mature accountability serves as the basis for a just and responsible society.

Exod. 21:32

Thirty pieces of silver was likely the standard or average price for a slave in the ancient Near East. Yet as much as this may have been worth, it could not compare to the true value of a human life created in God's image (Genesis 1:26-27). Oppressed people are often bound by a poor self-image. It would have been of interest to all slaves at this ancient time to learn that the Son of God would someday be betrayed for thirty pieces of silver (Matthew 26:15). He submitted to such humiliation so that he could heal us from our sinful past, breaking the bonds of our sin. He came to set us free, buying us back with his very life.

Exod. 22:1-15

These regulations concerning restitution for property losses are related to the issues of personal boundaries and accountability. Personal boundaries and property should always be respected, and restitution should be made when such boundaries are violated or property is destroyed. Accountability for actions that violate others is an important part of God's plan for society.

Exod. 22:16-28

There are certain kinds of behavior that are abominable to God and brutally inhumane. God has set clear boundaries in such cases and demands our accountability to them. The apostle Paul implied that such behavior, which is totally devoid of faith and commitment to God, is not only self-destructive but also erodes the very fabric of society (Romans 1:18-32).

Exod. 23:1-8

This section is basically an expansion of 20:16, which prohibits false testimony. The truth eventually comes out (see 1 Timothy

5:24-25), so honesty is not only the right policy but also the smart one. Even if someone seems to be getting away with lies for a time, that person must still answer to God (Exodus 23:7). In the end he will be held accountable.

Exod. 23:10-19

God gave instructions concerning Sabbath regulations (see 20:8-11) and annual festivals for several reasons. First, these events were a time for worship, faith, and renewed commitment to God. Second, they were object lessons that pictured important spiritual truths for God's people. Third, they were times for rest; they protected God's people from overwork and imbalance. These events were designed to strengthen the people's health—spiritually, emotionally, physically. We also need regular times of worship, reflection, and rest.

Exod. 23:20-26

God promised the Israelites the protection of his angel and the instructions necessary for living wisely as they journeyed toward the Promised Land. As we enter a new way of life, God does the same for us. He is able to lead and protect us in ways we will never know about. And he has given us his Word, which contains instructions for living according to his plan. If we do as he says and look to him for help, we will experience the fulfillment of his promises.

Exod. 23:32-33

The temptations of life within the Promised Land serve as a vivid illustration of how proper standards and boundaries can be tragically forgotten. The Israelites were warned about the tendency to make a good, clean start but then compromise values and goals. They were warned not to make treaties with the people of the land. They were to push them out, replacing them with communities of their own. It is easy to make a good start but then compromise, allowing certain “little” practices to go unchecked. In the end, these things will spell disaster, eroding the new lives we have started to build.

Exod. 24:1-8

Although Israel’s response to God’s covenant was the same as before (see 19:8), they were now beginning to “count the cost” of their commitment to God. At this point they were called upon to make sacrifices to him. As they saw the animals slaughtered and heard their cries, surely they were reminded of how costly their redemption from Egypt had been. It was a clear reminder of God’s gracious forgiveness, for God allowed these animals to die as payment for the people’s infractions of the law. We should feel similar gratitude as we think of Jesus on the cross and realize that we are the ones who should have been there.

Exod. 24:9-11

One of the best ways for us to see ourselves as we actually are is to gain a clear view of God and his glorious person. The person who tends to glorify himself will quickly change his ways if he gets even a glimpse of God’s awesome glory. On the other hand, the person who devalues himself needs to understand that he is made in God’s image (Genesis 1:26-27) and that if he is a Christian, he is destined to be in God's glorious presence forever (Revelation 21–22). One glimpse of God in his glory will remove both our pride and our self-deprecation, allowing us to see the truth about ourselves.

Exod. 25:8-9

When Adam and Eve sinned in the Garden, they created a terrible rift in the relationship between God and the human race. But God has spent the centuries since then reaching out to us, seeking to heal the relationship. God's declaration that he would dwell among the Israelites in a Tabernacle was a step in this process of reconciliation. God wanted to live among his people. The details of the pattern he laid out also show that God clearly sets boundaries within which he relates to his people. Later, when Jesus Christ became a man, God's personal presence among the human race represented an even more personal relationship with us (John 1:14). God is in the business of reconciliation.

Exod. 27:20-21

God's command to keep the lamps burning throughout the hours of darkness indicates that God is a God of light (see 1 John 1:5). Under cover of darkness, it is difficult to judge reality and easier to hide the truth. God is not a God of darkness. He wants his people to be transparent, having integrity and faith. He wants them to be obedient to his plan for living. That is what it means to live in the light of God's presence as Christ does (1 John 1:7).

Exod. 28:29-32

The priest's breastplate was inscribed with the names of Israel's tribes. This showed that he represented the nation and was spiritually responsible for the people. The Urim and Thummim were a means of determining the will of God in key decisions. Similarly, those in positions of responsibility must seriously and consistently seek God's will as they make decisions, or be accountable for acting otherwise.

Exod. 29:1-46

This chapter constantly reiterates the need for consecration in a number of ways. To consecrate means to set apart, whether it be a person or an object. It is only when there is proper consecration that the closest relationship between our holy God and sinful people is possible. In the New Testament, those who have faith in Christ are called saints. This means that they are set apart; they are "holy ones." As Christians, all of us have been set apart by God to live holy lives.

Exod. 30:1-10

As graphic and compelling as the sacrificial system was, it still could provide only temporary atonement and forgiveness. While these sacrifices and offerings served as beautiful pictures of the final sacrifice of Christ (John 1:29), they could not provide permanent forgiveness. Only by the grace of God is such forgiveness possible.

Exod. 31:12-17

Keeping the weekly Sabbath was to become a regular rhythm in the lives of the Israelites. This day was set apart for God as a day of special worship, and for the people as a day of rest. In modern society, the weekend is often considered a time to get away from our work. But we often fail to set aside a day for God as he intended. As we look forward to Sunday, let us look for ways to make it holy unto God as well as spiritually refreshing for us.

Exod. 32:1-20

Israel shattered the second commandment by making the golden calf. God had clearly said, “You must not make for yourself an idol of any kind” (20:4-6). Weak-kneed Aaron tried to put a good face on this blasphemy, but to no avail. The people’s behavior represented a wholesale turning from their previously professed faith and commitment to God. This incident contains a warning to those who believe they have progressed so far spiritually that they are immune to failure (see 1 John 5:21). No matter how far we have come, we are all prone to the danger of a downfall, especially if we are consumed with pride.

Exod. 32:21-29

Aaron reveals himself to be a “people pleaser.” He caved in to the idolatrous desires of the Israelites in order to avoid confronting them with the sin in their lives. He also displayed a lack of honesty and an unwillingness to face the reality of his actions. To avoid his accountability to God and Moses he made a far-fetched excuse for his behavior (32:22-24). The consequences of Aaron’s failure were terrible, reaching far beyond his personal reprimand. Let us learn from Aaron's mistakes. We must defend and live out God's plan, even when it is unpopular with the crowd. If we don't, the consequences for us and the people around us could be terrible.

Exod. 32:30-35

In the wake of Israel's horrible idolatry, Moses took on the role of a loving father toward them. In seeking atonement and forgiveness for the people's sins, Moses asked God to hold back the terrible consequences; he even suggested that he take the punishment upon himself. It is difficult for many parents and leaders to see that some under their charge must learn responsibility by facing the full consequences of their wrong choices. In this case, God required that these disobedient people suffer the ultimate consequence—death.

Exod. 33:1-6

God's statement to Moses and the people's response to it are instructive. God reassured Israel that he would stand by his covenant commitments. He would give them the Promised Land and protect them through the time of their restoration. However, God became so angry with Israel due to their stubborn disobedience that he was forced to back away so as not to destroy them. After God had expressed his anger with self-control, the people underwent a heart-wrenching self-examination, seeing the truth, confessing their sins, truly mourning, and repenting before God. Even when we have failed miserably, we can be assured that God's promises of reconciliation will stand. All we need to do is go to God openly with our sins, seeking his help to find a new way of life.

Exod. 33:12-23

When Moses asked to experience more of God's comforting presence and see his glory, he was not seeking to glorify himself. It is important for all of us to have a clear vision of God. As we see him more clearly, we better understand who we are—strengths and limitations. This scene shows Moses growing spiritually in a remarkable way. All of us should seek to know God better and to experience his presence in our lives.

Exod. 34:1-4

In spite of the horrible sin that the people of Israel had committed in building the gold calf (see 32:1-35), God was willing to give them another chance to commit themselves to him and obey his covenant. When Moses came down from Mount Sinai the first time, he smashed the tablets inscribed with the Ten Commandments (32:19). Now God displayed his great and undeserved grace (34:6) by rewriting the tablets for his people. Our sins can never be so great that God's forgiveness becomes impossible.

Exod. 34:5-7

When God announced the meaning of his name to Moses, he was explaining who he was. In ancient cultures, the meaning of a person's name was understood to be a window into his or her character, not just a surface title. As we seek God and surrender to him, it is important that we get to know God's character. He is compassionate, gracious, patient, loving, trustworthy, forgiving, and just.

Exod. 34:29-35

Moses' experience in God's presence was a transforming one. God's holy presence was so radiant that it caused Moses' face to glow. The physical glow on his face was only part of the result of drawing so close to God. This experience gave Moses the faith he needed to continue leading the Israelites through the wilderness. Drawing close to God should also provide us with the strength we need to make it through our wilderness experiences.

Exod. 35:4-9, 29

This freewill offering was given by the Israelites to show their commitment to God. Many of the other sacrifices and offerings in the laws of Moses were mandatory. They were required, almost like paying taxes. The freewill offering was completely voluntary and was to be used to build and finance the Tabernacle. All the people joyfully gave and in so doing, selflessly served God and each other.

Exod. 35:30-36:3

People who are greatly gifted need to have a clear sense of their identity. Often such people can be described as either self-glorifying or self-deprecating. Neither is a healthy or accurate self-assessment, and neither is pleasing to God. There should be no sense of superiority or inferiority among God's people since every member plays a unique and important role (1 Corinthians 12:12-27).

Exod. 37:1-9

High expectations are difficult for anyone to cope with, even for people with a great deal of ability. It is quite common for supremely gifted people to never approach their potential because they fear failure. The craftsman Bezalel did not allow the high expectations laid upon him to hinder his work. Because God had filled him with his Spirit and given him unusual skills, he willingly used his gifts to glorify God, not only in building the Tabernacle, but also in teaching others. Bezalel's life is a good example for us to live by today.

Exod. 38:21-31

The dollar value of the gold, silver, bronze, and other materials used to build the Tabernacle would be mind boggling. But the value of the materials used does not reflect empty extravagance or showiness. It only illustrates how precious and invaluable the presence of God really is. We can see here that the people's faith had surpassed the point of hanging on to material things. They were beginning to learn to trust God as they shared the wealth he had given them.

Exod. 39:1-31

The priestly garments were ornate and detailed, in accordance with God's instructions to Moses. The intricate details point to the fact that the priest was to be holy—set apart for God (39:30). The death of Christ made it possible for all believers to be priests (1 Peter 2:9), for we are to be holy and pure, committed to God in everything we do. Like the priestly garments, our actions need to reflect externally what we are on the inside through Christ—holy and set apart.

Exod. 39:33-43

The Tabernacle was completed, following all of God's instructions (39:32, 42-43). It had required a great deal of tedious work, but all of it had been done God's way. This was not mere human perfectionism or a substandard "good enough for God" mentality. Rather, here was the melding of faith, commitment to God, and perseverance. Israel's successful building of the Tabernacle was dependent on their following God's specific instructions. Our spiritual renewal and sustained spiritual growth will be built in the same way.

Exod. 40:1-33

Setting up the Tabernacle began a new life of worship for the Israelites. Undoubtedly, as with any large task, it took a great deal of patience and self-control to finish the job. This required the Israelites to persevere, but it also made the victory celebration and worship all the more joyous. Our spiritual renewal doesn't take place overnight. We must learn to persevere and remain accountable to others to preserve our spiritual gains, but in the end the joyous freedom we experience will be worth it.

Lev. 1:2-3

The offerings in Leviticus 1-3 are voluntary acts of worship, involving the free will of the individual. While God emphasizes the importance of committing our lives to him and provides ways for us to do that, we must choose to act; he does not violate our free will. By actively refusing or passively ignoring a relationship with God, we are choosing life without God's help and hope. The choice is ours!

Lev. 1:3-13

Here we see the first object lesson given to God's people—the burnt offering. By identifying himself with the offering, the person bringing the offering was committing his life to God in a fresh way. In Romans 12:1-2 Paul similarly spoke of presenting our body as a living sacrifice to God. This speaks of surrendering our lives to God and is a key to spiritual renewal. When we seek God and surrender to him, he will change us through his power.

Lev. 1:10-14

Not every Israelite was financially able to bring a large animal sacrifice to God. Here we see that God allowed worshipers to bring smaller offerings (a sheep, goat, dove, or pigeon), as they were able. Joseph and Mary, the parents of Jesus, were evidently quite poor because they offered the smallest of the sacrifices (see Luke 2:24). Compared with other people, we may feel we have very little to offer to God, but he doesn't compare us with others. He simply asks that our worship and commitment to him reflect what he has given to us.

Lev. 2:1, 4, 14

The grain offering was to consist of fine flour or the first of the grain harvest. Just as an animal without defect was required for the other offerings, so the best of one's produce was to be offered here. God was reminding his people that he was worthy of more than just the leftovers—he deserved the best they could offer. God wanted their undivided devotion. We cannot entrust ourselves to God halfheartedly and expect spiritual renewal to occur. We need to surrender ourselves wholeheartedly to God and demonstrate our devotion by the quality of whatever we offer to him.

Lev. 2:1-16

The grain offering (sometimes called the cereal or meal offering) is the only offering described here that does not involve a blood sacrifice. This offering was made up of the most common of daily foods. It symbolized that the offerer had surrendered his whole life to God in recognition of all that God had provided. The process of spiritual renewal may involve moving from an unhealthy overdependence on someone or something to a healthy dependence upon God. That commitment involves not only giving ourselves to God (the burnt offering) but also giving him the things of everyday life (the grain offering).

Lev. 3:3-5

In ancient times, the fat portions of the animal were considered the very best parts. As with the other offerings, God asked that the choice parts be reserved for him. This is a clear reminder that we need to bring our best to God, committing our life to him completely no matter what the cost.

Lev. 3:1-17

The peace offering (sometimes called the fellowship offering or the offering of thanksgiving) was brought to God as an expression of thanks for his blessings, healing, or help in difficult times. The Hebrew word for peace (shalom) is a rich term that includes the ideas of physical health, emotional well-being, spiritual wholeness, and material prosperity. The person bringing the peace offering was expressing faith and thanks that God had provided what was lacking in his or her life. It was an act of praise that God had restored him to completeness and harmony with both God and other people. How can we thank God for the peace he has brought into our lives?

Lev. 4:2-3, 13, 22, 27

The sin offering was not just for blatant, intentional sins. As we see here, it was primarily designed to deal with unintentional sins. God takes sin seriously—even the sins we aren't aware of! God recognizes that even these sins have grave consequences. We sometimes sin unknowingly against our children in ways that our parents have sinned against us. Family sins pass down the line. We need to carefully examine ourselves before God on a regular basis and repent of all known sin in our lives—with no excuses. We can be thankful that God understands our human frailty and graciously provides ways for us to deal with it.

Lev. 4:3

The sin offering was for the priests as much as for the rest of the Israelite people. Even Israel's high priest was not exempt from sin and its consequences. But the writer of Hebrews tells us that we have a sinless High Priest, Jesus, who is able to sympathize with our weaknesses (Hebrews 4:14-16). So we are to boldly approach God in prayer, that we may find mercy and grace to help us in our times of need.

Lev. 4:1-5:13

The sin offering brought atonement and provided forgiveness for an individual's sin in relation to God. In contrast, the guilt offering (5:14-6:7) brought atonement for acts perpetrated against others. As we seek to recover from past sins and failures, it is clear that we must start by seeking God. We must begin by seeing the truth that all sin is first of all committed against God, who created and loves those we have wronged. We need to echo David's prayer, "Against you, and you alone, have I sinned; I have done what is evil in your sight" (Psalm 51:4). The consequences of our sins, however, usually fall upon us or the people around us. Ultimately we must seek reconciliation with the people we have wronged and make any necessary restitution.

Lev. 5:14-6:7

The guilt offering was a special kind of sin offering. It was offered by a wrongdoer that he might receive forgiveness from God while also making restitution for the pain or loss he had caused someone else. This offering held the wrongdoer accountable for his actions and paved the way for his reconciliation with the wronged party. We, too, must consider the effects of our sins on others. We, too, must seek reconciliation with God by asking for his forgiveness and making restitution with the people we have wronged, wherever possible.

Lev. 7:12-13

The most common type of peace offering was the thanksgiving offering. It involved the presentation of various kinds of unleavened and leavened cakes, part of which were sacrificed and part eaten in a communal meal. The Israelite believer learned from this the importance of a public expression of thanks to God. God wants us, as well, to praise him openly before others, especially when he has given us a victory over sin. This public expression of gratitude to God will not only enhance our spiritual growth, but it will also be a first step toward helping others.

Lev. 8:1-4

The priests of Israel entered God's holy presence with the people's requests; they were mediators between God and the people. God instituted the priesthood because he desired to have fellowship with his people. But the mediation of the priesthood was also a stern reminder that God is an awesome and holy God who cannot be approached lightly. Since we as believers are called "holy priests" (1 Peter 2:5), we may come boldly before God, offering him our life as a spiritual sacrifice.

But we must be careful to approach him as a holy God and not take sin lightly.

Lev. 8:30-36

The priests were sprinkled with blood from the sacrifices. This symbolized their cleansing and reconciliation to God through the sacrificial death of the animal offering. The high price for their sin, the death of a living animal, would have been a pungent reminder of how important obedience was. The apostle Peter described believers as those cleansed “by the blood of Jesus Christ” (1 Peter 1:2). Because of the high price paid for our sins—the sacrificial death of Christ on the cross—we ought to be living a life of obedience to his Word.

Lev. 9:7

Because Aaron was the high priest, he offered sacrifices to make atonement for his sins and those of the people. But Jesus Christ, our High Priest, does more than offer sacrifices for us; he actually became our sin offering. He made all animal sacrifices obsolete by offering himself on the cross as the perfect sacrifice. And by giving himself sacrificially for others, he set a clear example for us to live by. His example should lead us to give ourselves to others.

Lev. 9:8-24

This account of Aaron’s sacrifices reflects the actual order in which the various sacrifices were offered by an individual. The sin offering was first, showing the priority of confession and cleansing from sin before God. The following burnt or grain offering represented the worshiper's obedience in giving his life over to God. Then the peace offering was an expression of gratitude for his continuing walk with God. Similarly, one key to our spiritual renewal must be the confession that we are hopeless on our own. Another key is that we seek God and surrender our lives to him, trusting Jesus Christ as our sacrifice. This is then followed by ongoing fellowship with God, accountability for sin, and spiritual growth as we continue to use the keys to spiritual renewal to preserve the gains we have made.

Lev. 10:1-3

The sin and resulting swift judgment of Aaron's two eldest sons indicates the greater responsibility of those who occupy positions of leadership and authority. Although the specifics of their sin are not explained in Scripture, it is likely that their wrong actions proceeded from wrong attitudes. Perhaps they believed that as leaders they were exempt from the moral law. While God's grace and long-suffering may often spare us from immediate judgment, we should be aware that we are still accountable to him. When we become irresponsible and disobedient to God's plan, the consequences will be grave.

Lev. 10:8-9

This passage about the use of wine or other intoxicating beverages illustrates the importance of self-control on the part of the priests. Because of the importance of their work and example, God required certain boundaries and evidences of self-control. Alcohol would affect their ability to carry out the task God had called them to do. This illustrates our need for self-control and boundaries as we seek to carry an effective and positive testimony of God's love to others.

Lev. 10:8-11

First, Aaron was told how to act (10:8-9); then he was told what to teach (10:10-11). This illustrates an important principle: Actions speak louder than words. God calls us to live in a way that will, by example, reinforce what we teach others. If we fail to live by what we teach, we may as well have never spoken.

Lev. 11:1-47

The elaborate dietary laws of this section illustrate the fact that God's relationship with his people extends even to the practical areas of everyday living. While we are not bound by the specifics of these dietary standards, we know that God is just as interested in the details of our lives. If our eating or drinking leads to excess, abuse, or poor health, God holds us accountable to deal with the problem. Personal holiness relates even to the mundane areas of life.

Lev. 11:44

What does it mean to be holy? It doesn't mean just to have a pious attitude toward God. The Hebrew word literally means "to be set apart," both unto God and from sin. This chapter emphasizes the aspect of being set apart unto God. These dietary laws and other guidelines for daily living gave the Israelites a unique identity as God's people. God also calls us to lives of holiness, lives that clearly reflect God's standards.

Lev. 11:44-45

God forbade the Israelites to touch crawling creatures. God may have given this law for logical reasons, such as a concern for his people's health. It seems, however, that many of these laws were given for theological reasons— so the Israelites might be different from the surrounding nations—“set apart” or “holy” unto God. While God may sometimes show us logical reasons for obeying him, this should not be our primary motivation for obedience. We are to obey him because he calls us to be different—“set apart” or “holy”—just as he is holy. And we can trust that his plan will lead us to discover his best for us, whether what he asks seems logical to us or not.

Lev. 13:1–15:33

These detailed health regulations excluded many Israelites from the larger society. They were banned from fellowship with others for being “ceremonially unclean.” Lepers and prostitutes were automatically unclean, according to the law, and were thus ostracized. This fact should help us appreciate even more the compassionate heart of Jesus Christ. He healed lepers and the woman who had been slowly bleeding for years; he talked with prostitutes and other outcasts. He cared most about the needy, the unclean. He considered it his work to show them the way to forgiveness and healing.

Lev. 16:1-22

The Day of Atonement is a thematic pivot point for the book of Leviticus. For the Israelites who participated in the ceremony with hearts of faith, this solemn day provided assurance that their past sins had been completely dealt with. Today, through the sacrificial work of Christ, we also can find assurance of forgiveness and a right standing before God. We can leave our past failures behind to build a new life based on God's plan.

Lev. 16:7-22

Here we see two goats set apart for the atonement ceremony. The first was associated with the people's sin and was sacrificed to God as a sin offering. The second goat, also associated with the sins of the people, was led into the wilderness and then released. This "scapegoat" took the sins of the people and carried them away. This illustrated the truth of Psalm 103:12, that God removes our sins "as far from us as the east is from the west." God has done this through the ultimate Scapegoat, Jesus Christ, who has taken all our sins upon himself. One of the most important keys to our spiritual renewal is learning to let go of our sins and receive God's forgiveness. The fact that God himself has taken away our sins should help us let them go.

Lev. 16:10

The word atonement comes from a word that means "to cover"; it appears here and in many other places in Leviticus. The covering of sin brought reconciliation between the Israelites and God. For this reason, the word could be understood as at-one-ment. God intends this for our lives as well. He wants us to find forgiveness for our sins and to be reconciled to him. God is in the business of restoring broken relationships. By means of forgiveness, he provides a way for the restoration of relationships broken by sin.

Lev. 16:15-19

The goat for the people's sin offering was slaughtered, and its blood was sprinkled on the lid of the Ark of the Covenant, sometimes called the atonement cover. This yearly sacrifice atoned for the sins of the people, but it had to be offered again the following year. Hebrews 10:1-4 makes it clear that these sacrifices were not a permanent solution to the problem of sin; they were only a temporary measure. Jesus Christ has now provided a perfect and permanent sacrifice for our sins. Through faith, we can be assured of complete forgiveness—permanently!

Lev. 16:22

The innocent scapegoat was sent away, carrying with it the guilt of the entire Israelite nation. People often look for a scapegoat rather than face the truth about themselves and accept responsibility for their wrongs. Creating a scapegoat frees them from their feelings of failure and gives them someone to blame. For those of us who have been the scapegoat for others, it should encourage us to know that God has sent his Son to be the scapegoat for us. Though innocent, he has chosen to carry away the sin of the entire human race. We need not shoulder it any longer; no human being should be expected to. We can hand it over to him. For those of us who tend to make others into a scapegoat and blame them for our problems, we need to make sure we accept responsibility for our own wrongs instead of finding someone to blame.

Lev. 18:1-5

This passage sets the tone for the rest of the book. It affirms the fact that God's relationship with his people was intended to affect the practical areas of their moral and spiritual lives. When we commit our lives to God through a relationship with Jesus Christ, we give God the opportunity to transform us. Spiritual growth can only come about, however, when we begin to live responsibly before God, handing over all our moral decisions to his wise direction.

Lev. 18:4-5

In this passage, we see the refrain "I am the LORD your God." This phrase appears more often in Leviticus than in any other book of the Bible. When God asked the Israelites to live holy lives, he knew that this would be difficult. God knew they would need a healthy fear of him to motivate them to obedience. So he continually reminded them of his identity as the Lord their God—the God who had revealed himself with terrifying power at Mount Sinai. Fear or respect for God is a good starting point if we want to live according to his plan. Yet it should encourage us to know that this terrifying God sent his Son to help us to live according to that plan.

Lev. 18:4-5

God promises life to all those who live according to his plan. The Hebrew word for "life" does not just mean "existence." It refers to finding contentment and enjoyment in life—living life to its fullest. While the personal moral standards in this section of Leviticus are quite restrictive, God's plan offers freedom beyond our wildest dreams. It is the paths of sin that are truly restrictive. When we obey God's standards, we are free to discover life as God intended it to be. His plan leads to peace and contentment.

Lev. 18:6-18

God instituted marriage as a foundational human relationship and forbade anything that might destroy it—incest included. Some societies in history have endorsed incestuous relationships, but they have suffered the tragic consequences. The people in such societies have suffered physical and mental abnormalities, leading eventually to societal decline. God's purpose in setting boundaries for both personal and family life has always been to protect us from destruction. He desires to build families that promote healing and wholeness among their members.

Lev. 18:20

Fidelity in marriage is central to God's plan for society and family; it is one of the Ten Commandments (Exodus 20:14). Since the bond of marriage is a foundational building block of society, adultery is a blatant violation of a community's trust. Healthy relationships require self-control and the acceptance of self-imposed boundaries, but God didn't intend to deprive us of anything in marriage. God wants the marriage relationship to bring us joy and fulfillment.

Lev. 18:24-30

Incest (18:6-18), adultery (18:20), child sacrifice (18:21), homosexuality (18:22), and bestiality (18:23) were all practiced by godless societies in the ancient Near East. Here God tells us that these lead to the deterioration and destruction of society. It is only through a relationship with God, by the power of the Holy Spirit, that people are able to be morally pure and overcome the destructive effects of their sin. God's standards are given for our good.

Lev. 19:1-2

God's call to holiness is repeated (see 11:44). God's holiness is the model and motivation for God's people to lead holy lives. God knows our weaknesses and our failures, yet he places before us the goal of his righteousness. It is only with Christ's help that we can reach this goal. Through his death we have cleansing from our failures and sins, and through his life (given to us by the Holy Spirit) we have the power to live a morally pure and holy life.

Lev. 19:1-4

Holiness begins at home, and respect for parents is given a prominent place here as it is in the Ten Commandments (Exodus 20:12). Strained family relationships can become one of the greatest barriers to the life of fulfillment and contentment that God desires for us. If God places a priority on respect within family relationships, we should do the same.

Lev. 19:9-10

The laws given here (illustrated in the story of Ruth) show that God is concerned about poor people. There was a sense of community among the Israelites that went beyond the immediate family. The Israelites were called to consider poor or underprivileged people as their brothers or sisters. With so many needs among God's people today—physical, emotional, spiritual—we should be quick to respond. Only in an atmosphere of acceptance and love can the needs of others be discerned and truly met.

Lev. 19:11-13, 35-37

God's plan for spiritual renewal demands honesty in both word and deed. Dishonesty and misrepresentation lead to suspicion, mistrust, and hatred, ultimately destroying our relationships. Human relationships can only grow and thrive if we are willing to tell the truth, the only real basis for trust between people. When there is honesty in our relationships, we can confidently look to others in times of need.

Lev. 19:18, 33-34

As we compare verses 18, 33, and 34 we see that the call to love one's neighbor was extended not only to fellow Israelites but to foreigners as well. Jesus quoted this commandment as the second great commandment of the law (Matthew 22:39; Mark 12:31; Luke 10:27). It should be easier for us to have compassion on others if we remember that God had compassion on us and freed us from our slavery to sin.

Lev. 20:1-5

The earlier prohibition against worshipping Molech (18:21) is given again here in even stronger language. Most of the Israelites probably doubted they could ever participate in this type of pagan worship, which included sacrificing children to this god. Yet Israel's history records that several centuries later, King Manasseh sacrificed some of his sons to this god and no one even objected (2 Chronicles 33:6). Our lives can also be greatly tainted by the behavior of the people around us. Given enough time, their values may become ours. With God's help we need to stand by our commitment to the moral boundaries he has set up.

Lev. 21:7-8

The priest's personal life, including his marriage, was to be holy, reflecting his commitment to God. As believers, each of us is a part of Christ, and our body is the home of the Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 6:15-20). Being holy includes setting healthy boundaries that will lead to purity in sexual relationships.

Lev. 22:31-33

God calls us to remember his deliverance in the past in order to find strength to live for him in the present. He has graciously made it possible for us to be free from the power of the sin in our past. He has rescued us from Satan's kingdom and delivered us from our slavery to sin. He wants us to remember all he has done in the past so we can find courage to face the challenges ahead.

Lev. 23:4-8

The yearly festivals of Passover and Unleavened Bread reminded the Israelites how God had delivered them from Egyptian bondage. Leviticus 1-7 contains specific instructions on how the Israelites were to worship God. In order for us to experience a true relationship with God, we must first acknowledge that Christ is our Passover Lamb. John the Baptist introduced him as “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (John 1:29). Seeing and acknowledging who Christ truly is allows us to worship God in spirit and in truth.

Lev. 23:33-43

The Festival of Shelters, like Israel’s other yearly feasts, was to remind the people of a crucial event in their history. Required for all Israelite males, the festival celebrated God’s protective care of his people during their forty-year sojourn in the wilderness. It pictured the tremendous grace of God in leading his people out of slavery in Egypt to victory in Canaan. This same God is faithful to us when we are leaving our former life of sin; he extends his grace to us in similar fashion. We may not have a formal week of feasting to remember those times, but we should make it a point to reflect and praise God for our spiritual growth.

Lev. 25:1-7

The sabbatical year, like the weekly Sabbath day, was instituted by God as a special period of rest for the Israelites. Every seventh year was a time of rest for the land, animals, and people. Their rest from work was in itself an act of faith, proving that they believed God would provide for the coming year. It also gave them time to reflect on the fact that God was the true provider: Everything they owned ultimately came from his generous hand. When we realize this truth, we will be better able to commit ourselves into God's hands. He is more than able to provide for our needs and help us.

Lev. 25:8-55

The Year of Jubilee took place every fifty years. At this time all the lands and possessions that had passed from one family to another during the previous forty-nine years were returned to the original owners. This reminded the Israelites that God was really the owner of all their possessions. They were only the managers. This would have helped to curb their tendency toward materialism. It would also provide families that had lost everything during the previous fifty years a chance to regain what they had lost. True contentment in life comes only when we see our material possessions as gifts from the hand of God. Jesus taught that we should give God first place in our lives and live as he wants us to; then God will provide everything we need to live in this world (Matthew 6:33).

Lev. 25:35-38

God's call to love our neighbors was extended here to those who had fallen into poverty. The fellowship of God's people was always intended to be redemptive; those in need were to be cared for by those with plenty. This was true not only for physical needs but for emotional and spiritual needs as well. In a similar way, our spiritual restoration is most effectively completed with the support and encouragement of God's family.

Lev. 26:11-13

God's promises of rewards for Israel's obedience culminate in this powerful affirmation of his love for his people. Again, the Exodus is used as a reminder that God took them from bondage and humiliation and lifted them up to become a people of dignity. As we learn to obey him, God offers us the same hope. His deliverance can provide us with a new life of moral and spiritual dignity. God assures us of this by bringing Christ's personal presence into each Christian's life (Matthew 28:20).

Lev. 26:14-39

Here God warns his people about what will happen to those who are disobedient to God's laws. After reading this, some might get the idea that God is harsh and unloving. It might seem that he delights in punishing those who refuse to do things his way. But this long list of warnings about the consequences of sin actually reveals God's love for his people. God doesn't want us to suffer; he doesn't want to punish us. But God also understands the destructive consequences of sin. He knows that certain activities will cause suffering to us and to those around us. So he warns us away from them, giving us a plan to follow that will lead to holy and joyful living. God's plan, though viewed by some as restrictive, is actually the path to a life of true fulfillment.

Lev. 26:40-42

Even after a harsh warning for those disobedient to his laws (26:14-39), God shows great love for his people in this promise of restoration. God delights in restoring those who repent. The parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15) also tells of a loving father who delights in finding his lost son. Even if we have fallen away from him, God still waits with open arms for us to return.

Num. 1:1

The opening expression “the LORD spoke to Moses in the Tabernacle” is similar to that found in Leviticus and indicates God’s personal interest in the lives of his people. He communicated clearly with his people, giving them instructions for right living. He was interested in the way they worshiped (Leviticus) as well as in the events of their daily lives (Numbers). He was interested in delivering and directing his people. This should remind us of his commitment to us today.

Num. 1:1

God spoke to Moses in the Tabernacle. The Tabernacle provided a place for the people to worship and illustrated God’s presence among them. God’s permanent presence in our lives today can be found through a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. The apostle John recorded the ultimate fulfillment of the Old Testament Tabernacle: “The Word became human and made his home [literally, “tabernacled”] here on earth among us” (John 1:14). Also, the Holy Spirit lives among us, now that Christ has returned to his Father. Through the Holy Spirit we have a tangible means of “meeting with God” each and every day. God’s tangible presence will provide us with the help we need as we grow spiritually.

Num. 1:2-46

Taking a census of the Israelites prior to their journey to the Promised Land not only had organizational and military significance (1:3) but also served an important psychological purpose. As each individual identified his tribal and family background (1:18), it was a powerful reminder to the Israelites of their unity and common family heritage. This sense of unity would become essential as they faced the enemies and challenges ahead. Similarly, the assurance of support and unity within the family of Christ is a critical need for those who face wilderness periods in their lives today (Philippians 2:1-3).

Num. 2:1-34

As they traveled and camped, the Israelites were to arrange themselves by tribe around the Tabernacle. God wanted the Israelites to keep him in constant focus, making him the center of all their thoughts and actions. Many of us try to face the challenges of life alone but find the battle overwhelming. It is only through the power of God, as we keep him constantly before us, that true victory and transformation can be realized.

Num. 3:1-4:49

The detailed organization of the Levites and priests in these chapters illustrates the principle that God's calling is accompanied by responsibility and accountability. Out of Israel, God sovereignly chose one tribe (Levi), and out of that tribe he chose specific families who were to lead in Israel's worship. With great privilege comes great responsibility. When God places us in a position of influence, we must not take it lightly. We need to recognize our responsibility to obey God and our accountability before him.

Num. 4:1-49

The efficient operation of the Israelite camp (especially the moving process) required detailed organization and cooperation. When each person cooperated and did his unique task, good results were achieved. The ministry of the church today, especially in meeting some of the greatest human needs, requires a cooperative effort by people using their unique spiritual gifts to help others (1 Corinthians 12:24-27). Only then will we be able to reach those in need and provide the necessary environment for spiritual renewal and growth.

Num. 5:5-7

This command for dealing with sin emphasizes the same principles as do the sin and guilt offerings of Leviticus 4-5. God has provided clear instructions for those who have violated others. These include admitting the wrong things we have done and providing restitution wherever possible. If we follow God's instructions, we will make significant progress in our spiritual growth and our relationships with others.

Num. 5:11-15

The seriousness of adultery is underscored in this passage. Marriage was intended to be a picture of God's covenant relationship with his people. The ritual described in 5:16-31 was used to demonstrate guilt and was not simply a magic spell. God will forgive all sins, even adultery, as was shown by Christ's words to the adulterous woman (John 8:2-11). But his charge to her, "Go and sin no more," emphasizes the fact that forgiveness carries with it a responsibility to live by God's standards. God's priorities for his people have always emphasized pure relationships, especially in marriage.

Num. 6:1-21

Here the Nazirite vow is explained. This was a special commitment, or promise, made to God through which a person could prove his personal devotion to God and demonstrate his seriousness in following him. Vows, in general, were voluntary, including the Nazirite vow mentioned here. God's endorsement of this voluntary practice emphasizes how much he delights in obedience that flows from the heart, as opposed to more legalistic compliance to a set of rules.

Num. 6:3-4

The name Nazirite comes from a Hebrew word meaning “to separate.” One aspect of this vow was separation from various activities and attitudes, symbolizing a person's willingness to set personal standards for himself during the time of the vow. In the same way, self-discipline and self-examination both play key roles in our relationship with God as we continue growing spiritually.

Num. 6:5-8

An important aspect of the Nazirite vow was the separation unto God, dedicating one's life for his use. Romans 12:1 commands us to present our bodies as living sacrifices to God. The Nazirite vow provided opportunities to do this on special occasions, but we are to give ourselves to God regularly. Even in the most hopeless human situations, God gives hope. We receive this hope through Jesus Christ, who will save us and transform our lives.

Num. 6:24-26

The simple words of this blessing reflect God's desire for all his people. He is the source of all blessings, grace, and peace in life; only through a relationship with this God can we hope to experience the fullness of life described here. The blessing seems to build to its final word—peace. The beautiful Hebrew word shalom used here means much more than an absence of conflict. It implies a complete sense of well-being, health, and contentment. God offers this to anyone who is willing to follow him, and especially to those whose lives have been bruised and broken.

Num. 7:1-88

The way we use our possessions is an important part of our accountability to God. This passage shows how God's ministry among his people often depends upon the personal gifts of individuals and families. An attitude of sacrifice and generosity is needed among us if we hope to meet the needs of others. This sacrifice may involve our giving physical gifts, as did each of the tribal leaders. Sometimes it involves giving of our time, as did the Levites. God does ask that we bring an offering to him (7:11); the nature and amount of the offering is to be voluntary and from the heart.

Num. 8:5-8, 12

This section focuses on the Levitical priests, noting several important aspects of their preparation for service. They were to be cleansed prior to service. The sin offering made on their behalf showed that even they, Israel's spiritual leaders, needed to be cleansed of sin. Only our great High Priest, Jesus Christ, serves in the priestly role without sin. And even though he is sinless, he can fully understand our weaknesses so that we need not fear approaching him in any time of need (Hebrews 4:14-16).

Num. 8:9-11, 13-16

The Levitical priests not only offered sacrifices and offerings to God—they were to consider themselves “living sacrifices.” Their lives were to be given completely over to God. The New Testament also teaches that we are to consider ourselves holy priests, giving our lives as “living and holy sacrifice[s]” unto God (Romans 12:1-2; 1 Peter 2:5). A life founded on commitment to God contains the essential ingredients of a life filled with contentment and purpose.

Num. 8:15, 21

The priest's ultimate purpose was to serve God through his responsibilities in the Tabernacle. Here we see that priests were sanctified (set apart) and accountable to God for active service. This accountability is an essential part of our salvation as well. We will be held accountable to God for the way we use our time, talents, and treasures as we serve him.

Num. 9:1-14

The Passover was to be an annual feast for all the Israelites—a celebration of their deliverance from bondage in Egypt (Exodus 12:1-51). A problem arose, however, for those who were ceremonially unclean at the time of Passover. According to the strict standards of the law, they were not allowed to join in the celebration even though it was required of them. So Moses brought this problem to God, who graciously instituted a second date of celebration for those who couldn't participate at the regular time. God also wants all of us to participate in a relationship with him. We should not allow our failures and sins to keep us from coming to God. He has provided a means for us to come, no matter how "unclean" we may be. Our Passover Lamb, Jesus Christ, has taken away all the sins of the world (John 1:29; 1 Corinthians 5:7).

Num. 9:15-23

As the cloud moved, so did the Israelites. They had to stay alert, watching each day for God's guidance. It was essential for the people to trust God rather than to depend upon their own plans. This object lesson of obedience should be the description of our day-by-day walk with God—to trust in him completely and not in ourselves (Proverbs 3:5-6).

Num. 10:11-36

This section begins the account of Israel's journey through the wilderness on the way to the Promised Land. They were entering new territory on their way to building a new life, but the immediate results were not encouraging. As they set out for the Promised Land, they were not willing to trust God to lead and protect them. Their weak faith showed up in their impatience with God, which resulted in 40 years of wilderness wandering. Often, building a new life involves entering uncharted territory. It takes great patience to let God guide us each step of the way. Let us learn from the mistakes of the Israelites (1 Corinthians 10; Hebrews 3–4).

Num. 10:35-36

Even though the presence of God was with Israel, evidenced by the cloud and the Ark of the Covenant (10:33-34), Moses continually prayed for the well-being of his people. He was their intercessor and knew the importance of the ministry of prayer. Praying for others is always important, for it is how we lay hold of the awesome power of God to change their lives.

Num. 11:1-3

Instead of trusting God to take care of them, the people started to complain. This first complaint against God is just one of many during their wilderness travels. God reacted quickly and harshly to their murmuring because it was seriously undermining the plans God had set forth for them. Their complaining indicated their ingratitude, impatience, and lack of faith. The difficult process of going from Egyptian bondage to God's promised home in Canaan could only be accomplished if the people patiently trusted God to get them through. The same is true for us.

Num. 11:4-5

We are told here that a group of Egyptians traveling with Israel began complaining. Notice that the complaints were then spread by the Israelites. This illustrates the importance of supportive company as we pursue spiritual growth and obedience to God's plan. One of Satan's strategies to undermine our faith may be the negative attitudes and comments of those around us. We need to be careful about the time we spend with those who drag us down, and we need to seek out people who build us up and strengthen us in our pursuit of the life God intends for us.

Num. 11:4-6

When things got tough in the wilderness, the people wanted to go back to their life of bondage in Egypt. The people seemed to think that a life of slavery was better than what they had there in the wilderness. They had stopped seeing with the eyes of faith. They had lost sight of their goal and of God's guiding presence. Our spiritual journey can be likened to Israel's experience in the wilderness. As things get tough, it is easy to look back at our old life with longing. We need to keep our eyes on God and his promises for us. If we do, we will eventually discover a new and better life.

Num. 11:4-6

We often fail to see our greatest blessings. God had supplied the people of Israel with a miraculous provision—manna from heaven. But here they revealed their discontent by complaining to God. They were blind to the fact that supplying an entire nation of people in a desert with ample provisions was an awesome miracle. We may find ourselves complaining about our circumstances in life. We need to stop and examine all the wonderful blessings we have. Then we can continue growing spiritually with the positive attitudes of faith and thanksgiving toward God, our great provider.

Num. 11:10-15

When Moses complained angrily to God about his unpleasant circumstances, God didn't rebuke him; he evidently sympathized with his problem. God's response toward Moses stands in stark contrast to the severe judgment brought upon the Israelites for their complaints. God evidently saw that Moses' motives were pure and his faith genuine; thus, he responded to Moses' honest cry for help. God is never afraid of the anger we may feel about the situations we face. He desires honesty in our prayers.

Num. 12:3-4

This parenthetical statement about Moses' humility is one of the most revealing evaluations of his character found in Scripture. He is described as the most humble man in the world. This is essentially the same quality commended by the third beatitude: "God blesses those who are humble" (Matthew 5:5). Evidence of Moses' humility is found in his great patience and perseverance as he led Israel through the wilderness. Our own humility is extremely important as we surrender our lives to God.

Num. 13:25-29

The spy mission was undoubtedly planned to encourage Israel. They would see for themselves the richness of the land God had promised them. The spies' report began with a glorious description of the Promised Land. But the mood abruptly changed as they began to focus on the “giants” that stood between them and their new life there. They failed to recognize God’s power to overcome obstacles, no matter how great. Because of their lack of faith, they had to wander nearly 40 more years in the wilderness. We all must keep our eyes off the obstacles of life and keep our eyes on God, whose power is sufficient for any “giants” we might face.

Num. 13:30

The minority report of Caleb, and later Joshua (14:6-9), emphasized God’s power to overcome even the greatest of problems. Their faith enabled them to see problems not as obstacles but as opportunities for God to prove himself. The basis for their faith was God’s promise to save his people from their enemies (10:9). When we have an active faith in God, our view of life and its challenges will emphasize the positive rather than the negative.

Num. 13:33

In this verse, the words of the ten spies reveal their perception of themselves: “Next to them we felt like grasshoppers, and that’s what they thought, too!” The Israelites failed to perceive themselves as God saw them. They were his chosen people, backed by the promises of the Creator of the universe. God had promised to give them the land of Canaan. As we face life’s greatest challenges, we must see ourselves as God sees us, not as we think we appear next to our obstacles. We need to realize that God loves us and has promised to help us overcome the adversity and sin in our lives.

Num. 14:5-11

Here the strong faith of four men is contrasted to the faithlessness of the entire nation. Moses and Aaron fell down before God (probably in intercessory prayer for the people). Joshua and Caleb reaffirmed their belief in God's ability to miraculously overcome the giants of Canaan. The entire congregation, however, refused to listen and even discussed stoning them. These four men wanted to follow God's plan. The majority forced them to do otherwise. The result of not trusting God was a prolonged wilderness experience.

Num. 14:24

In contrast to the unbelief of the other Israelites, Caleb trusted God and obeyed him fully. The positive consequence of his faith was his entrance into the Promised Land, though he had to wait nearly 40 years to arrive there. All the other adults except Joshua died as they wandered on their 40-year wilderness trek. If we try to walk in our own strength, going our own way, we also will wander in the wilderness, never experiencing the full blessing God desires for us. But if we step out, trusting God to lead and protect us, we will discover a new life. Notice that even Caleb and Joshua had to wander in the wilderness on their way, but through perseverance and faith in God they did finally arrive.

After Moses announced God's judgment, the Israelites showed superficial attitudes of repentance. Then they tried to conquer parts of Canaan in their own strength, but their mission was unsuccessful. As we seek to overcome past areas of weakness, we need to do it in God's way, with God's timing, and with God's help. The obstacles we face are too great to be tackled alone, but with God's help, nothing is impossible.

Num. 15:1-36

This restatement of many of the Levitical laws was intended to train the new generation concerning their accountability to God. They would be allowed to enter the Promised Land and enjoy God's blessings. But they needed to realize that in their new life there, they would be accountable to God. Privilege always brings with it responsibility, and God was affirming this principle with a new generation of Israelites.

Num. 15:37-41

The Israelites were required to wear tassels on the corners of their clothing. This would remind them constantly of their covenant relationship with God and that they were to obey him. It would be a visual reminder that their commitment to obey God was important in every realm of life. Although the New Testament does not command such a ritual for us today, the principle behind it is helpful. As we commit our lives to God, we need to realize that obedience is important in all areas of life.

Num. 16:1-17:13

The three stories in this section illustrate the priority of Aaron's priesthood in God's leadership of his people, Israel. God made it clear that Aaron was his chosen spiritual leader. Proper worship of God could come only through his high priesthood. The writer of Hebrews shows us that Jesus Christ is a High Priest superior in every way to Aaron (Hebrews 4:14-10:39). As Aaron's budding rod demonstrated that he was chosen by God, so Christ's resurrection proved that he was to be the only mediator between God and the human race (1 Timothy 2:5). For us today, cleansing from sin and a proper approach to God can come only through a relationship with Christ (John 14:6). He makes it possible for us to be reconciled to God.

Num. 20:2-13

After a water shortage, the Israelites started their murmuring again. The focus of this incident, however, was upon the failure of Moses and Aaron. Moses was severely judged by God for not following God's instructions specifically and for using his own method to produce water. Aaron was also judged because he evidently had a part in it. While the judgment seems severe, it illustrates the importance of obedience to God's Word, especially if we are in a leadership position. Moses and Aaron, by disobeying God's specific instructions, exhibited attitudes of personal rebellion against God. Commitment to God's plan cannot be a partway proposition. Despite Moses' great success in the past, this failure kept him out of the Promised Land.

Num. 20:23-29

The death of Aaron, Israel's first high priest, was mourned by the people (20:29), but this wouldn't be the last of Israel's priestly funerals. The writer of Hebrews used this point to contrast the ministry of Jesus Christ with the ministry of other human priests: "There were many priests under the old system, for death prevented them from remaining in office. But because Jesus lives forever, his priesthood lasts forever" (Hebrews 7:23-24). Our great High Priest will always be available to provide help for any problems we may have.

Num. 21:1-3

Victory! This first great success was the result of complete obedience to God's will. This victory, along with others to follow, began an important era in Israel's history. They were able to see the truth of Joshua and Caleb's advice—faith and obedience to God would bring victory over any enemy or obstacle. God delights in proving himself in the lives of those who trust in his power to overcome life's obstacles. Our lack of power over any problem can be covered by God's unlimited power to act on our behalf.

Num. 21:4-9

This incident was referred to by the apostle John in the New Testament as an illustration of what Christ did on our behalf. "As Moses lifted up the bronze snake on a pole in the wilderness, so the Son of Man must be lifted up" (John 3:14). Evident in both passages is God's saving grace, which provides salvation and healing for anyone who responds in faith. Healing did not come to everyone in Israel but only to those who by faith looked at the bronze serpent on the pole. The apostle John makes it clear that personal forgiveness and victory over sin can come only to those who look to Christ on the cross. God provides the powerful means of redemption from sin and failure; we need to receive it in faith.

Num. 21:7

Notice here that Moses resumed his role as Israel's leader and mediator even after he was judged for his sin at Meribah. His failure undoubtedly brought him a great deal of personal pain and disappointment. He would lead the entire nation of Israelites to the Promised Land but would never enter it himself. In spite of this, Moses showed no bitter feelings toward God; neither did he neglect his responsibilities. His restoration after this personal failure, and his continued faithful service are evidence of Moses' great faith and dependence upon God. Our mistakes don't necessarily disqualify us from future success; they provide opportunities for learning, growth, and dependence on God.

Num. 22:1-20

Balaam was a Mesopotamian baru (priest, diviner) who was hired by Balak, king of Moab, to place a curse upon Israel. King Balak wanted to prevent the Israelites from conquering Moab and other surrounding lands. Balaam, a man of great spiritual stature, openly admitted that he had no power to go beyond the will of God. He could not place a curse upon the people whom God desired to bless. This should help us realize that when it seems everyone is against us, we can be sure that God is able to protect us and provide us with the wisdom to survive the toughest of situations (James 1:2-5).

Num. 22:21-35

The humorous story about Balaam and his donkey illustrates Balaam's spiritual blindness with respect to the true God. As a specialist in divination, Balaam often relied upon signs from animals and nature to determine the future. In this situation, however, he had less spiritual perception than his donkey and was prevented from carrying out a diabolical plot against Israel. From Balaam we learn that the greatest of human wisdom can often lead to spiritual blindness. True wisdom to face life's situations comes only from the sovereign, all-knowing God.

Num. 23:18-24

Through the words of Balaam's second oracle, God affirmed not only his sovereignty but also his truthful character: "God is not a man, so he does not lie. He is not human, so he does not change his mind" (23:19). The future of Israel was secure because a sovereign God had chosen them for his glory and promised to bless them. The New Testament tells us that we were chosen by God before the world was made and he has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in Christ (Ephesians 1:3-14). Worldly wisdom, as illustrated by Balaam, cannot compare with the wisdom of God.

Num. 25:1-18

After God's victory over the false gods of Balaam, the Israelites were quickly seduced into Canaanite worship.

Through this story we can see how clever and diverse Satan's strategies are. When unsuccessful in his attack from the outside (22:1-24:25), he succeeded in bringing decay from within. Israelite participation in immoral Canaanite worship practices resulted in the judgment of 24,000 of God's people. This shows how important our personal morality is to God.

Num. 26:1-65

The census in chapter 1 was taken primarily for organizational purposes. This later census was intended to prepare Israel for the conquest of the Promised Land and the later division of property. The decrease in numbers from the census taken 40 years earlier was primarily due to the judgments suffered by Israel in the wilderness.

Num. 27:12-23

The torch of Israel's leadership was passed from Moses to Joshua. Moses was able to view the land of Canaan (27:12-14) but was not allowed to enter it because of his earlier failure. Rather than being self-centered and overcome with disappointment, his greatest concern was still for his people. The attitude reflected in his words reveal his godly character: "Please appoint a new man as leader for the community. Give them someone who will guide them wherever they go and will lead them into battle, so the community of the LORD will not be like sheep without a shepherd" (27:16-17). Moses was content with God's plan for him. We, like Moses, must learn to be content with God's plan for us, even when it brings us temporary disappointments along the way. God always desires what is best for us.

Just as the offerings were to be brought regularly, so our fellowship with God should be a regular occurrence. It should be a continual reality for believers. God desires more than ritual in our worship; he invites us to have a day-by-day relationship with him.

Num. 28:1-8

Only through continual fellowship with God could God's people expect to have victory as they entered the Promised Land. This is probably the reason for repeating the instructions for the burnt offering here. It was a reaffirmation of its significance for the new generation. By bringing the offering, a person was committing his or her life to God in a fresh way. In a similar way, the apostle Paul called us to present our bodies as living sacrifices to God (Romans 12:1-2). This is an essential step for our spiritual growth. As we place our lives in God's hands, he will change us through his power.

Num. 33:1-49

Moses sketched out Israel's wilderness itinerary to remind the new generation that God had graciously protected them since their exodus from Egyptian bondage. It was important to reaffirm these truths in order to spiritually prepare themselves for the challenge of conquering the Promised Land. This procedure of reviewing God's past acts of faithfulness was often used by Israel's leaders to prepare the people for future challenges. In a similar way, praising God for past victories and blessings (answered prayer, a helping hand, spiritual progress) is an excellent way for us to prepare for future challenges.

Num. 33:50-53

These verses beautifully illustrate the relationship between God's sovereignty and man's responsibility. God gave the Israelites specific instructions about what they were to do in order to conquer Canaan. Yet he also affirmed that he had already given them the land. God promises us victory over many adversaries, but his victory cannot be claimed without active participation on our part. We need to take responsibility for our own lives and carry out what the Lord has called us to do. Yet we must always seek out God's help and guidance in the process.

Num. 33:55-56

Here God sternly warned his people to completely cleanse the Promised Land of the ungodly people living there. This will become a major theme in the book of Joshua. The Israelites failed to completely push out their Canaanite neighbors and, as a result, became like them. We all are susceptible to being led astray by others. If we don't use wisdom in choosing our relationships, we may find ourselves falling back into our old way of life.

Num. 34:1-29

The boundaries given here were based upon faith in God. The Israelites had to trust that God would help them conquer the Promised Land. This great chapter of anticipation recalls God's promise to Abraham: "I will give the entire land of Canaan, where you now live as a foreigner, to you and your descendants. It will be their possession forever, and I will be their God" (Genesis 17:8). Those who were obedient to God would see the fulfillment of this promise that had been made hundreds of years earlier. God fulfills his promises, even though it sometimes takes longer than we expect. We must learn to trust him, following his plan with patience and humility.

Num. 35:9-34

The cities of refuge were provided by God as places where a person who had caused an accidental death could get a fair hearing. According to the law, murderers were subject to the death penalty. Even those guilty of manslaughter could be avenged by a near relative. The cities of refuge provided a place of safety for those who had accidentally killed someone. This system demanded strict moral accountability of every Israelite, but it also provided a way of escape for those who had sinned unintentionally. Although God is just, he is also gracious.

Deut. 1:1-5

This is a book of new hope; it is all about making a fresh start. The Israelites' failures in the wilderness were behind them. Opportunities for rebuilding their lives, their communities, and their nation lay ahead. At last Israel stood once again on the threshold of the Promised Land. It had taken them 40 years to accomplish an 11-day journey because of their willful disobedience and lack of faith. Moses took time to give them principles for living within the Israelite community and for maintaining their relationship with God.

Deut. 1:1-5

After a generation of consistent failure, the Israelites needed to get back to the basics. As they were about to enter the Promised Land, they took time to read God's laws once again. The name Deuteronomy actually means "second law" or "repetition of the law." It was necessary for Moses to share God's instructions with the new generation of Israelites as they faced new living conditions and the accompanying temptations. God's instructions for living are good for every generation. We need to take the time to regularly review them as we face our own temptations and difficulties.

Deut. 1:6

In every life there are moments when it is essential to move on. If we seek to grow in our spiritual life, we must be careful to advance according to God's schedule—neither lagging behind nor running ahead.

Deut. 1:19-21

“Don’t be afraid! Don’t be discouraged!” The expression “Don’t be afraid” and its variations is the most common command in Scripture. We are afraid of so many things. In challenging his people to a new course of action, God was insisting that they cast away their fears. God was really asking his people to trust him. If we can learn to turn our focus away from our circumstances and toward God and his power, our helplessness and fears will soon melt away.

Deut. 1:32

Moses reminded the Israelites of their refusal to believe what God had told them. There is no better formula for failure. When we refuse to trust in God, no human plan or program will be successful for long. The Israelites were forced to wander in the wilderness for forty years simply because they refused to trust in God! God had the power to deliver them, but the Israelites refused to take advantage of it. Believing God is essential for lasting success.

Deut. 2:7

God was not rejecting his people when he consigned them to 40 years of wilderness wanderings. He was lovingly guiding them in a way that would bring them some much needed discipline. It is comforting to remember that even after we have failed, God continues to shower his loving care upon us. He may lead us through a time of difficult discipline, but he never leaves us during the hard times. Often he allows them for our own good. Although the Israelites had rejected his plans, God protected Israel in the wilderness. Even after our worst failures, when terrible consequences are bearing down on us, God is there.

Deut. 2:14-17

Timing is often an essential element in God's plan. It is sometimes necessary for us to see the truth about our desperate situation before we can begin to grow spiritually. It was necessary for the Israelites to experience what seemed to be total defeat in the wilderness before they could learn how to trust God's plan and do things his way. We should be careful to learn from Israel's mistakes. Let us learn to give up our plans for life before we discover that the consequences are disastrous. We would be wise to accept God's plans and follow them carefully.

Deut. 3:1-2

Israel's resources were pitifully limited, but God gave them victory. It was not by their military strength but by God's power that they overcame the nation of Bashan. Our human resources are limited. Once we accept this reality, we can seek God to give us his resources. God's resources, not ours, will be sufficient for all our needs. Our recognition of our lack of power provides wonderful opportunities for God to prove his power.

Deut. 3:12-20

Three of the Israelite tribes, Reuben, Gad, and half of Manasseh, wanted land on the east side of the Jordan River, just outside the Promised Land. God allowed them to do this, but he also demanded that they follow through on their promises to fight in the conquest of Canaan. The other tribes had counted on their support, and their failure to help in the conquest might have created deep divisions within God's chosen nation. We must take responsibility for our promises and decisions. This is important to remember as we seek to build, reconcile, and maintain our relationships with others.

Deut. 3:23-29

Even Moses was not exempt from God's requirements. As great as he was, God's commands still applied to him. We must never presume to be a "special case." We must not rationalize and excuse ourselves from God's plan for holy living. Rather, we should seek out and then joyfully accept God's plan for us. His plans are always best.

Deut. 4:2

God's directions are not to be tampered with. It is tempting to add to God's provisions or take away from them. But if we are to have victory, we must accept God's way as it is—not as we might wish it to be. These requirements were offered for Israel's guidance; they were a gracious provision of God's love. God, through his Word and loving presence in our lives, also provides us with all we need to live lives of fulfillment and contentment.

Deut. 4:9

In the following verses we see warning exclamations, such as “Watch out!” No matter how secure we may feel in our righteousness, if we are unwary, we are on the verge of a fall. Here Israel was charged to remember what God had done for them. Remembering the victories and failures of the past can help us guard against sin and failure in the present. The Israelites were also instructed to pass their wisdom and experience on to the next generation. We also are responsible to pass on to our children the wisdom learned from our past. This will give them a chance, if they choose to listen, to avoid some of the mistakes we have made. God is concerned that godly attitudes and wisdom are passed on to each successive generation.

Deut. 4:15-19

God warned the Israelites time and again about the dangers of idolatry. Most of us aren’t tempted to worship a carved figure or statue, but in our busy world, a multitude of other matters clamor for our attention and affection. It is sometimes difficult to remember that we owe our primary allegiance to God. He requires absolute devotion from his people; he will not be satisfied with taking second place in our lives. Spiritual renewal begins when we put God in his rightful place—first.

Deut. 4:20

God delivered Israel for a specific purpose. He forged Israel into a nation to be his chosen possession, and through this special nation God planned to bring salvation to the whole world. Why has God delivered us? God’s purposes for us are quite specific. We need to ask these questions: What does God want from us? Why did God save us? He may intend to use us to bring his saving grace into the lives of many who suffer from problems similar to our own.

Deut. 4:23-24

All relationships come with responsibilities. Here we are reminded that this is also true of our relationship with God. We cannot remake God as we would like him to be; we must relate to him as he is. The only true God demands that we give him our full devotion. As with any relationship, we need to be faithful to God if we wish our relationship to remain strong. This book calls the Israelites to follow through on their responsibilities to God. The consequences for ignoring responsibilities in any relationship are great. Failing in our relationship with God results in even deeper problems.

Deut. 4:29-31

Here God reaffirms his compassion toward victims of painful circumstances. He proves his compassion by promising to come through for his people, even when they have failed him. He asks only that his people listen to him and follow his instructions for holy living. Our relationship with God is certain because it is based upon God's compassion for us, even when we don't necessarily deserve it. He has provided a means for our relationship to be reconciled—the work of Jesus Christ. God is faithful; we can be sure he will come through for us.

Deut. 4:34-40

Here we see a glorious review of God's work on Israel's behalf. In this account, Israel's many failures aren't even mentioned. They are forgotten in the amazing story of how God led his people from slavery in Egypt to the Promised Land. God's plans for Israel succeeded in the long run despite Israel's tendency to rebel against God and his plans. Since we all have a tendency to rebel, Israel's history should be a source of encouragement for us. God will continue to work with us, disciplining us when it is needed, comforting us when we are discouraged. If we trust him, our own history will be a glorious account of our journey from slavery to freedom—all the failures and mistakes graciously lost amidst the acts of God's goodness.

Deut. 5:5-6

Moses introduced the Ten Commandments by directing Israel's attention to the person of God, reminding the people that he was "the LORD" (Yahweh). This name is God's personal covenant name. It reminds us of his relationship with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and then with Moses and the nation of Israel. God is personal; he relates to us one-on-one. The Scriptures also state: "I am the LORD your God." He is our God. Our personal relationship with God and our love for him should provide the motivation for our obedience to his laws.

Deut. 5:11

This commandment prohibits the use of God's name in any way that brings it dishonor. This is often understood to refer to using God's name in an exclamation of anger or disgust.

Actually, this commandment refers as much to our lives as to our speech. As people who represent the name of God, we are responsible to act in ways that will bring him glory, not shame. Thus, when our actions and attitudes bring dishonor to God, this commandment is broken. We need to live with complete honesty in both word and deed, bringing honor rather than dishonor to God's name.

Deut. 5:12-15

Here we are commanded to observe the Sabbath day of rest. God has created our bodies, and he knows what is best for us. He knows that it is best for us to set apart for the Lord one day a week as a day of rest. When we don't give our bodies the rest they need, we experience physical, emotional, and spiritual exhaustion. Even more important, however, God calls us to set apart this day of rest as a sign that he has established a covenant with us.

Deut. 5:21

This commandment is different from the others because it forbids not only certain actions but certain attitudes as well. It insists that we carefully guard our thoughts. Notice that when this commandment is broken, it usually leads to breaking others, too.

Deut. 6:5

Here the Israelites are told to love God with all their heart, soul, and might. Jesus called this the most important commandment in the Bible. If we love God, we will naturally do everything else

God wants us to do. The nature of the love commanded here, however, is often misunderstood. In the Bible, love is not primarily an emotion. It is a decision that shows itself in appropriate action. Thus, loving God entails the decision to follow God's ways, looking to him constantly for help and forgiveness.

Deut. 6:6

God's laws need more than our cursory attention. Thinking about God's plan for our lives once in a while isn't enough. We are to think about God's laws constantly, every day. We need frequent reminders if we are to grow in our spiritual maturity. God's plan must be reviewed regularly if we are to discover and enjoy the freedom he promises.

Deut. 6:7

We are told specifically to share God's wisdom with our children. Both blessings and curses can be passed down from generation to generation. Here we are reminded to pass on the blessings of God's Word. To do this we must make God's Word an integral part of our daily lives. We need to live it, not just speak it. We need to teach, not just with our words, but with our lifestyle as well.

Deut. 6:10-13

The Israelites were about to end 40 difficult years of wilderness wandering. They were starting the task of beginning new lives and building a new nation. But when things start going well in our lives, it is easy to forget the help God has given us in the past. Here Moses gave the Israelites a special warning. He told the people to give God the respect and obedience he deserves. As we begin to make spiritual progress, it is easy to forget that it is only by God's grace that we have come this far. We need to realize that without God's help, we will quickly regress. Continued respect for and obedience to God are necessary to preserve our spiritual gains.

Deut. 6:18

God laid out a plan for right living in the Israelite community. Just as God loved the Israelites, he loves us as well and has designed his laws for our well-being. It is clear that he desires our best, and this should encourage us as we seek to follow his plan, as difficult as it may be. And we can know for certain that when God's instructions become too difficult for us, he is right there to help us along.

Deut. 6:23

Moses reminded the people that God's purpose was to bring them from bondage into a new life of freedom. He brought them out so that he could bring them into something much better. We have all suffered under the bondage of sin, but we can be assured that when God leads us out of our slavery, he has a much better life in store for us. As we are freed from sin's shackles, God will give us new things to live for—good and godly things. God is reminding us here that his people are delivered for a purpose, and our spiritual renewal is part of that purpose.

Deut. 7:6

The people whom God chooses have a responsibility to live holy lives. This means two things: (1) that believers are set apart from the world's ways of living, and (2) that believers are set apart for God, that is, set aside for his purposes.

Deut. 7:7-8

Why did God choose to treat the Israelites in a special way? Was it because they deserved it? No! In fact, in some respects they deserved it less than others. He chose them as his own because he had promised his loving care to their ancestor Abraham and his descendants. He treated them kindly because he is a gracious God. God wants all of us to be free from bondage, whether we are “good enough” or not. If there are any chains binding us, God's loving hands are ready to set us on the road toward freedom.

Deut. 7:9

Here we are reminded of God's unfailing love. He is a delivering and faithful God. He always keeps his promises. Notice, however, that he also asks something of us. We must believe, love, and obey him. A major step toward spiritual renewal is to take God at his word.

Deut. 7:21

The Israelites were about to enter the Promised Land and probably feared the powerful enemies they would face there. But God made it clear that he was sufficient to see them through this task, no matter how daunting it might be. As we grow spiritually, we also face great obstacles to our progress. We need to trust in God's sufficiency to help us conquer these enemies. He is capable of overcoming any obstacles we might face.

Deut. 7:22

Notice that the conquest was to take place a little at a time. God recognized that throwing enemies out of the land had to be followed by immediate rebuilding. He would give his people new territory only when they were ready to move in and take advantage of the conquest. We need to recognize that spiritual growth is also a long-term process. We should not expect immediate perfection; instead, we should look for steady progress. God gives us victories as we are ready to take advantage of them and build on them. We need to trust him to move us forward according to his timing.

Deut. 8:2

God often uses the hard times in life to teach us important lessons. Here we see that he had a twofold purpose in Israel's 40 years of wandering. First, the trials were brought upon Israel to humble them. God wanted them to learn who they really were in relationship with him. Second, the trials were given to test Israel—to demonstrate what was really in their hearts. Sometimes God tests us in similar ways, pushing us to examine ourselves. We need to take advantage of the difficult times, using them as stepping-stones toward progress.

Deut. 8:16-18

As we begin to experience spiritual growth, we need to remember to give credit where credit is due. We must be careful to give God the glory. We must not selfishly claim what belongs to God alone, for this leads us to a proud self-sufficiency that invariably results in a fall.

Deut. 9:3

This verse reminds us of the truth found in Romans 8:31: “If God is for us, who can ever be against us?” God went ahead of his people to guide them and prepare the way for them. He destroyed Israel’s national enemies. In light of this, we, too, can be confident that God will go before us and give us victory.

Deut. 9:18-29

Moses prayed to God, interceding for his people. In the process of spiritual growth we will experience times of failure. But we must always remember that the intercession of God’s people is vital to our progress. We need to build relationships of support that will result in this kind of intercession on our behalf.

Deut. 10:1

The first stone tablets containing the law had been completely destroyed because of the people’s rebellion. How encouraging to see that God instructed Moses to bring new ones so he could rewrite his instructions to the people. No matter how great our failures, God still reaches out to us. God always gives humble people a chance to start again. But remember: This characteristic of God should be appreciated, not presumed upon.

Deut. 10:12-13

God's pattern for holy living begins with a proper relationship with him. Growing out of that relationship, which is defined by humble listening, is a proper lifestyle ("obey the LORD's commands"). Notice that obedience to God's laws is for the good of the person who obeys.

Deut. 10:16

It is so easy to allow circumstances to harden our hearts; it's natural for us to respond to difficulties with stubbornness and rebellion. But here we are asked to keep our hearts soft and our ears open to God. God desires to communicate with us; we need to listen and then follow through.

Deut. 11:1

Obedience to God's instructions comes as a result of our love relationship with him. Love for God is a major motivating force in our obedience to the civil, ceremonial, and moral obligations he requests of us. Our love and obedience should be a natural response to the love he has shown to us.

Deut. 11:16-17

If we are nurturing sinful thoughts and practices, we should expect God's anger. These verses should challenge us to honestly examine our lives to determine those areas that are out of line with God's revealed moral will. God's wrath is not a thing to be taken lightly. But if we are willing to change with his help, his grace is more than sufficient to help us overcome our sinful thoughts and deeds.

Deut. 12:4-5

A place of worship was essential to the well-being of God's Old Testament people. The Tabernacle and the Jerusalem Temple of later times provided that place. It is important for God's people to be able to worship him. The encouragement that can be found by meeting with other believers to worship God will help us preserve spiritual gains.

Deut. 12:32

When all else fails, follow the directions. So often we attempt to accomplish God's work in our own way and in our own strength. It is quite possible to do the right thing in the wrong way. We are to follow God's directions, all of God's directions, and nothing but God's directions. Do it God's way. That is the divine prescription for physical, emotional, and spiritual health.

Deut. 13:1-5

This warning about false prophets is as important today as it was in ancient times. We all know of individuals who have gained a wide following but whose teachings do not measure up to the truth of God's Word. As we seek spiritual growth, we need to measure the teachings we choose to live by against God's truth revealed in the Bible.

Deut. 14:1-2

As children of God, we need to stand out from the world; we need to be different. We begin by realizing that everything in our lives belongs to God. And because God is holy, our lives should be characterized by holiness in all things. We need to reflect on our lives, seeking to align them with his commands.

Deut. 15:16-18

At first glance, these verses seem to have little to do with us. But the servant who serves first out of necessity and then out of devotion is similar to us and the way we relate to God, our Master. As new believers, our obedience is often given simply because it is required. But as we mature in our walk with God, our obedience grows out of our love for him. We soon come to realize that everything that God requires of us is for our own good. Perhaps we need to consider the vow of the perpetual slave mentioned in the New Testament (Romans 6:15-23).

Deut. 15:19

The Israelites were to give the first of any profit they received to God. Likewise, we, too, must give God the first of our resources, which includes both time and money. This shows that we are aware that God is the source of all that we have and that everything belongs to him.

Deut. 16:1-8

When God delivered the Israelites from Egypt, he brought them out with signs and wonders. The final plague resulted in the death of all of Egypt's firstborn sons. But God spared the firstborn sons of the Israelites by "passing over" the homes of those who had placed blood over their doors. From then on God required that the Israelites give a sacrifice in place of all their firstborn sons. This was a constant reminder of how God had spared their children. This should also remind us that we have graciously been “passed over” for punishment. God gave the sacrifice of his firstborn Son, Jesus Christ, so we could be free of sin and its terrible consequences.

Deut. 16:9-12

The Festival of Harvest, or Pentecost, was a season of great joy among God’s people. It came near the beginning of the harvest season and was a time of commemoration and rejoicing, celebrating the gifts that God had given. It was also a time of fellowship, feasting, and sharing God’s gifts with those in need. God ordained festivals so people would remember his deeds and be encouraged together. We also need the fellowship of God’s people to assist us as we seek spiritual renewal. We need to learn to join with others for mutual encouragement and celebration of what God has done for us.

Deut. 17:8-13

Submission to authority is a concept that is largely lost in our culture, but it is consistent with biblical teaching. God is our supreme authority. The Bible also mentions other authority structures that will support strong relationships and an orderly community. All of us are to be submissive to God. Wives and husbands are to be submissive to each other; children to parents; employees to employers; church members to elders, etc.

Deut. 18:9-12

Beware of the occult. Many people think they can dabble in the occult without doing any harm, least of all to themselves. The Bible, however, condemns these activities in no uncertain terms. Mark this well: Meaningful spiritual or emotional growth is impossible for anyone who is taking part in occult activities.

Deut. 19:14

It is important to God that we respect the property of others. This verse forbids the moving of landmarks, specifically addressing the issue of real estate rights. Physical landmarks are an important kind of personal boundary. As we relate to others, we need to be sure that we respect the legitimate boundaries that they set up, physical or emotional. As we reflect honestly on our lives, looking to confess our wrongs, we should pay close attention to this boundary issue. In what ways have we trespassed wrongly in other people's lives?

Deut. 19:21

This is the famous lex talionis: "Life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth." It is the simplest form of the law of retribution. Given this kind of context, the task of restoring relationship with God and others would be virtually impossible. According to this form of law, all the wrongs we have ever committed would have to be committed against us for our guilt to be done away with. How wonderful that God has provided his Son to take the punishment on our behalf. Our spiritual renewal and restoration of relationships can only take place in the environment of grace that has been created by the work of Jesus Christ.

Deut. 20:1

“Do not be afraid!” This great and encouraging imperative appears often in the Bible. It has occurred dozens of times in this book, and here in the context of enemies it seems particularly significant. Even as we face impossible odds, we should not fear. God is able to accomplish his will for us against all odds.

Deut. 21:18-21

Rebellious children are heartbreaking to their parents. Even when parents do the best they can, some children still refuse to adhere to God’s standards of conduct. In such cases, the Old Testament law commanded this drastic measure. This law reveals how much God desires that children respect and obey their parents. He desires that the proper authority structures in our family be established early so such radical measures are not necessary.

Deut. 22:5

One of the ugliest results of sin in our times is the confusion of sex roles. The Bible is unequivocal on this point: Don’t reverse sex roles. Men, rejoice in your maleness. Women, celebrate your femaleness. Be the sexual gender God intended you to be—in your appearance, in your clothing, and in your thinking. Outside of these parameters, meaningful spiritual growth is impossible.

Deut. 22:13-30

The home is of vital concern to God. He cares about marital faithfulness and purity. He spells out all of these regulations to demonstrate that the marriage relationship is of great and holy importance. God's pattern for marriage is clear. Marital fidelity is essential for establishing strong families whose members are characterized by maturity and wholeness.

Deut. 23:17-18

In these verses, prostitution is singled out for special condemnation. The bounds of marriage are the only valid context for sexual activity. In our society, sex outside of marriage has become an accepted practice. Sexual purity is often considered something to be embarrassed about. Healthy marriages must be founded upon trust, which is based upon sexual purity. If we have failed in this area, there is forgiveness and hope for restoration, although the consequences of our sin may never truly be overcome.

Deut. 23:21-23

Being trustworthy is an absolute necessity for building healthy relationships. All enduring relationships are built on trust. When we make promises, we must learn to keep them—even at great inconvenience to ourselves.

Deut. 24:1-4

Some might view this regulation as proof that God supports divorce. On the contrary, God hates divorce (Malachi 2:16).

Regulations like this were given to put controls on this unsatisfactory solution for disunity in marriage. We may have experienced the pain of divorce. Even though God hates divorce, however, he loves us. We can rest assured that God's grace is sufficient for our needs.

Deut. 27:15-26

Ultimately, sin never goes unpunished. God considers disobedience of such great importance that he even spells out its consequences. Like a loving father, he warns us of what will happen if we choose a sinful course of action. But even negative passages like this remind us that God only wants our best. He wants us to obey because disobedience can only bring us suffering. This should encourage us to follow God's pattern for holy living.

Deut. 28:1-6

These verses reveal the one essential requirement for God's blessings—obedience. We are to obey God and his commandments. Notice that there are considerable rewards for obedience. We must seek to know God's will for us and then do it, and we will find God's will laid out for us in his Word, the Bible. We should also ask the Holy Spirit to show us areas where we are not obeying God's Word.

Deut. 28:15-68

Just as obedience results in God's blessing, disobedience brings God's curse. We need to discover what God's requirements are; then we must follow God's plan in humble obedience. This passage outlines many of the negative consequences that result from disobeying God's plan. We would be wise to take this warning to heart.

Deut. 28:66-67

These verses graphically depict a life devoid of satisfaction. This person dreads both the night and the day. When it is dark, he wishes for light. When it is light, he wishes for dark. This is one of the inevitable consequences of rejecting God's plan for healthy living. There is no lasting satisfaction outside of a real relationship with God and obedience to his will. Seeking God's will and following it without reservation are essential.

Deut. 29:29

God does not hold us responsible for what we do not know, but he makes it clear that we are responsible for what we do know. And this is not to say that God condones ignorance of his revealed Word; rather, we are required to be aware of its instructions. As we seek out God's will in Scripture and follow it with his gracious help, we will grow in spiritual maturity.

Deut. 30:1

The Israelites were commanded to meditate on God's will for them. They were to recognize that both blessings and curses came from his hand as a response to their obedience or disobedience. We should do the same. If we don't, we are only hiding from the truth.

Deut. 30:2-3

God offered this gracious message to his people who were living in defeat: Repent and be restored. Even though they had strayed from God, all they needed to do was to return and obey. Our wholehearted repentance brings God's wholehearted forgiveness. With God, it is never too late to make a new start.

Deut. 30:15

In these verses, God lays out a clear choice for his people. On one hand there is life and prosperity. On the other is death and adversity. Choosing God and his way leads to godly living and spiritual renewal. Choosing against God leads to destruction and death. The clear consequences should make the choice easy.

Deut. 30:19

Again God urged his people to choose life. We are reminded here of the claim of Jesus Christ: "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one can come to the Father except through me" (John 14:6). We are urged to choose life. We do this by seeking God and his gracious forgiveness through Jesus Christ. Notice also that our decision is important not only for us but also for our children. Let's make the choice for life and encourage our children to choose this abundant life as well.

Deut. 31:3

The Israelites were on the verge of entering the Promised Land. They needed a fresh reminder of God's strength and a promise of victory. Some may have been putting their confidence in Joshua. Others may have been depending on the strength of their armies. But no matter how strong we or our leaders might be, victory comes from God alone. Some enemies are too great for us. Our resources, though helpful, will never be adequate apart from God's help. We must learn to trust God alone, for he is greater than any of the enemies we might face.

Deut. 31:23

This verse contains an important message for rebuilders. In spite of the difficulty of the task, we are told, "Be strong and courageous!" The basis for this strength and courage is the marvelous promise "I will be with you." As we face difficult tasks, we can find strength and courage in this message. Our God is a God who specializes in overcoming giant challenges (see 1 Samuel 17).

Deut. 32:3-4

An important part of spiritual growth is learning to worship God, and an important part of worship is praise. In these verses Moses takes the time to praise God for who he is—great, glorious, strong, perfect, just, faithful, and holy. We also need to take the time to rejoice in who God is and praise him for his greatness. He is the Rock, our foundation for a stable life. His work in our life is perfect. We need to recognize God's ability to help and then ask him to do his mighty work on our behalf.

Deut. 32:11-13

As we seek spiritual growth, we need to be assured of God's protection and guidance. These precious verses from Moses' song should offer just the certainty we need. As we seek him, God will protect us and guide us toward a life filled with joy and freedom.

Deut. 33:29

Here is another promise of God's saving help. He fights on behalf of his people and defends them against their enemies. He assures them of ultimate victory. When our lives are in disarray, it is comforting to know that God has genuine concern for our welfare. And as we seek God and surrender to him, we can be sure that he is on our side.

Josh. 1:1-9

Joshua may have been devastated by the death of Moses, a close friend, mentor, and father figure. But he was immediately thrust into a leadership role for which he undoubtedly felt unworthy and unprepared. How could Joshua ever fill the shoes of the man who had talked to God face to face? (Exodus 33:11). Joshua dared not show fear before the people, or they would have lost confidence in his ability to lead them to victory. He needed to demonstrate a bold obedience to God's commands in order to ensure success. Joshua was able to do this because he was willing to seek God and surrender to him.

Josh. 1:10-15

In his new role as commander in chief of Israel's armies, Joshua commanded his subordinates to prepare their people for the new and difficult venture that lay before them. He then reminded the Reubenites, Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh of their promise to Moses to fight side by side with their fellow Israelites until all the land had been conquered (see Numbers 32:1-32). Joshua was understandably concerned to find out whether they would stand with the main body of the people or defect from them. If they defected, war might have broken out, or at the very least, discouragement might have set in among the rest of the people of Israel. We need to continue to guard ourselves against discouragement as well, so that our spiritual growth will not be stifled.

Josh. 2:1-7

Joshua wisely determined to discover the strength of his enemies, the people of the city of Jericho, before setting out to encounter them in battle (see Luke 14:31-32). Rahab, a prostitute and citizen of Jericho, also made a wise decision when she took a stand for the God of Israel by assisting and protecting the spies sent by Joshua. Rahab displayed courage when she turned away from the security and praise of the world she knew and risked following the true God, of whom she knew little. It always takes courage to make changes in our lives, especially when those changes take us into the unknown.

Josh. 2:8-14

Rahab willingly surrendered to the God of Israel. She and her people saw no way of escape from the certain doom that was coming. Instead of making a futile attempt to escape, Rahab sought mercy from the only source of help available. We, too, must recognize that we cannot escape God's impending judgment of our sin. Our only hope is to seek mercy from God, who is more than willing to grant this through his Son, Jesus Christ.

Josh. 2:15-21

Rahab completed her task of helping the spies by providing them with a rope, a window hidden from sight, and a plan (hide for three days in the hills until it is safe) for their safe return to their people. The spies, in turn, established the ground rules of responsibility for Rahab and her family. They outlined the specific requirements of the relationship and the rewards for success or punishments for failure. Rahab is an excellent example of how God can use each of us, no matter how terrible our past or how unworthy we may feel.

Josh. 3:1-6

These were anxious times for Joshua and the people. They set out on their trek to the Promised Land but then had to delay their entrance into the land for three full days while their leaders gave them instructions. Those instructions dealt with both the physical and spiritual realms. The people were commanded (1) to remain approximately a half mile behind the Ark of the Covenant when the priests carried it (i.e., they were not to try to run ahead of God but were to receive their direction from him) and (2) to dedicate themselves to God (i.e., they were to commit themselves to obeying him). No doubt it was as difficult then as it is now to follow God's plan rather than rebel and go our own way.

Josh. 3:7-14

God would drive out the enemies of Israel if the Israelites were obedient to him. Furthermore, in order for the people to see the power of God at work, the priests, acting by faith, had to carry the Ark of the Covenant and step into the Jordan River. Would God leave Joshua looking foolish, or would God act in the way he had promised? Joshua did not doubt God and had the priests stand in the river. The Jordan River was at flood stage and hence extremely dangerous, if not impossible, to cross without God's help. Often God places us at a point where we must either stand for him or show that we don't really trust him.

If we trust in God, we can be sure that he will never disappoint us.

Josh. 4:1-7

The priests faithfully remained standing in the riverbed until the entire nation of Israelites had crossed into the Promised Land. Joshua, at the command of God, then sent 12 men back to the place where the priests were standing. Those men were to collect one stone per tribe to set up as a memorial that would remind them, their children, and their children's children of what God had done on their behalf as they moved into the Promised Land. The stones would serve as a visible reminder of God's great power should the people ever become discouraged when they faced powerful enemies in the future. As God grants us maturity in our spiritual journey, we ought to establish reminders, or monuments, of God's presence with us.

Josh. 4:8-14

Joshua took a direct interest in remembering the greatness of God and honoring the faith of the priests by personally erecting the permanent memorial in the middle of the river. And at the end of the crossing, God raised Joshua to a new status in the eyes of the people—he was honored in the same way that his predecessor Moses had been. Sometimes it helps to commemorate events in which God provided a way when everything appeared hopeless. Then we can reflect on our monuments to God's faithfulness when we encounter times of doubt.

Josh. 4:15-24

Israel's leaders set up a monument to God at Gilgal with the stones from the Jordan River. Joshua explained that this would serve as a reminder of the miracle God had done—the drying up of the flooded Jordan River. This miracle was reminiscent of the way God delivered Israel 40 years earlier when he let the Jews cross the Red Sea on dry ground (see Exodus 14). We must remember that God is all-powerful and cares for us. Knowing that God has rescued us in the past can help us trust in his ability to save us today.

Josh. 5:1-9

Although the Amorites admitted they were helpless before the God of Israel, they did not turn to him for help. The people of Israel, however, took steps to ensure that their relationship with God was as it should be. In an act of obedience, the Israelites circumcised all the males among them, thereby removing the shame of their uncircumcision. Fortunately, we do not have to go through a physical cutting to be rid of our shame. But we do have to go through the painful process of acknowledging our failures and asking God to remove the shame from us. This process can be so painful that we are tempted to hide our shame rather than ask God to remove it.

Josh. 5:10-12

Here we find the Israelites celebrating the Passover—a remembrance of God's deliverance of his people from Egypt 40 years earlier. This undoubtedly bolstered the Israelites' faith as they faced the many battles ahead. We are told that God's miraculous provision of manna was stopped at this time. Now that the Israelites owned a productive land, they no longer needed food from heaven. This was a reminder that God would provide his people with what they needed in various ways, depending on the circumstances, and they would have to trust him to act in various ways in the future. God works with us in different ways at varying stages of our spiritual development. All too often we resent God for not continuing to treat us as newborns in the faith. When life isn't easy, it is not a sign of abandonment by God. It is a sign that he is ready for us to grow in wisdom and faith. God often calls us to struggle in order to grow.

Josh. 5:13-15

Note two important considerations regarding the identity of the commander of the Lord's army: (1) He allowed Joshua to bow down in reverence before him, and (2) the place where he stood was considered to be holy ground (compare Exodus 3:1-6). This "new" commander, therefore, was more than a man and more than a mere angel; he was none other than God himself. When Joshua recognized who the stranger was, he quickly deferred all claims of leadership to him. Like Joshua, each of us needs to relinquish control of our lives to God. It is never too late to acknowledge God's lordship over us and to ask him to lead us in life's battles.

Josh. 6:1-14

Israel was ready to attack, but God told them to wait. God required his people to do something that on the surface appeared to be very foolish. They were commanded to march around the city, day after day. The Israelites obeyed God and persisted in their faith, not fully understanding how God would destroy the walls of Jericho. If there are seemingly unbreakable barriers to our spiritual growth, God can make those barriers come crumbling down, allowing us to be victorious. But we need to do things his way, even if we don't always understand why.

Josh. 6:15-21

Once more Israel had to wait. The seventh day, on the verge of initiating the attack, the people of Israel were required to march seven times around the city. They were also prohibited from enjoying the spoils of victory, which were to be dedicated to God—they were not to steal from God. Finally Israel was given the go-ahead. In obedience to God, they pressed the attack and secured the victory, destroying their enemies completely. Learning to wait on God is part of growing toward maturity in our faith. God calls us to trust him, especially when every urge is to move ahead without delay.

Josh. 6:22-25

Joshua remembered the promise his spies had made to Rahab the prostitute. He commanded his men to fulfill that promise and provide safe passage for her and those with her. Following the total destruction of Jericho, Rahab and her relatives began a new life with Israel because they had served God by protecting the spies. God's provision for Rahab should be significant to each of us. He honored her faith and obedience.

Since Rahab was a prostitute, God obviously wasn't honoring her for being sinless. Rahab is a bold reminder that we should come to God as we are rather than try to fix ourselves before we come.

Josh. 7:1-9

The Israelites grew overconfident from their victory over Jericho and proceeded to attack the small city of Ai without first consulting God. Their small force was soundly defeated because God was angry at Israel for the sin of Achan. Israel as a whole became utterly demoralized. Even Joshua became discouraged and complained to God, blaming him for their loss. We must be careful not to take back control of our lives once we have turned them over to God. Our call is to submit our entire lives to his control.

Josh. 7:10-12

Here God displays his anger with Joshua, chastising him for complaining and for not having completely rid the people of their sin. The people needed to realize that victory was impossible for those who disobeyed God. We also must realize that our sins don't affect us alone. Our families and friends are also affected by our choices and our lifestyles. Rather than hide in shame, God wants us to confess our mistakes to each other. Only then will we be able to overcome the sin in our lives.

Once Achan was identified as the guilty party, he confessed his sin, but his confession came too late. Had he confessed earlier, he might have prevented the Israelite defeat and the death of his family members. After having Achan and his family stoned to death, Joshua erected another monument of stones (see 4:9, 20). This monument, however, was not to commemorate God's great power of deliverance but to serve as a reminder that the sin of one person can negatively affect the well-being of many people. If we are to learn from our mistakes, we must remember not only the result but also what led us to turn away from God.

Josh. 8:1-9

Once again God gave Joshua detailed plans to follow. In line with this guidance, Joshua used his God-given reasoning to assess the situation and develop a detailed strategy for defeating his enemies. For such a plan to be successful, the soldiers had to exercise discipline and self-control, attacking only when the enemy was most vulnerable. Thus, by using God's methods, Joshua and his people demonstrated that they had learned from their defeat and had grown spiritually. God's plans often require discipline and self-control. These character traits are attained through work and struggle.

Josh. 8:10-23

The Israelites executed God's plan exactly as he gave it to them. Joshua relied on God in the midst of the battle, and God gave the Israelites victory. When our desires, urges, and impulses lead us away from God, it may help to remember that Joshua's faith in God did not make life free from battles. The battles were to be fought and won through continued reliance on God. Like Joshua, we need to persevere with God's strength and resist the tendency to run from our own personal battles.

Josh. 8:24-35

After the Israelites' great victory, the people built a monument to God and erected an altar to him at Mount Ebal. At that time, Joshua had the words of the law, the blessings and curses, read to the people to remind them of how God expected them to act in the Promised Land. In setting limits on our own behavior, we tend either to make them too rigid or not to develop limits at all. Today, just as in Joshua's day, God's Word provides us with the guidance we need.

Josh. 9:1-15

Frightened by the success of Israel over Jericho and Ai, the kings of the southern coastal regions formed a coalition to attack Israel. The Gibeonites, however, took a different tactic. Recognizing their helplessness before Israel, they wisely but deceptively sought peace. By establishing a peace treaty, they avoided becoming Israel's next victims. The Israelites, however, failed to investigate the Gibeonite situation thoroughly and seek God's guidance in the matter. As a result, they entered into a covenant that was a violation of the command of God (see Exodus 23:31-33). We must always examine the agreements we make and the relationships we form. We must ask whether God would approve of them at this particular time. A seemingly right relationship at the wrong time will always produce ungodly results.

Josh. 9:16-27

The leaders of Israel accepted their mistake and honored God by adhering to the conditions of the treaty. Likewise, the Gibeonites, who had confessed their deception, willingly accepted the consequences of their actions and exchanged their freedom for their lives, becoming servants of Israel. We are all aware that some decisions last a lifetime. Surrendering to God involves giving up our attempts to save our own lives. We need to remember that our decision to live in God's will offers more freedom than the apparent freedom of going our own way.

Josh. 10:1-11

The troubles associated with the undesirable treaty with Gibeon were compounded—Israel now had to fight on behalf of the Gibeonites. Israel accepted its obligation, and God promised Israel victory over all five kings. Although Joshua achieved success, his real victory came from God. God killed more of the enemy with hailstones than the entire Israelite army did with their weapons. If we examine our accomplishments, we will find that while we were working so hard, God was preparing a way that allowed us to do more than we could ever have done alone. It is the fool who believes that all he is and has is due to his own effort and ability. Acknowledging God's hand in our past accomplishments allows us to hold onto his hand more firmly in the face of future challenges.

Josh. 10:12-15

Joshua's faith was rewarded by God's action. Joshua prayed that God would supernaturally provide additional daylight hours to press the battle on to complete victory over the Amorite nation. God responded to Joshua's prayer by causing the sun and the moon to keep their respective positions in the sky until God himself claimed victory for Israel. For centuries, unbelievers have tried to explain away this miraculous example of God's divine intervention in the lives of his people. Our human nature drives us to find an explanation outside of God's power. We tend to explain away the times when God miraculously intervenes in our personal lives. God does not call us to be ignorant, but we must be careful that we do not allow intellect to rob us of faith.

Josh. 10:29-42

Joshua led the people from city to city and from victory to victory. With each day came new success as enemy after enemy was defeated. Each battle was fought in accordance with the commands of God. We see that no enemy will ever prove to be too strong for God. If God could handle these great armies, he will certainly be able to handle our personal problems. We can see him work as we daily submit to his plan. Often we do not experience victory over our struggles because after some initial progress, we stop the journey with God and go into battle alone, under our own power. Instead, we should always look to God and eagerly receive all the victories he has planned for us.

Josh. 11:1-9

Once again the situation looked hopeless for Joshua and Israel. Yet one more time God reminded Joshua that he should act boldly because he, God, would accomplish the seemingly impossible. So Joshua and his troops obeyed God and courageously attacked when the enemy least expected it. God, as he promised, gave Israel the victory. When the situations we face seem hopeless, we can look back to the example of Joshua and his people. God prevailed even when the prospects for victory were bleak. God has not changed. His power to take what we have and do great things with it continues and far exceeds whatever we could do or imagine.

Josh. 11:16-22

Entering new territories in the Promised Land was not easy. Over a prolonged period of time there were constant battles that pitted the people of Israel against enemies who were entrenched in the land. Some of these enemies were the Anakim, the giants who had frightened the spies Moses sent into the land (see Numbers 13:25–14:25). By God's power, however, Israel conquered its worst fears. Whatever we fear the most today is easily handled by God's power. It is truly incredible that it takes so long for us to realize what is so obvious: God has the power to turn defeat into victory, producing maximum results from minimal faith and obedience.

Josh. 12:1-24

Recounting God's great works in the past was a constant practice of the Israelite people. In this instance, not only did they recall the victories of their present leader, Joshua, but also those of their previous leader, Moses. These recollections of victories served both as reminders of the great works God had done and as springboards for trusting God to act on Israel's behalf in future times of difficulty as well. We can become living reminders of the great things that can be realized through God's strength.

Josh. 13:1

Despite Joshua's advanced age, God placed additional challenges before him. Retirement from doing God's will is not an option. We are called to follow God's will throughout our lives until God's time for us to stop "fighting the good fight" and rest finally arrives (2 Timothy 4:6-8).

Josh. 13:8-13

Moving from south to north on the east side of the Jordan River, representative cities of the inheritances promised by Moses to Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh are listed. In the midst of this list, however, a lack of faithfulness is indicated: Israel failed to trust God sufficiently to drive out the Geshurites and the Maacathites. Even though we are tempted to blame God when things don't turn out, we should look first at where our faith has failed rather than at where we think God has failed.

Josh. 13:15-32

So that no one could mistakenly believe that God did not give the tribes east of the Jordan an inheritance equal to that of the tribes living in the Promised Land, a detailed listing of the territories granted to the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh is offered here. Even though these tribes were physically separated from their fellow Israelites west of the Jordan, they were not to be separated spiritually. In discouraging times when we only see problems, it can be helpful to make a detailed list of what God has provided for each of us. As we become aware of our many gifts from God, it becomes more and more difficult to be disheartened over temporary inconveniences. The God who provided the blessings of yesterday is there for us today.

Josh. 14:1-5

The leaders of Israel did not forget God's command given by Moses but were obedient to it, resulting in the total and proper apportionment of the Promised Land. As it was for the Levites who settled on the east side of the Jordan, so it was also for those Levites who served God in the Promised Land—they received no specific territory for an inheritance—God himself was their inheritance. God, however, did not leave them homeless to roam the countryside but gave them cities in which to live and pasturelands to manage. What a great reminder to us as we compare ourselves with others. When we focus on what we have or don't have, we often forget that our greatest inheritance is God.

Josh. 14:6-15

Advanced physical age did not deter Caleb from seeking the inheritance promised to him by God as a reward for his faith when he served under Moses as a spy in the Promised Land (see Numbers 14:24). Age alone does not make a person feel or act old. In fact, Caleb willingly sought to enter into battle against some of the more powerful armies that inhabited the land. Because he trusted God fully, Caleb succeeded in securing his promised inheritance. We need to continue to realize that in our own lives, if God wants to grant us victory over any problem we encounter, that victory is already secured.

Josh. 15:20-63

Of all the tribes who received an inheritance, the greatest amount of information concerning any tribe's inheritance was recorded for Judah. The importance of the tribe of Judah may account for this phenomenon. Judah was chosen to be the son from whom future kings of Israel would arise and through whose lineage the Messiah would be born (see Genesis 49:10). Merely being part of such an important tribe, however, did not guarantee either faith or success. Despite God's promise of victory to those who obeyed him fully (see Deuteronomy 28:1-7), some of the tribe of Judah apparently lacked sufficient faith in God to oust the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Today, we should consider what areas of our lives are inhabited by thoughts or actions that are enemies of God's will. As we honestly identify these, confess them to God, and accept responsibility for not dealing with them, God can give us the power to drive them out so that we can receive our full inheritance.

Josh. 16:1-10

A godly person's descendants often reap numerous benefits from that person's life. Because Joseph had been used by God to deliver his father, Jacob, and his family from a famine that could have destroyed them, Jacob honored Joseph by "adopting" Joseph's two sons (Ephraim and Manasseh) and making them equal in status to Jacob's own sons (Genesis 48:1-5). Thus, of the 12 sons of Jacob, Joseph's lineage was granted the privilege of being considered two tribes for the purpose of receiving an inheritance. Our faith and the life we develop around our faith will have ramifications for our family in many generations to come. There is no greater inheritance than to have lived a life of faith in prayerful submission to God.

Josh. 17:1-6

The daughters of Zelophehad demonstrated true faith in God, believing that God would fulfill his promise of an inheritance to them. They based their confidence on an earlier ruling by Moses (which ultimately had come from God) that gave to them their father's inheritance in light of the fact that he had no sons to receive it (Numbers 27:1-7). The faith of Zelophehad's daughters thus was rewarded with land. God is the rewarder of faith. The reward may not always come in the form of land or possessions, but it will come in forms that far exceed the temporal values of material goods.

Josh. 17:14-18

Even though they did not trust God enough to drive out all of their enemies and secure all of the land of their inheritance (see 16:10; 17:12-13), the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh complained that they did not have enough land in which to live. They also complained that the enemies living in the land of their inheritance were too strong for them to defeat. Joshua generously granted them their request for additional land but at the same time challenged them to fulfill their responsibility to drive out the Canaanites. The erosion of God's best always occurs when our will interferes with his. We come to believe we know so much and then recklessly destroy what God has provided. We must seek God, his will, and his power. If we do not, we may spend a lifetime compensating for mistakes made outside of his will.

Josh. 18:1-10

Despite a general rest from war, the various tribes of Israel had not yet claimed their inheritance. Joshua chided them for their failure to lay hold of that which God had apportioned to them. Joshua then gave practical guidance as to how the remaining tribes should divide up the land. The tribes who earlier had not aggressively claimed their inheritance finally took action and followed Joshua's advice. Sometimes we need to be spurred to action by others. Maybe we don't have the courage to act—or perhaps we don't realize that we need to. But we should listen to the advice of wise leaders, recognizing that they can see our situation more objectively than we can.

Josh. 19:1-16

Carved out from the southern sector of the boundaries of Judah, which previously had received more land than it required (see 15:1-62), the inheritance of the tribe of Simeon formed the southern border of the Promised Land. Although several cities were transferred from Judah to Simeon, none of those cities were taken away from Caleb and his family. By contrast, Zebulun's inheritance was in the northern region of the Promised Land, a region that one day would be the site of the hometown of the Messiah (i.e., Nazareth; see Matthew 2:23). There must have been tremendous temptation to compare each tribe's inheritance rather than to see each allotment as ordained by God. True faith frees us to accept God's provision as perfectly planned for us, whether it seems great or small.

Josh. 19:24-39

Neither Asher nor Naphtali was successful in driving out their enemies (see Judges 1:31-33). Failing to clear the land of all the nations dwelling in the Promised Land proved costly for the Israelite people. Rather than converting to God those whom they failed to destroy, the people of Israel were drawn away from God to serve the idols of those heathen nations. Those nations, in turn, would become like thorns in Israel's side (see Deuteronomy 31:16-20; Judges 2:1-3, 11-15). It is essential that we, too, drive out the negative influences in our lives so that we and those who come after us will be better able to follow God.

Josh. 19:49-50

Here we see that Joshua was permitted to select a city for his inheritance. He could have chosen any city in the Promised Land, but he chose to live within the territory of Ephraim, the tribe from which he had come (see Numbers 13:8, 16). Joshua remembered his roots and honored them with his decision. We lose our way when we forget where we've come from. Although our family heritage is not perfect, we can celebrate what is good about it and honor God in doing so.

Josh. 21:1-8

The Levites patiently waited for the other tribes to receive their inheritance before reminding Eleazar and Joshua of God's command that as their inheritance, the Levites were to receive from the tribes of Israel towns in which to live (see Numbers 35:1-8). Israel, in obedience to God's command, fulfilled its responsibility to God and to the tribe of Levi. Acting responsibly toward others brings honor not only to them and ourselves but to God as well.

Josh. 21:43-45

God accomplished for the people of Israel all that he said he would do. The Israelites, for their part, had marched into and taken the land for their possession, so God gave them rest from their enemies. Furthermore, whenever the people served God faithfully and were obedient to his commands, he conquered even the most powerful of their enemies. Israel's problems arose only when they committed acts of sin against God or failed to act courageously in faith. Today, each of us faces the same challenge to remain faithful. The Israelites are profound examples of the need to continue to seek God and surrender to him.

Joshua declared that the tribes east of the Jordan had faithfully fulfilled their responsibilities. They had delayed enjoying their own reward so that their brothers could receive what God had promised to them. Joshua then reminded them that they were always to love and obey God. Although there was much sorrow at leaving their kinsmen who lived west of the Jordan, there undoubtedly was also much joy for the Reubenites, Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, since they were finally going home to their families. As they crossed the Jordan, the eastern tribes set up a monument to remind them of their kinship with the western tribes and of their loyalty to God.

Josh. 22:10-20

Outraged that the tribes east of the Jordan had apparently so quickly turned away from the God of their fathers and set up another altar of worship, the tribes living in the Promised Land prepared to go to war against their kinsmen. Before war broke out, however, wisdom prevailed, and a delegation was sent by the tribes living in the land to challenge the trans-Jordan tribes to return to God. The delegation boldly confronted their brothers, reminding them of the consequences of past rebellions against God (see 7:1-26; Numbers 25:1-9) and offering to let these tribes live with them in the Promised Land. Though it is often difficult and painful, at times we must confront others so that all of us can maintain our faith. This is why spiritual growth is never an individual process; others must be involved to both encourage and confront.

The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh responded in amazement. They explained their actions in order to reestablish their immediate relationship with the rest of Israel. Their actions had been taken to ensure that future generations would know that the tribes east of the Jordan also worshiped the one true God of Israel. In this case, confrontation was effective. Even though it does not always bring the desired response, it is an important part of our spiritual growth process.

Josh. 22:30-34

The leaders of the delegation of Israel listened carefully to the words of their brothers. As a result, the western leaders changed their attitude toward the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh from anger to reconciliation and joy. The leaders then praised God for the faithfulness of their eastern brothers and declared peace, thus averting the potential civil war. The east-bank altar thereafter was referred to as “Witness” because it was a reminder to the people there that the Lord was their God as well. The objective of confrontation always needs to be loving reconciliation, even though that may not always be the outcome.

Josh. 23:1-7

Joshua reminded the Israelites that the God of Israel was the one who had given them all their victories, that all of the Promised Land had been apportioned as God had said it would be, and that God would continue to defeat Israel’s enemies so that his people would live at peace in the land. The people of Israel, therefore, were never to forsake God or turn to the gods of the nations living within the land. The Israelites' walk with God was ongoing, just like our own spiritual transformation.

Josh. 23:8-13

Joshua continued to challenge the Israelites to maintain a strong faith in God, always remembering that God had accomplished a great work in defeating the powerful nations of the land on Israel's behalf. God gives more than enough courage and strength to succeed against all odds. In return, his people are to love him with full commitment, knowing that if they turn away from the one true God to other gods, God will no longer fight on their side. Each one of us will be tempted to turn our lives over to a god that appears to immediately gratify our urges. But God provides a way out of this temptation by clearly stating that failure is always preceded by faithless acts. If we want success, we must seek the only true God and surrender our lives to him.

Josh. 23:14-16

Joshua spoke of reality: God had not failed Israel in the past. All that God said he would do, he did, and all of Israel knew that to be a fact. Joshua then issued a warning to the people. Just as God blessed them because of their acts of obedience, as he had promised, so, too, would he judge them harshly if they broke their covenant with him and worshiped other gods. In fact, if they were disobedient to God, he would not hesitate even to drive them from the Promised Land, the land he had fought to give them. In a loving relationship, others will hold us accountable for our actions, not because they want to "get" us, but because they want what is best for us.

Josh. 24:1-13

Speaking on behalf of God, Joshua declared that everything of lasting value that had been done for Israel had been accomplished by God alone. What greater evidence do we need than this account of God's strength and the results that come from acting faithfully to achieve his will? Joshua's story is not unique. Each of us is a testimony either to what God can do when we are faithful or to the tragedy that occurs when we are not.

Josh. 24:14-18

Joshua concluded by challenging the people to serve the true God and reject the gods their ancestors foolishly served beyond the Euphrates River and in Egypt. He then mockingly suggested that if the people were so unwise as to not worship the God of Israel as the only true God, then they should choose to serve either the gods of the Euphrates region or the gods of those heathen nations living in the Promised Land. Joshua and his family, however, would serve the God of Israel. The people responded positively to Joshua's challenge and declared their undying commitment to the one true God. Each day we make decisions about whom we will serve, either God or this world. May we respond as the Israelites did and declare the Lord as our God.

Josh. 24:19-28

Joshua knew that God is holy, and he also was aware of the sinful tendencies of the Israelites. So he compelled the people to proclaim once again that they would follow God and that their words would be an eternal witness to their decision. To cement that commitment, Joshua, who had been a rock of faith before God throughout his life, recognized the importance of leaving one more permanent stone memorial as a reminder to the greatness and faithfulness of God. A record of our decision to follow God, noting specific times we surrendered our lives to him, can be helpful to us in times of temptation. It can remind us that we were serious in our decision and that we are responsible for our actions.

Josh. 24:29-33

Several great men of Israel had died—Moses, prior to Israel's entry into the Promised Land, and now, after the completion of the initial phase of Israel's conquest, Joshua and Eleazar the priest. How would the Israelites now react to the death of Joshua, who left them without an apparent successor? They responded by serving God. They also demonstrated their commitment to God by burying Joseph's bones in the Promised Land as a testimony to his faith and to God's faithfulness to his people (see Genesis 50:25; Exodus 13:19; Hebrews 11:22). We might ask ourselves this question: Would someone burying our bones do so as a testimony to our faith—or our faithlessness? If it is faithlessness, we can change that testimony by turning to God today. If it is faith, we must persevere.

Judg. 1:1

The book of Judges gives us an idea of the courage it takes to enter new territory in life. Even though much of the Promised Land (see Genesis 15:18-21) had already been taken under Joshua, it was necessary to address the present reality of the enemies still living there. Only when the conquest was completed could Israel focus on building a new life in their new land. In the same way, it is important that we conquer and control what has mastered us in the past before we try to build a new life.

Judg. 1:19-36

The last half of this chapter shows how incomplete Israel's conquest of the Promised Land really was. God had promised to be with them and guide them in this difficult process. As they displayed courage and faith in God, he brought them numerous victories. But faltering courage and lack of perseverance stopped God's people short of their goal. We also must place our faith in God and persevere to preserve spiritual gains.

Judg. 2:1-5

The angel of the Lord stated in no uncertain terms that the foundational reason for Israel's half-completed conquest of the Promised Land was their halfhearted commitment to God. They allowed the altars of the various Canaanite peoples to remain, and those religious and moral temptations became repeated points of failure for God's people. To Israel's credit, they repented, attempting to set things right with God. No matter what we have done, we can turn to God. God will forgive us, but we must ask for that forgiveness.

Judg. 2:11-19

Here we see the cycle of short-term renewal that is echoed throughout Judges. Because of prolonged denial of their sin, the people were repeatedly oppressed by various enemies. In their misery, they admitted their need for God and cried out to him. Then God provided judges to free them from their oppressors. Tragically, it was only a matter of time before Israel made the same mistakes again. We also must rely on God, who will support our efforts, sustaining us with his gracious power. If we fall, God is waiting for our cries, and he will respond with the help we need.

Judg. 3:7-10

Notice that the rescue of Israel by Othniel was governed by the power of the Holy Spirit. As believers, we have the Holy Spirit living in us (1 Corinthians 6:19) and guiding us (Galatians 5:18). He is always there to give us direction, encouragement, and power as we face our problems.

Judg. 3:12-30

It was Ehud's distinctiveness as a left-handed warrior that made possible his assassination of Eglon, the Moabite king. Since Ehud reached for his weapon with his left hand, the king did not suspect anything. People often view their unique characteristics as liabilities rather than as assets. God has made us the way we are for a purpose. We should not complain about our differences; we should use our unique abilities to help others and to serve God. God isn't running an assembly line; he custom-builds all his people. (See 1 Corinthians 12 for a discussion of the differences among God's people.)

Judg. 4:4-9

Until this point, Deborah had served as a prophet of God in Israel. Here she was called to take part in a military campaign to overthrow the Canaanite oppressors. Though this was new ground for her, she didn't hesitate for a minute. She trusted that God would care for and direct her. Barak, however, put more trust in Deborah than in God. Because of Barak's lack of faith, God accomplished his task through another. We have the potential to assist others struggling with situations that have plagued us in the past. But if we don't demonstrate the courage to lead, God may not use us to help.

Judg. 5:7, 12, 15

In this song of victory, the role of Deborah is emphasized. Women in ancient Israel rarely rose to positions of leadership. But Deborah's courage and faith in God made her an ideal prophet. Then she was called to lead the forces of Israel against the oppressive Canaanites. What tremendous faith it must have taken for Deborah to assume this unlikely position! Victory can come even when God puts us in positions in which we are uncomfortable. We must trust God's promises to us. "Is anything too hard for the LORD?" (Genesis 18:14).

Judg. 6:11-15

Gideon responded to the message of the angel with little faith or hope. He was so used to the oppression of the Midianites that he had little confidence that things could ever be any different. Not only did Gideon view himself as weak and insignificant, he also viewed God with distrust, as being unfaithful to his covenant people. This is the typical response of a person trying to cope with terrible circumstances without relying on God. If we rely on ourselves under such conditions, we will become so worn down by continual pain that we will lose hope of ever breaking free. However, facing terrible circumstances honestly can be a good starting point. Once Gideon admitted that his situation was terrible he was ready to discover that God was able to deliver him.

Judg. 6:15-16

Gideon's response and his fear and hesitation later may have been related to feelings of inadequacy because his family was poor and he was the least in his family. God offered his power as the means of overcoming Gideon's sense of his own inadequacy. When we seek God, he may call us to accomplish great tasks—tasks that we feel inadequate to accomplish. As we confess our inadequacy, God will make us more than adequate by his power. God says that he will be with us to help us carry out whatever tasks we have been assigned. All we need to do is trust in him.

Judg. 6:22-40

Gideon's responses to God alternated between faith and fear. It took courage to build the altars to God and even to tear down the altar to Baal, the false god. Gideon also blew the trumpet of assembly for those who would fight for God. Yet his fears limited him to destroying the place of idol worship in the middle of the night and questioning God's leadership (as seen in the fleece incident). Similarly many of us will use any excuse to avoid facing what we fear. Fear is healthy; it can warn us of dangers and prompt us to be careful. But it should not stop us from doing what we know is right.

Judg. 7:1-7

Gideon's forces were already outnumbered by the enemy, but God limited their numbers even more. In the end, only three hundred men went out to fight the Midianites. From a human standpoint, this put Israel at an impossible disadvantage. But God had limited their numbers for a reason: He wanted to show Israel that his power was sufficient no matter what the odds. Undoubtedly Gideon became nervous as his army began to dwindle before his very eyes. But instead of walking out on God, he proceeded with an even stronger commitment to his plan. It is amazing how much can be accomplished with few resources and a strong commitment to God's will. When we surrender our lives to God each day, he can do more with us than with thousands of uncommitted soldiers.

Judg. 7:4-7

In further streamlining the fighting force from 10,000 to 300, God demonstrated to Gideon that he was looking for men who most consistently faced the reality of their present circumstances, keeping watch for the enemy while drinking. Facing the present reality is a key to successful spiritual growth. If we are constantly in touch with reality, we will not fall victim to sneak attacks—we will expect struggles with temptation. We can combat our problems only when we are alert.

Judg. 7:8-23

This miraculous victory reminds us that the God we serve has the power to confuse and destroy all the opposing forces that come against us. We don't have to have the power to directly confront all those who oppose our spiritual growth. Our part is to follow God's instructions. God will win the battle.

Judg. 7:24-8:3

In contrast to the anger of Ephraim's leaders, Gideon displayed great self-control and wisdom. He was willing to go to great lengths to set things straight. Self-control and wisdom are important elements of the spiritual growth process.

Judg. 8:4-21

This pursuit and execution of the Midianite kings is a striking example of perseverance on the part of Gideon. In clear contrast to the tribes of Israel who failed to finish the job of driving out the Canaanites, Gideon continued until the Midianite forces were completely defeated. He changed the previous oppressive situation completely, opening the doorway to a new life of freedom for Israel. We should follow Gideon's example of faithfulness, making certain to finish what God has called us to do.

Judg. 8:22-35

After Gideon's death, the Israelites again turned from the true God and worshiped idols. The ephod Gideon made to commemorate the defeat of the Midianites was soon worshiped by the people. And later, the Israelites went back to worshipping Baal and Baal-berith. The people still did not recognize the cycle of disobedience and oppression. Unlike Israel, we should learn from our past. When tempted to return to sinful habits, we need to remember the consequences of those behaviors and strive to grow spiritually.

Judg. 9:1-57

Abimelech, Gideon's son by a concubine, proved to be the virtual opposite of his father. Gideon rightly refused kingship over Israel, but Abimelech not only demanded it, he also attempted to kill anyone who stood in his way. And he died as violently as he lived. None of the faith, patience, and honesty that characterized Gideon is seen in Abimelech, perhaps indicating serious deficiencies in his childhood years (8:31). It is not enough to be a strong leader outside the home environment; we must be a strong influence on our children. If they do not spend time with a godly parental example, they may grow up with no positive role model to follow. If we don't teach our children how to walk in our ways, they may grow up to flout them, as Abimelech did.

Judg. 10:1-18

After suffering under Abimelech's leadership (chapter 9), Israel experienced 45 stable years under the leadership of Tola and Jair. But Israel's spiritual restoration was still by no means complete. In fact, after Jair died, the Israelites were so spiritually blind and proud that it took them eighteen years before they looked to God for help. If we are honest, we will not have to suffer for 18 years before realizing the consequences of our sins. They should be obvious to us when we start straying from God's will. If we keep our eyes open, we will be able to take immediate steps to redirect our course back onto the right path.

Judg. 11:1-11

Being ridiculed can be very hurtful, especially if we are ridiculed for things that are completely beyond our control. Jephthah apparently possessed considerable courage and natural leadership ability, but he was rejected by his half brothers because his mother was a prostitute. Like Jephthah, we may have been taunted by others because of our family background or for other problems beyond our control. We need to forgive those people, release the pain and grudges, and let go so that we can put those events behind us. Then we can move on to the tasks to which God has called us.

Judg. 11:12-28

Jephthah displayed great self-control by patiently confronting the Ammonite king about his attacks on Israel. Considering the hunger for power that propels most oppressive people, it was unlikely that Jephthah would be able to persuade the Ammonites to stop their unprovoked attacks. Still, he argued his case well, though it was totally disregarded. We are called to try to make peace and speak the truth. It is not our responsibility, however, if others do not listen to us. We can only try to make them see the truth.

Judg. 12:1-7

This tragic incident is in many ways a replay of Gideon's confrontation with the angry Ephraimites in 8:1-3. The outcome, however, is very different because of the way in which Jephthah mishandled the situation. Instead of the humble self-control and patience shown by Gideon, Jephthah responded in angry pride. As a result, war erupted between Gilead and Ephraim, and the two tribes were unable to enjoy a relationship like the one Gideon forged with Ephraim.

Judg. 12:8-15

The brief mention of the leadership of Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon might be taken to mean that they were less significant judges. However, each of the three actually ruled longer than Jephthah: Ibzan, seven years; Elon, ten years; and Abdon, eight years. Apparently, events during their terms of leadership were not as tumultuous. The point here is that no one should base his or her self-worth or sense of accomplishment on whether or not he or she “makes the headlines.”

Judg. 13:1-14

The instructions given by the angel to Manoah and his wife are similar to those given to Zechariah and Elizabeth, parents of John the Baptist (Luke 1:5-15). Both sets of parents were commanded to raise their children for special tasks for God. In fact, even their actions before their sons were born were very significant. All parents should be aware of how closely related their own actions and outlooks are to the sense of identity each child will have as an adult.

Judg. 13:15-23

The interaction between Samson's parents and the angel demonstrates their balanced sense of who they were before God. They had been called for the high purpose of raising a child uniquely gifted to serve God. They also had been allowed to live even though they had looked upon God. However, their giving of sacrifices indicated their proper sense of faith, humility, and thankfulness before God. Likewise, we may be called to do special things for God or his people. We should remember that we are serving God and that he is allowing us to do these things. Knowing this should temper any pride and arrogance we may be tempted to feel.

Judg. 13:24–14:4

Samson was living proof that those who grow up in a godly home still need to depend on God. Even the working of the Spirit of God in Samson's life did not protect him from his biggest blind spot: pagan women. Fortunately, as always, God used even Samson's weaknesses to bring glory to himself. Unfortunately, Samson did not understand his unhealthy attraction to be a point of weakness. Samson's problem with pagan women is symbolic of many who struggle today. God will provide an abundant life if we are willing to give up or avoid a “forbidden fruit.” That fruit differs from one person to another. We should ask God to help us see potential stumbling blocks that interfere with our spiritual growth. Then we can confess them to God and ask him to remove them.

Judg. 14:5-9

Even at an early point in his life, Samson was insensitive to the vows that defined his relationship with God. Samson’s Nazirite vow forbade his contact with anything dead (see Numbers 6), but Samson killed a lion and then went back to the carcass later. It was indeed the Spirit of the Lord that strengthened him, but he abused this blessing when he failed to surrender his life to the one who gave him his supernatural strength. There is very little evidence of commitment to God at this point in Samson’s life. Having been raised as a special child, he was self-centered. This sinful self-obsession was the ruin of Samson as it is the ruin of too many people today.

Judg. 14:10-20

During the prewedding feast, Samson foolishly bet that his guests could not solve his riddle. After being manipulated by his wife-to-be and losing the wager, Samson slaughtered other Philistines to get the garments he needed for payment. His volatile and dangerous personality was clearly evidenced by his actions. Samson possessed the maturity of a young boy stuffed inside an incredibly strong and gifted adult exterior. Many of us aspire to be like people with great physical beauty only to find that often they are shallow of character. We must never forget how much God values who we are on the inside. God looks at people's hearts, not their appearances (1 Samuel 16:7).

Judg. 14:19–15:8

The motive of angry revenge came to dominate Samson's personality and actions more and more. Because of what the Philistines had done to him, he destroyed much of their wheat and other crops. Then he turned his rage on the Philistines themselves, killing many of them. If there are times our rage gets out of control, we must see this as an area of great concern. We must acknowledge this to God and prayerfully consider what we may be holding in that needs to be released to God. Those who are controlled by rage have the potential to destroy themselves, as Samson later did, and hurt the people they love. God calls us to take our hurts and release them to him while forgiving those who hurt us. Revenge never adequately repays those who have hurt us. In fact, it only causes the one who was hurt to be hurt again.

Judg. 15:1-17

Samson was the most contradictory of Israel's judges. Called to be a Nazirite, he violently killed and destroyed, flaunting his previous "separation" before God (see Numbers 6). He would justify extreme actions based almost totally on angry vengeance. He also led a largely solitary, lonely existence for periods of time. Samson was far from ideal. Yet God still used him to begin the conquest of the neighboring Philistines, a task that would be finished much later by King David.

Judg. 15:18-20

Samson was left emotionally drained after his victory over the Philistines. He now complained to God, perhaps exaggerating his situation (“Must I now die of thirst?”). After a major victory in our lives, we may feel emotionally spent or physically pained. But we must not stop and have a “pity party.” This will only lead to failure. We should rely on God’s power to strengthen us and meet our needs. Then we can be ready to face the next battle in our process of spiritual growth.

Judg. 16:1-3

Unless we see our areas of weakness and confess these to God, they will continue to reemerge throughout our lives. Samson’s flaw in regard to pagan women reasserts itself here. Samson was known as a judge in Israel, a position of great respect and responsibility. Yet he exposed himself to both shame and danger by going to the prostitute in Gaza. Again his strength and courage rescued him. But, as shall be seen, Samson’s belief that he could handle his weakness was mistaken. We may get by for a while, even racking up some impressive victories, but eventually we will fall prey to temptation if we do not confess our sins and accept responsibility for our actions. We need to find a context where we can lean on God and other people for the support we need.

Judg. 16:4-17

The love affair between Samson and Delilah is one of the most pathetic examples of lust and manipulation in the Bible. It should have been obvious to Samson that Delilah was working with the Philistines to destroy him. But to get the physical pleasures he craved, Samson led Delilah on, staying in a situation he should have run from. He blindly believed he was virtually indestructible. This left him open to utter humiliation and suffering. We must all recognize our weaknesses and avoid situations in which we are vulnerable.

Judg. 16:18-21

It is a sad spectacle when someone refuses to redirect the course of his or her life and bears the consequences for sin. For years, Samson had steered around the potential disasters caused by his extreme behavior and anger. But Delilah used her knowledge about Samson to destroy him. Instead of seeing the truth about his life while there was still time to redirect his course, Samson had to be blinded by his enemy before he could see his true spiritual condition. By that time he couldn't redirect his course; he had become a tortured slave of the Philistines. He had deserted God by his actions, and God's strength had left him. We should pray that we see our true spiritual condition, even our weaknesses and sins, while there is still time to change direction.

Judg. 16:22-31

It took a lack of physical sight for Samson to gain personal and spiritual insight. But that was not the end of the story. In his prayer, Samson finally surrendered to God. Notice that Samson accomplished more in his God-appointed death than in his entire self-centered life. And despite Samson's serious flaws, he was remembered as a man of faith (see Hebrews 11:32). We can only imagine how Samson would have altered history had he sought God and surrendered to him sooner. We need to make certain that we are not missing opportunities to serve God throughout our lives.

Judg. 17:1-6

The slogan that summarizes all of the events of chapters 17–21 is first seen in 17:6: “In those days Israel had no king; all the people did whatever seemed right in their own eyes.” This statement rightly characterizes the do-it-yourself idolatry of Micah. Without a king and well-defined enforcement of God’s laws, there were almost no limits or boundaries placed upon the people. In this case, true worship was mocked by the making of idols (see Exodus 20:4) and the creation of a private priesthood. When we ignore God’s commands for our lives, we, also, mock God. Showing God proper respect entails following God’s will for our lives. If we do this, we will avoid self-destructive actions, like those of the Israelites in the following chapters.

Judg. 17:7-13

The depth of the self-deception, or religious denial, in Israel during this time is clearly seen here. Not only was Micah not rebuked by the priest from Bethlehem for his open idolatry, but the priest actually accepted Micah’s job offer! This arrangement stood counter to God’s clearly revealed will on the matter of worship in Israel. But Micah believed it would bring him great blessing anyway. He was either ignorant of God’s laws or chose to ignore them. God has shown us in the Bible all that we need to know about right living. We are responsible to know what God desires of us and then follow through on it.

Judg. 18:1-2

The tribe of Dan was looking for the easy way out. The Danites had been long unable to evict the Amorites from the land allotted to them under Joshua (1:34). So they gave up persevering toward that God-given goal. Instead, they sent scouts in search of an easier area to conquer that offered significant advantages to the Danites. There is no indication that the tribe ever considered the reasons for their previous defeat or sought to learn from it. Instead, they looked for another, easier solution, which led them even further away from the God who could have given them victory.

Judg. 18:2-6

The Danites were initially surprised, then intrigued, by Micah's arrangement of hiring a personal priest. Their first questions seem to indicate that they knew this arrangement was not right. But they liked the idea of having a personal hotline to God, especially after being told that their present mission would be successful. Sadly, it appears that Micah's priest spoke only for himself, not for God. The spiritual blindness only increased on all sides. When confronted by something that is wrong or inappropriate, we must not compromise, even if there are apparent benefits.

Judg. 18:7-20

When the city of Laish appeared a promising solution to their problem, the Danites concluded that Micah's priest had spoken for God. Thus, when they came to Micah's house again, they stole his idols and hired his priest. Obviously, this priest felt no sense of accountability to God. After making the wrong decision to become Micah's priest, the young man had no problem becoming the priest to a whole tribe. We all know that the direction of our first step often affects the direction of the following steps. In order to continue following God's will, we should make sure that each step we take is in keeping with God's will.

Judg. 18:22-31

This episode is a classic example of an angry confrontation between two parties who both desperately need to change. Micah, the original idolater, asserted that he had been wronged because his idols and personal priest had been taken. The aggressive Danites responded with threats and intimidation. As a result, the Danites set up an elaborate long-term worship system as a rival to true worship in Israel. Micah's original "small mistake" had now spread and ensnared an entire tribe of Israel. We should be aware that small mistakes in our own lives often spread into the lives of others around us.

Judg. 19:11-29

This tragic episode represents the moral low point of the book of Judges. This incident is even worse because the uncaring Levite gave up his concubine to save his own skin. We should consider whether we have ever sacrificed the health and stability of others so that we could do whatever we wanted to do. If so, we should accept responsibility for the consequences, unlike the Levite in these verses. He blamed the Benjamites and did not recognize his part in the tragedy. When we recognize that we are accountable, we can begin to get the help we need.

Judg. 20:8-25

Often we are highly resistant to the fact that we need to look honestly at the sin in our lives and the lives of those we love. The tribe of Benjamin foolishly denied the sins of Gibeah and self-righteously set out to defend its honor. They were unwilling to admit that there was sin in their midst. This story is a powerful illustration of refusal to see the truth and the painful consequences that kind of spiritual blindness brings. We often hide our problems, denying our need for help until it is too late. Or we may close our eyes to the sins of those we love. We would be wise to humbly admit our sin, seek to make things right, and consider that our loved ones are also susceptible to sin. If the Benjamites had been willing to discipline Gibeah, the rest of the tribe could have remained strong. But they let their pride keep them from seeing the truth and confessing it. As a result, they were almost destroyed.

Judg. 20:26-41

The rest of Israel was willing to be involved in serious self-examination and to commit themselves to God and his guidance. This led to a painful yet decisive victory. God used the Benjamites' resistant pride to lead them into an ambush in which they lost almost all their troops (see 20:14-15). When we are confronted by others about our wrong behaviors or blind spots, we should acknowledge the problem and face reality before our denial of the situation destroys us and others.

Judg. 21:1-12

In the heat of anger or emotions, many people make rash or unrealistic vows. In this passage, Israel was forced to keep their vows because they made them publicly before God. They had not learned from Jephthah's tragic mistake of making a thoughtless vow (11:30-31, 34-39). This reveals a great lack of wisdom and self-control. Promises are made to be kept. We should not make a promise that we will regret or refuse to carry out later.

Judg. 21:10-24

Frequently those who are unwilling to face reality are willing to do whatever it takes to survive without necessarily facing their root problems. There was no hint of repentance or commitment to God on the part of the Benjamites here, just the desire to survive. Also, in feeling sorry for the remnant of Benjamin, the rest of Israel used very questionable ways of "making it up to them." While it is a very commendable thing to help others, it should not be done wrongly or strictly out of guilt.

Ruth 1:6-22

Here we see the painful beginnings of true spiritual renewal. In choosing to leave Moab, Naomi was turning back toward Israel, seeking help in the direction of the God of her fathers. She accepted the reality of her situation, shown by the fact that she advised her daughters-in-law to return to their families. Naomi knew that she would be unable to support them in the years ahead. But she also knew that in sending them away, she was dismissing her last vestige of support and security. As bleak as the situation was, Naomi was willing to summon the courage to build a new life. Too often our desire for short-term security prevents us from stepping out in faith. We cling to the people and things that help us feel secure. This, however, can keep us from seeking God and surrendering to him. As a result, we often miss God's best for us.

Ruth 1:16-18

Ruth's desire to remain close to Naomi was actually a step of faith. Naomi had no financial security, no family members nearby for support or protection. By staying with Naomi, Ruth was cutting herself off from her own family, land, and culture. She was essentially committing her life into God's hands. After making her commitment to Naomi, Ruth stood by her, doing all she could to provide food and help for her mother-in-law. Committing ourselves to spiritual renewal is not an easy road. We must realize this before we begin; otherwise, we will be tempted to give up when things get tough. But, as with Ruth, sticking to our commitments will always yield great rewards in the long run.

Ruth 2:1-3, 18-23

We must never forget that God is in charge of our lives. Ruth was guided by God into Boaz's field, though at the time she was unaware of it. Naomi recognized the fact of God's guidance later on. Throughout this story God was working behind the scenes, whether the people involved recognized it or not. God often works the same way with us. He leads us to meet people and make decisions that make all the difference for us. It is only later that we begin to see how God has been leading us along. Knowing that God works in this way should encourage us as we face the challenges and unknowns in our lives.

Ruth 2:4-17

This passage beautifully demonstrates God's guidance in the ordinary decisions of life. Naomi and Ruth needed food, so Ruth went in search of it. As she stepped out in faith, persevering in her commitment to Naomi, God provided what she needed—a place to gather grain in an atmosphere of safety and respect (Philippians 4:19). God led her to the field of Boaz, a man of outstanding character—honest and willing to help others without demanding anything in return. When we experience such fortunate “coincidences” and helpful new relationships in life, we need to take the time to thank God for his provision.

Ruth 3:1-7

Naomi's plan to find a husband for her daughter-in-law may seem a little strange to us. Her plan, however, was based upon a scriptural provision for the protection of widows (Deuteronomy 25:5-10). God had assigned the responsibility of caring for a widow to the dead husband's brothers or near relatives. Since Boaz was a near relative to Ruth's dead husband, he was responsible for helping her. Ruth trusted Naomi's advice and took another courageous step of faith and obedience, following God's plan for rebuilding her life. God provides direction in his Word, but this doesn't mean the fulfillment of his will for our lives is automatic. With faith and obedience we need to use the keys he gives us to bring about his will in our lives.

Ruth 3:6-14

This passage is one of the great biblical examples of how the truth, clear personal boundaries, and self-respect can protect people who are in a setting of temptation. Both Ruth and Boaz, though in a delicate and compromising situation, chose to do what was right. They refused to yield to the temptation of the moment. They considered the long-term consequences of sexual activity outside the bounds of marriage. Notice how Boaz showed an unselfish concern for Ruth's safety (3:13) and her reputation (3:14).

Ruth 3:15-18

Earlier Boaz had provided abundantly for the short-term needs of Ruth and Naomi, but now that the harvest was over he gave them additional provisions. Naomi recognized in Boaz's generous gifts a willingness on his part to be responsible for Ruth (and Naomi) according to the stipulations of God's law (Deuteronomy 25:5-10). God provided for Naomi and Ruth through his wise laws and by sending a man who was willing to obey them. God also has given his Word to us for guidance. We need to follow through on his plan if we hope to help others grow spiritually or preserve our own spiritual gains.

Ruth 4:1-10

As we watch Boaz negotiate, it is clear that he was a wise and shrewd man. He did not lie or manipulate the circumstances, though he clearly sought a specific outcome. Boaz wisely anticipated the greedy response of Naomi's closer kinsman. This other man wanted the inheritance of Ruth's dead husband but had no desire to care for Ruth or father her children and care for them. When faced with the facts, he saw that the economic advantages of taking Ruth's case were limited, possibly even detrimental. He did not want to be held accountable to God's law and the economic loss it might entail. We must be careful not to seek only the advantages in our relationships; we must also accept the responsibilities. Like Boaz, we need to seek what is best for the people close to us.

Ruth 4:11-17

The story of Ruth and Naomi starts with loneliness and destitution, but it ends happily. Naomi, who had lost her family (1:4-5), had a family once again. Ruth, who had lost her husband and all hope of a prosperous future (1:8-9), was given a husband, a son, and hope for the future. It is interesting to note that Ruth's sacrificial lifestyle brought a new life not only to herself and Naomi but to all of us. Boaz and Ruth's son was named Obed, and he became the ancestor of Jesus Christ, who has provided the means for all of us to be redeemed from sin and receive newness of life.

Ruth 4:18-22

Hidden in this family tree is powerful evidence that God uses fallible people to bring about his good will. Perez was the first of David's ancestors mentioned; he was the illegitimate son of Judah and his daughter-in-law Tamar (Genesis 38:1-30). Boaz was the son of Salmon, whose wife was Rahab, the prostitute of Jericho (Joshua 2:1-24; Matthew 1:5). Then Ruth was a foreigner from Moab, not even one of God's chosen people. God used these people, far from ideal according to human standards, to bring about the birth of Israel's greatest king, David, and the world's only Savior, Jesus Christ. Knowing this truth should give us hope. No matter how sordid or painful our past, God can use us significantly if we are willing to put ourselves in his hands.

1 Sam. 1:1-8

In ancient times, much of a woman's self-worth was built upon her ability to bear children. So Hannah's childless state brought her a great deal of pain. To make matters worse, Elkanah's second wife, Peninnah, ridiculed Hannah for her infertility. Certainly Hannah had tried everything humanly possible to become pregnant. She was at the end of her rope, helpless to change her situation. She was unable to see that a fulfilling life could be found without children. Her husband, Elkanah, tried to intervene, reminding Hannah of his unconditional love for her (1:8), but Hannah was unable to accept his comfort. Hannah needed to seek God with a whole heart and surrender herself, and even her unborn son, to him.

1 Sam. 1:9-11

In these verses we read of the beautiful prayer Hannah uttered through her tears. She had carried her shame and grief for years, and now she released them to God. In faith she sought God and surrendered to him. She not only committed her infertility to God, but she also vowed to surrender to God's service the son he may choose to give her (1:11). Whatever grief and sorrows we carry should be released to God. As we commit ourselves and even our inabilities to God, he can begin a process of spiritual renewal that can have far-reaching influence for God's kingdom. Like Hannah, we all need to release our grief to God and release control of our lives to him as well.

1 Sam. 1:12-18

Hannah's prayer was misunderstood by Eli the priest, who assumed she was drunk. In reality she was seeking God and surrendering her infertility to him. Sadly, attempts toward spiritual growth can be misinterpreted, and the insensitive responses we experience can be disheartening. To her credit, Hannah persevered despite the criticism she experienced. Eli soon recognized Hannah's integrity and encouraged her in her prayer (1:17). No matter what discouragement we may face, we must persevere. God will support us, even if the people around us do not.

1 Sam. 1:19-20

Samuel's birth shows us that God is a listening God. He solved Hannah's crisis by giving her a son. The baby's name, Samuel, means "asked of God." This would have been a constant reminder that God heard Hannah's cries and then answered. We can be confident that when we petition God according to his will (1 John 5:14), he hears us, too. And no problem is ever too big for him to solve (Jeremiah 32:27).

1 Sam. 1:24-28

The time came for Hannah to fulfill her vow to God. The process of letting go of her little son certainly must have been painful. But Hannah recognized her accountability to God and unselfishly fulfilled her promise by releasing her much-loved son into his service. Her choice reflected her gratitude and her confidence in God, who had given Samuel to her in the first place. When we make commitments to God and others, we need to follow through on them. If we do, no matter how hard it may be, God will help us and bless our efforts. After Hannah gave up Samuel to God's service, God blessed her with additional children.

1 Sam. 2:1-3

Note the words in Hannah's prayer of rejoicing: "My heart rejoices in the LORD!" (2:1). She was praising the one responsible for her deliverance—God himself. He had delivered her from the trauma of infertility, giving her a son. And after Hannah gave Samuel into God's service, he blessed her with other children. This certainly would have lightened the burden of seeing her firstborn son only once a year. Obedience was surely difficult, even painful, but it was for the good of Hannah and Samuel, and ultimately for the good of all Israel. Our obedience to God, as painful as it might be at times, will ultimately bring us joy. It will also bring blessings to the people close to us.

1 Sam. 2:4-10

Hannah continued her prayer of praise, thanking God for blessing her. She said, "Those who stumbled are now strong" (2:4). God provided not only the deliverance but also the strength she needed. He gave Hannah the strength to persevere in the process, to seek freedom, to adopt new attitudes, to fulfill responsibilities, to set things straight, to build a new life. Such honest praise of God's power will naturally burst forth as we surrender our lives to God and see him move on our behalf. As we surrender ourselves to him, grieving and letting go of all our hurts and cares, the Father moves immediately to answer our prayers and do his good work in us.

1 Sam. 2:12-17

Eli's sons sinned unspeakably by treating God's offerings with contempt. They failed to realize that the sacrifices were God's provision for the people's sin. They stole from the sacrifices as if these ceremonies had been instituted for their own personal pleasure rather than for healing and purification. God has provided for our redemption by giving the ultimate sacrifice on our behalf. If we treat Christ with contempt, we are guilty of doing the same thing (Hebrews 10:26-29). Let us show proper respect for the compassion, love, and power that God has shown to us through Christ! Let us wholeheartedly embrace his provision for our healing.

1 Sam. 2:20-21

Here we see that Hannah was blessed with additional children. God is in the business of blessing his people beyond their requests and expectations (Ephesians 3:20).

1 Sam. 2:23-34

Here Eli confronts his sons about their blatant sin. He surely hoped they would make significant changes in their lives. Unfortunately, they didn't listen to their father. The young men refused to set boundaries on their behavior, and they displayed no desire to change. Their choice to go their own way brought dire consequences— ultimately, physical death

(2:25, 34; see also 1 Corinthians 11:30-32). Eli, too, made a choice: he opted to ignore his sons' continued disobedience. Thus the high priest failed in his responsibility to God and was eventually judged for it. Eli was told that his descendants would bring him tears of grief and would die in the prime of life. What a bitter harvest we reap when we refuse to turn from sin.

1 Sam. 3:1-10

Learning to listen to God's voice is an important part of our spiritual growth (Isaiah 30:21; Hebrews 5:11). God spoke directly to young Samuel, but he also speaks to us through his Word (James 1:22). We need to take the time to understand God's truth in the Bible. There, we will find the wisdom and direction we need to progress spiritually.

1 Sam. 3:16-18

Samuel's honesty is obvious as he tells Eli everything. He even told Eli the devastating truth about the priest's own family and the suffering they would endure. He confronted Eli with his failure, stating clearly the truth God had given him. Such forthrightness must be part and parcel of any spiritual-growth plan. As we discover the truth about ourselves and others through knowledge of God's Word, we will need to speak that truth to others, confronting them in love for their encouragement and spiritual growth. This will never be easy, but it is an important part of any loving relationship.

1 Sam. 4:16-22

Eli and his family, and indeed the entire nation of Israel, suffered the terrible consequences of disobedience. Eli and his sons died, and the Ark of the Covenant, the symbol of God's glorious presence with Israel, was captured by foreigners. The despair of such a family is illustrated by the final act of Eli's daughter-in-law, who used her final words to name her baby Ichabod. This name means "Where is the glory?" (4:21-22), for the glory of God had departed from Israel. In the hour of her death she acknowledged the truth of her situation, but it was much too late for her and her family. Life is not easy; even the best life involves surrender, loss, pain, and difficulty. Yet the solitary death of this young woman and the shattering of Eli's family should remind us of what is at stake if we do not persevere in seeking God and surrendering our lives to him.

1 Sam. 5:1-4

The ignoble fate of the Philistine idol Dagon illustrates that Israel's God is greater than all other gods (Jeremiah 32:27; 33:2; 1 John 4:4). Anything that controls us has become a god in our lives. We should be encouraged by the fact that God is stronger than any of the false idols we might serve. If we seek God and surrender fully to him, all false gods we once served will fall facedown before him, setting us free to love the only God worthy of our affection.

1 Sam. 5:6-12

Physical suffering (5:6, 9, 12) was a direct consequence of the disrespect the Philistines showed toward the true God (5:1-12). The parallels to today are unmistakable. By setting up false gods in our lives, we show disrespect to the true God. We also violate God's laws by living selfishly and hurting the people close to us. Many—though not all— who violate God's standards experience physical repercussions. Often it is precisely this suffering that prompts us to seek God's help. So it was with the Philistines.

1 Sam. 6:19

This seems a harsh judgment, but it carries with it a reminder of the high cost of disobedience. The Israelites in this passage were held accountable to the instructions God had given them regarding the treatment of the Ark. Either they were ignorant of these instructions or they chose to ignore them. God has given us instructions for healthy living in the Bible. When we fail to follow God's plan, out of either ignorance or choice, the consequences will be devastating. Neglecting God's instructions on this occasion proved fatal for this group of Israelites. The same consequence may await us if we fail to listen to God and his Word.

1 Sam. 7:3-4

Samuel's exhortation to the Israelites gives us a clear picture of spiritual renewal. He tells them (1) to get rid of their foreign gods and idols, (2) to determine to obey God, and (3) to worship him only. Our spiritual renewal begins the same way. First we must get rid of the idols in our lives—anything that controls us and commands greater loyalty than God. This involves a deep self-examination, an honest assessment of motives and priorities, and admission of our sins and disobedience. Then we must surrender ourselves to God, recognizing our accountability to him and accepting full responsibility for our lives. Our devotion to God cannot be hidden; we must openly confess and surrender to God. We may need to grieve, forgive, and let go of the past—which includes making restitution for any wrongdoing. Then God can transform us, redirecting our course and making way for a better future. Samuel promised the Israelites that their obedience would result in God's deliverance from the Philistines. We, too, can rest assured that God will give us a fresh start in life as we use the keys he has given us.

1 Sam. 7:7-11

The people of Israel were helpless as they faced the attacking Philistines. They didn't know what to do, so they turned to Samuel for help. Samuel then did the only thing possible: He asked God for help. God answered by giving Israel an overwhelming victory over the Philistines. This is how our own spiritual renewal begins. We realize that we need God's help, so we turn to him. We can be sure that God will come through for us if we admit our true condition and surrender our lives to him.

1 Sam. 7:12

The fact that Samuel set up a stone called Ebenezer, which means "the stone of help," should remind us of two principles. First, God's help in the past is a promise of help in the future. God offers much more than a onetime antidote. He is a continual remedy and source of strength as we seek spiritual growth. Second, the fact that God's help is available on a daily basis should help us see that we need to look to him every day. The secret to ongoing spiritual growth is to recognize that it happens day by day, moment by moment. If we depend upon God daily, we will find the strength and grace to endure and to preserve spiritual gains.

1 Sam. 8:3-5

Not unlike the sons of Eli, Samuel's sons also failed to set boundaries on their behavior. They were greedy for money, taking bribes and perverting justice (8:3), actions for which they were held accountable. Their disobedience surely embarrassed their father but also prompted a national outcry for governmental change (8:5). Because of failure in the leadership, the people rejected God's rule through the judges and demanded to have what all the surrounding nations had—a king. One wonders what might have happened if Samuel's sons had acted more responsibly. It is clear that God will not allow sin to continue unpunished, especially among those he has put in positions of leadership.

1 Sam. 8:18-20

The Israelites refused to listen to Samuel's God-given advice and soon were saddled with a less-than-satisfactory ruler, Saul. Wanting to be like the other nations, they clamored for a king and found out the hard way that what they wanted wasn't necessarily what they needed. God's dealings with his people suggest two lessons. First, we undermine our spiritual growth whenever we reject wise counsel (Psalm 106:15). Second, the constant pressure to be like everybody else makes it difficult to gain freedom and experience God's will for our lives. God may even allow us to have our own way in a situation so he can show us the ultimate folly of it.

1 Sam. 9:2

Saul was certainly a man of impressive physical attributes, but in his case, his "gifts" became detrimental rather than helpful. Sometimes people gifted with beauty, intelligence, size, or strength fall into the trap of self-sufficiency. They begin to think they can go it alone. This attitude only stands in the way of achieving God's success. Our pride and notions of personal potential may prevent us from ever becoming humble enough to admit that we have needs. Saul looked good on paper, but he allowed his "strengths" to stand in the way of his only means of success—God's help. We must be careful to avoid this pitfall.

1 Sam. 9:14-17

Notice that Samuel approached at the very moment Saul entered the town. This should remind us of how perfect God's timing is in the events of our own lives! He often leads us to meet people or experience events that direct our course his way. If we see this to be true as we look back on our lives, we should take the time to thank God for his direction (Psalms 37:23-24; 138:8; Proverbs 3:5-6; Isaiah 48:17).

1 Sam. 10:1

As Samuel anointed Saul to be king over Israel, he was also burying his personal dreams. Samuel was the last of the judges; his sons would never share his honor. But despite his disappointment, Samuel found the courage to follow God's will instead of his own. He was willing to change and even to assist in the process by helping Saul become king over Israel. Assisting others on their way to spiritual renewal sometimes means we must give up some personal dreams of our own. But if we are following God's will, helping others will turn out to be the surest way to discover a new life for ourselves.

1 Sam. 10:26

The phrase "whose hearts God had touched" shows us a key to spiritual growth. God touched Saul's life, and then he touched a number of individuals to support Saul in his new life. These words recall a verse in the New Testament: "Then Jesus came over and touched them. 'Get up,' he said. 'Don't be afraid'" (Matthew 17:7). The touch of God's healing hand enables us to deal with the past, persist in the present, and find direction for the future. Starting anew means we must first come to God for the salvation he offers in Jesus Christ (John 3:16); then we must depend on him for sustenance and strength (John 15:4-7).

1 Sam. 11:13-15

Saul proclaimed, "Today the LORD has rescued Israel!" (11:13). Following their victory over the Ammonites, Saul, Samuel, and the people confirmed Saul's kingship at Gilgal (11:14-15). Likewise, it is often a good idea for us to go public with our commitments so we will feel responsible for them and will be held accountable by others. Platform speeches aren't usually necessary. Generally, confiding in a few trusted friends will do, as long as they will follow through and confront us when we slip up.

1 Sam. 12:8-11

Samuel reviewed Israel's history and described the cycle of sin, crisis, and deliverance that was evident in the book of Judges. The Israelites sinned, and the consequences led them to enslavement. Unable to shake their oppressors, the people cried out to God, admitting their sins of disobedience. By accepting reality, they saw the truth of their need for God; they cried out to God, confessing their sins to the only one who could help them, God himself. Then God provided a delivering judge to lead the people out of bondage. Whenever we recognize our need for God, we have the potential for spiritual renewal. All we need to do is cry out to God, confess our sins, and he will help us break free from whatever holds us captive.

1 Sam. 12:14-15

Life is filled with choices, and the Bible is filled with clear direction on how to make decisions in line with God's plan. A wise decision always takes into account whether or not we are showing proper respect for God, worshiping and serving him as we should or obeying his commands (12:14). A poor decision will fail to keep God's desires and requirements in focus (12:15). Following God's plan will reap positive long-term consequences, even though it may look difficult in the short run. Disobedience to God's revealed instructions will invariably lead us into bondage.

1 Sam. 12:20

Samuel exhorted the Israelites not to be afraid and to keep hanging in there. He was calling the people to persevere while acknowledging their past failure. He didn't downplay their past sin; in fact, he reminded them of it. But he also called them to escape the mire of guilt and past failure. He emphasized the positive, saying, "Make sure now that you worship the LORD with all your heart, and don't turn your back on him." It is important to recognize the sin in our past, but it is just as important to look ahead to a positive future. And as the process continues, it is vital to remember that a new life is not built overnight.

1 Sam. 12:23-25

Samuel identified his failure to pray for the people as a sin against God. This shows the depth of his sense of accountability to God and his feelings of responsibility for the people. His spiritual maturity manifested itself in his desire to help others; he said, "I will continue to teach you what is good and right" (12:23). Indeed, Samuel went on to outline how the people might gain freedom: (1) "fear the LORD," (2) "faithfully serve him," and (3) "think of all the wonderful things he has done for you" (12:24). Samuel concluded by warning the people of the dire consequences of refusing to obey God (12:25). We would all do well to heed Samuel's words.

1 Sam. 13:8-14

When we get our eyes off God and on the circumstances around us, we often develop an urge to act with impatience or indiscretion. Confronted by the seemingly insurmountable threat of the Philistine army and afraid that his men were about to desert him, Saul acted irresponsibly by offering a burnt sacrifice himself rather than waiting until a priest arrived. He failed to trust in God's timing and thus disobeyed one of God's commands. The consequences for taking things into his own hands were great: His descendants would be denied the right to rule in Israel. Being patient when things seem to be running behind schedule is sometimes difficult. We need to be true to God's plan even when it seems to be going too slowly. God's way is always the best way.

1 Sam. 14:6-14

God is famous for giving people who trust him victory in impossible situations. Jonathan's confidence in God prompted him to step out in faith and tackle incredible odds. His faith and courage were rewarded with an amazing victory (14:13). It is sad that many of us never trust God enough to discover what he can do and the joy this brings. Notice that Jonathan did not take his step of faith alone but was accompanied by a bodyguard. Similarly, spiritual renewal and growth is not something we accomplish by ourselves. We need support—friends who, like Jonathan's companion, will exclaim, "I'm with you completely, whatever you decide" (14:7).

1 Sam. 14:19-20

Saul's indecision as he heard the battle in the Philistine camp caused a great deal of confusion among his troops. He was waiting for a clear message from God about what to do. In the end, he found that he had no alternative but to attack, building upon Jonathan's victory (14:13-15). Saul's course of action should have been obvious. His rather insincere hesitation shows us that there is a time to pray and a time to act. We must avoid trying to be "spiritual" when it is time to take action.

1 Sam. 14:24-25

Saul says here, "Before I have full revenge on my enemies." His comment gives us a clue that Saul was on a downhill slide spiritually. Earlier he had declared, "Today the LORD has rescued Israel!" (11:13). But here he has changed his tune; no longer did he see God as the vital entity in the process of victory. The battle had become Saul's; the enemies were no longer God's enemies but Saul's opponents. Thus the victory would belong to Saul and not to God. When we begin to take credit for our spiritual progress, we have already begun to regress toward failure. We must always remember that the enemies we face are too big for us unless we seek victory with the help of God.

1 Sam. 15:10-15

God was grieved because Saul had followed his own inclinations rather than God's clear instructions. God's principles for holy living call us to obey his instructions, to make a clean break with the past, and to refuse to compromise. Saul exhibited none of these qualities. He chose to spare King Agag and the finest animals instead of destroying everything as God had commanded (15:8-9). He even built a monument to himself rather than pay tribute to God for the miraculous victory (15:12). When confronted by Samuel, Saul tried to justify his actions (15:15), but making excuses has never paved the way to a new life. We must accept responsibility for our actions if we desire to grow. Until we do, there is no hope for true spiritual renewal.

1 Sam. 15:16-21

Samuel confronted Saul, but it didn't help. Instead of admitting his failure to obey God's instructions, Saul continued rationalizing his disobedience. Rationalization and refusal to admit our failures are two of the biggest enemies to spiritual growth. God places a premium on honesty. Notice that Saul sought to excuse himself by his intention to bring sacrifices to God. God does not want our pious prayers and religious activities unless they are accompanied by a humble and obedient heart. Hiding the sin in our lives with pious words and deeds is no substitute for confessing our sins and asking God to cleanse us.

1 Sam. 15:22-30

Samuel's words pierced Saul's callous exterior like surgical steel (15:22-23). As we seek to grow spiritually, nothing can take the place of obedience to God. Everything hinges on the obedient heart, and this was the arena in which Saul had failed so miserably. He tried to cover his sins with religious activities, promising to offer sacrifices to God. But God was more interested in Saul's confession and obedience than in his sacrifice. Saul's obvious regret spurred him to grasp vainly at Samuel's robe (15:27). But reality proved painful; God's rejection of Saul after so many second chances was real. At this point, complete restoration for Saul had become virtually impossible (15:28-29).

1 Sam. 15:32-33

Here we see that Saul was not willing to obey God completely; against God's express orders he spared King Agag. The execution of Agag by Samuel reminds us that surrender to God demands a distinct break with the past and complete obedience to God's Word. The past must be put to death if we hope to live new lives.

1 Sam. 16:1

Samuel was paralyzed by despair over Saul's failure, but God intervened and pointed Samuel toward a new venture. Saul had failed as king, but God had another man in mind for the job. It has been said that when the past is quarreling with the present there can be no future. We all need to quit living in the past after we have learned its lessons. There is a time for all of us to proceed to new assignments and goals. Spiritual renewal involves letting go of what was in the past so we can take hold of what is in the present and redirect our course toward a new life for the future.

1 Sam. 16:6-13

God's choice of the man who would succeed Saul undoubtedly surprised Samuel. In this passage God tells us how he judges the value of individuals. It is not the physical gifts of strength or beauty that make them great. God judges people by their hearts (16:7). It is not what we see that is important; it is who a person is on the inside. Most of us are not models of physical perfection, so it might come as a relief that God does not judge us in this way. Saul had failed, despite his external attractiveness. God is concerned with our humility and obedience—requirements for anyone who hopes to succeed in God's kingdom.

1 Sam. 17:32-37

David was confident that God would deliver him from Goliath's wrath, no matter how improbable it may have seemed. David was a young shepherd boy, armed with a sling and some stones. Goliath was a giant of a man, armed with a great sword and spear. In human terms, David didn't have a chance; but with God, he couldn't lose. God is able to provide the victory to all who are willing to trust him. We all face giants in our lives, problems that are too big for us to face alone. But even when the odds are stacked against us, we can't lose if God is on our side.

1 Sam. 17:32-37

Notice here that David's courage was, in part, a consequence of God's help in previous battles with lions and bears. David had learned how to trust God in his smaller battles, giving him the faith he needed to confront Goliath. It is easy to overlook our smaller victories and forget about the help God gave us during such times. We would be wise to take account of our victories, no matter how small, and allow them to build our courage and faith for the battles still ahead.

1 Sam. 17:45-47

As David squared off against Goliath, he knew that in human terms he didn't have a chance. His courage came from his recognition that the battle belonged to God. Like David, we face many battles where we don't have the power to win. But with God, the victory is certain.

1 Sam. 18:1-4

God graciously provided David with a close friend in the person of Jonathan. This friendship helped David survive Saul's various attempts on his life. God created us to be close to people and to need their companionship and help. The importance of a significant friend to whom one can be accountable cannot be overestimated.

1 Sam. 19:1-2

Since David was a threat to Saul's dynasty, Jonathan could conceivably have felt threatened by David. Yet Jonathan displayed no such smallness or insecurity. He instead made himself available to help his friend, not only warning David of Saul's intentions, but also assisting in his escape. True friends are never swayed by self-interest; they are willing to help even if they must make personal sacrifices to do so. A good friend will be there to help in a crisis.

In dire straits, David fled to his mentor, Samuel. Where we go when we are in trouble often reveals the kind of people we are. Samuel was one of the great spiritual leaders of Israel's history. David's decision to go to Samuel for help reveals his wisdom and his desire to rely on God. It is important that we also find people who will help us stay on track and lead us to depend on God for help.

1 Sam. 20:4

David was exceedingly blessed to have a friend like Jonathan. After hearing of David's difficulties, he responded, "Tell me what I can do to help you." Reliable and resourceful, Jonathan was ready to be supportive in helping David through this crisis. His willing response should challenge all of us to respond likewise when our loved ones are experiencing a crisis. We should be available to help others as Jonathan helped David.

1 Sam. 21:1-2

The book of Proverbs tells us: "There are six things the LORD hates—no, seven things he detests: haughty eyes, a lying tongue, hands that kill the innocent, a heart that plots evil, feet that race to do wrong, a false witness who pours out lies, a person who sows discord in a family" (Proverbs 6:16-19). In his encounter with Ahimelech, David revealed that he was capable of making wrong choices. He lied, and his single lie led to others (1 Samuel 21:9-15). In the end, this seemingly small falsehood, even though told for a good cause, proved costly—eighty-five innocent priests lost their lives (22:18-20). God values honesty. Even minor indiscretions can have devastating effects on the lives of others, especially the people close to us (Ephesians 4:25).

1 Sam. 22:16-18

The priests in this passage are the innocent victims of Saul's mental illness, David's lie (21:2), and Doeg's desire to be accepted. David's apparently inconsequential lie became the catalyst for the sins of others. It gave Saul the opportunity to act without restraint. It gave Doeg the chance to try to get some attention. Sometimes the small lies we tell and the failures of others combine to bring great suffering to innocent people. In such times, telling the truth will often put a stop to the sins of other people rather than perpetuating or compounding them. Honesty is always the best policy.

1 Sam. 23:1-9

David repeatedly looked to God for direction in his life. He had grown accustomed to trusting God for direction during times of crisis. When God commanded David to lead his men against the Philistines at Keilah, David's men were afraid to act on that command. So David went to God a second time, and when he did, God affirmed his first command but also added a reassuring message: "I will help you conquer the Philistines" (23:4). Like David and his men, we may respond with fear to God's direction. But we can be sure that when God tells us to do something, he will stand by us each step of the way and help us gain the victory.

1 Sam. 23:14-15

The wonderful little phrase “but God didn’t let Saul find [David]” must not be overlooked. Saul pursued David, but God protected, provided for, and preserved David’s life. During the difficult years of running from Saul, David must often have felt alone and abandoned by God. But here we are told that God was working to protect David throughout that time. Even when things look bad for us, God is with us, protecting us in ways we do not know. He is indeed worthy of our confidence and trust.

1 Sam. 23:16-18

Once Jonathan located David, he encouraged him to find his strength in God. Jonathan was aware of the fearsome difficulties David faced, but he also knew that God was equal to the task. We often face problems too big for us alone, but God is bigger than the worst of them. At times we may wonder what we have to offer others. We can always do what Jonathan did for David. We can remind them that God is with them and that he is greater than any problem they might face.

1 Sam. 24:4-6

David refused to follow the counsel of his men to kill Saul. Even the small act of cutting off a piece of Saul’s robe troubled David’s conscience. Despite all that had happened, David’s respect for the king and his position remained intact. Despite the temptation of the situation and Saul’s obvious vulnerability, David wisely restrained himself. David’s intelligent response suggests two principles vital to spiritual growth: (1) We need to be careful to assess the advice we get from the people around us, even from our close friends. (2) Our conscience must be tuned in to what God desires for a situation, not what may be an easy way out.

1 Sam. 25:12-13

Though at times David appears a model of self-restraint, we see here that he was capable of giving in to impatience. In reacting to Nabal's offensive behavior, David failed to consult with God before taking action. He made a hasty decision while he was angry and upset. Such impulsiveness frequently results in mistakes with long-term consequences. Thankfully, God provided Abigail to prevent David from acting unwisely (25:32). When we are angry and tempted to act impulsively, we would be wise to calm down and listen to what God would to say to us.

1 Sam. 25:36-38

The name Nabal means fool, and in this passage Nabal demonstrated how appropriate his name was. His self-centered outlook kept him from fulfilling an act of common courtesy that was expected in ancient Israel. David and his band had protected Nabal and his herds from foreign marauders. It was expected that he would support them with some supplies. But Nabal lived for himself, satisfying his own appetites with little regard for others. His selfish bravado nearly resulted in the deaths of many innocent employees. It was only the intervention of his wife, Abigail, that prevented a disaster. Most of us have a little Nabal in us; we are a little foolish at times, making decisions that are destructive to us and to the people around us. As we reflect honestly on our spiritual lives, we can confess our foolish thoughts to God and ask him to give us his wisdom.

1 Sam. 26:8-11

The advice of even loyal friends can sometimes get us into trouble. Abishai recommended the murder of Saul, but David was unwilling to accept the consequences of assassinating God's chosen king (26:9-11). He wisely placed limits on the behavior of his men and left Saul alone. David knew that Saul's judgment belonged in God's hands, and he wisely left it there. As we seek reconciliation with people, we may need to give our judgment of others back to God. This is an important step in the process of forgiveness and reconciliation.

1 Sam. 26:17-21

Too little too late. We hear from Saul's lips words that should have been uttered long before: (1) "I have sinned"; (2) "I have been a fool"; (3) "I have been . . . very, very wrong." Such honest admissions reflect the basis for repentance, forgiveness, and reconciliation. These are all keys to our ongoing spiritual renewal.

1 Sam. 27:1

David's fearful thoughts were not consistent with God's promises. He knew that God had a special plan for his life that included kingship over Israel. After years of running for his life, however, David seems to have become discouraged. Motivated by fear, he moved to the land of the Philistines, where he ended up in some compromising situations (28:1-2; 29:1-7). David needed to persevere in his trust. God had protected him up until that point and was perfectly capable of continuing that protection. We, too, may grow discouraged at times, but we must persevere and trust in God's promises.

1 Sam. 28:1-2

Compromising our convictions often leaves us with hard choices. David had left Israel to hide among the Philistines and was now reaping the consequences. He was asked to join the Philistines in a battle against his own people. David had to deal with a difficult decision that God may never have intended him to face. When we make decisions without God and his Word in mind, we may end up in situations that could lead to our downfall. We need to keep God at the center of our decisions and carefully consider the likely consequences of our actions.

1 Sam. 28:7-8

Saul's final act of rebellion involved witchcraft, which the Bible unequivocally condemns. In his desperation, Saul sought the guidance of spirits of the dead. Instead of finding help there, however, his destruction was only confirmed. The world of Satan worship and occult practices will always bring trouble for those who practice them.

1 Sam. 29:1-10

David's move to Philistia was a compromising one. His safety there depended on his relationship with King Achish, who asked David to fight against the Israelites. Here Achish released David from his service. God delivered David from the consequences of his earlier decision. God's love is great! He often provides us with a way to escape difficult circumstances, even those of our own making (see 1 Corinthians 10:13). But remember this: When God provides the way for us to escape a compromising situation, it is our responsibility to take it.

1 Sam. 30:1-6

During their time away from Ziklag, marauders had come and stolen the belongings and kidnapped the families of David and his men. In this crisis, David shows us where to go for direction and hope: "But David found strength in the LORD his God" (30:6). David knew where to go in a crisis. Surrendering our lives to God, no matter how dire our circumstances, is always the right choice.

1 Sam. 31:3-4

Suicide was the tragic end of this man who never learned to repent. Saul's life didn't have to end that way. If he had admitted his sins, accepted responsibility for his decisions to disobey God, and asked God to change him, he could have come to a noble end. One key to his downfall is that he was never fully accountable to others. He relied on himself and never learned to fully depend upon God. As a result, his life stands as a monument to squandered potential. Saul's tragic end should give us ample reason to embrace God's plan for spiritual renewal.

2 Sam. 1:8-10

The record of Saul's suicide in 1 Samuel 31:4 raises questions about the truth of the Amalekite's claims. More than likely, the man was lying in hopes of receiving a reward from David. He did receive his reward—death. Deceit is often a harbinger of disaster; honesty is always the best policy.

2 Sam. 1:11-27

The honest outpouring of grief by David and his men over the deaths of Saul, Jonathan, and the other men of Israel was no sign of weakness. Instead, it indicated the love, respect, and sorrow they felt for their fellow Israelites. God desires sincere expressions of emotion, and releasing them can be very healthy for us. We don't need to be afraid of expressing our emotions.

2 Sam. 2:1-11

We often make our greatest mistakes in situations in which we are eager to act. After years as a fugitive, David must have burned with excitement at the thought of finally assuming Israel's throne. Yet he waited to take charge of the northern Israelite tribes at a later time. He listened to God's instructions and became king of only one tribe—Judah. We would be wise to learn from David's patience and trust in God.

2 Sam. 2:30-31

What a tragic picture! Hundreds died in a needless conflict between related tribes. This tragedy was the fruit of a divided nation and unwise leadership on the part of Joab. Often our families suffer in the same way. If past conflicts are not dealt with properly and family leaders make decisions driven by passion, suffering and pain are the sure result. This should be a warning for us to seek restoration early, before the consequences bring destruction that cannot be repaired.

2 Sam. 3:17-18

Abner displayed the courage to take an unpopular stand and make an important change in his life. He advised the elders of the northern tribes to take the necessary steps to make David their king. Good intentions are worthless until they are translated into actions, and Abner understood this. Spiritual renewal involves not only wanting change but taking active steps to pursue it. Abner's exhortation, "Now is the time!" (3:18) is a clarion call to all who want to progress spiritually.

2 Sam. 3:27

Joab chose to harbor a deep bitterness toward Abner and sought revenge rather than look for a new start in life. It would have been better had Joab let go of painful past events; instead, he chose to avenge the death of his brother. His rash act of vengeance against Abner brought a curse upon his family and embarrassment and grief to his king. Our spiritual renewal requires that we seek release from our past, no matter how painful it may be. This can only be done as we learn to forgive the people who have wronged us. Forgiveness, though difficult, is the only sure way to let go of a painful past.

2 Sam. 4:9

David acknowledged God as the source of his deliverance. If we cannot give God the credit for our victories, it is obvious that we never really surrendered our lives to him in the first place. We need to give credit where credit is due. Praising God for our victories is a good way to show how much we depend on him and appreciate his help.

2 Sam. 5:3-5

David was anointed to be king of Israel years before his ascension to the throne. David's crowning is a reminder that God is faithful to his promises. Notice that God's promises to David were not fulfilled right away. He had to wait for many difficult years. He spent much of that time as a fugitive, without a home or country. During that time, God supplied David with the help he needed to survive. Spiritual renewal and transformation are not accomplished instantly; they take strength and perseverance. They take a lifetime. But God supplies his strength and protection as we continue seeking him and surrendering to him throughout our lives.

2 Sam. 5:6-8

The arrogant Jebusites thought their city was invincible: They said, "You'll never get in here! . . . Even the blind and lame could keep you out!" (5:6). As we progress spiritually, it is easy to assume that we are immune to a dramatic reversal. Then we are shocked when it happens, as were the Jebusites. We would be wise to be humble and keep our guard raised against a possible fall.

2 Sam. 5:13

At the height of David's political career, he began to build his harem. This was customary for kings in the ancient Near East, but his decision to be like other kings carried a price tag with it. In later years, conflict between David's many children almost destroyed both king and kingdom. Sometimes God's plan will lead us away from the norms of the society around us. If so, we can either follow God's ideal or suffer the consequences.

2 Sam. 6:1-8

David desired to bring the Ark of the Covenant, the symbol of God's presence, to Jerusalem. But he failed to follow God's specific instructions for transporting it. He probably hadn't ever read God's laws concerning the Ark, but God's Word was available to him. There are serious consequences for failing to honor God by not following his instructions. We are responsible for knowing what God desires of us; such knowledge will enable us to act according to his will. The Bible is our primary source for discovering God's will.

2 Sam. 6:12-15

In his initial attempt at retrieving the Ark, David had failed miserably. So David turned to the Scriptures to see what God had to say on the matter. Then he set everything straight, following God's instructions for moving the Ark. As he and the Israelites moved the Ark in the proper way, they discovered that the formerly terrifying task became an activity punctuated with joy. When we do things God's way, we will discover that even trying situations can become occasions for joy.

2 Sam. 6:16-23

Michal's anger was probably driven by far more than her embarrassment at David's conduct. Over the years, Michal had been a pawn on the chessboard of David's life. After Michal had been married to David for a short time, her father, King Saul, had given her to another man to spite David. In later kingdom negotiations David won her back, but then she found herself to be just one wife among many. Her life is a tragic example of how people can be used by others. Michal's anger at the injustice she had suffered affected her ability to enjoy the present. The same thing can happen to us; we need to see the pain that remains, confess it, accept responsibility for our lives regardless of the pain, and then release the pain to God by grieving. When we release our pain and release whatever we are holding against others that stirs up our pain, God can release us from the grip of our past.

2 Sam. 7:9-13

God may have refused David's request to build the Temple, but as we see here, God had an even better plan (Proverbs 3:5-6). God's plan involved establishing the Davidic covenant, which included the promise of an eternal kingdom with a descendant upon its throne forever. David was called upon to delay his desire to build a temple and exercise patience and faith. There may be times when we have to wait patiently for God's will to become a reality in our lives. But God has a special plan for each of us, and when it unfolds we can be sure it will be better than what we had hoped for.

2 Sam. 7:18-29

We cannot see the truth without recognizing God's authority in our lives and allowing him to direct our plans. In this beautiful prayer, David called God "Sovereign LORD" seven times. David realized that God was his master and that following his will was of utmost importance. By submitting to God's will and looking to him for help, we will discover the power we need to overcome our difficulties.

2 Sam. 7:27-29

David took the time to review God's promises to him. God's Word is filled with promises for us, and God delights in our claiming those promises before him in prayer. This can be especially helpful in the midst of a crisis. God does not need to be reminded, but our memory can usually stand some refreshing.

2 Sam. 9:1-7

David had promised to treat Saul's family well for the sake of his friend Jonathan. And though many years had passed since the promise was given, David was true to it. He honored the memory of Jonathan by offering Mephibosheth a place in his household. David stood by his word and did what he could to set right a painful conflict from his past. Being responsible for our promises and dealing with past conflicts are important to our spiritual growth.

2 Sam. 10:1-5

Hanun was needlessly suspicious of the motives of David's men. As a result, he treated them shamefully and brought a great deal of needless bloodshed upon his people. Hanun's suspicions led him to distrust others and negated the attempts of David to forge a productive relationship. Allowing our fears to shape our conclusions can often lead to unnecessary conflict and a disruption of possible positive relationships. Much time, effort, and energy is wasted when we respond with suspicion and fear to the friendly overtures of other people.

2 Sam. 10:11-12

Joab gave wise counsel to Abishai before going to battle. First he devised a simple strategy of attack. Then he recognized God's role in the process. As we struggle with our adversaries, these principles can prove helpful. First we need a plan to follow; God's Word is filled with valuable insights in this regard. We also need to recognize that no matter how good our plan, we still need God's help if we are going to succeed. God wants us to have victory—"May the LORD's will be done."

2 Sam. 11:1-5

David chose to stay home and rest instead of leading his men into battle. That was his first mistake. Then, on a sleepless night, the king saw Bathsheba bathing on a nearby rooftop. David didn't have to watch her; he chose to do so. After indulging his visual lust, David gratified his sexual desire. He fell into the sin of adultery. It is the idle times in life that frequently get us into trouble. Staying busy with healthy activities can do much to protect us from temptation. We are also reminded to diligently guard what we allow ourselves to watch or think about. Failure in our thought life will usually lead to a fall.

2 Sam. 11:14-17

Since Uriah refused to sleep with his wife, which would have covered for Bathsheba's adulterous pregnancy, David engineered his death. One hidden sin almost always leads to another. Only when we confess our sins, bringing them out into the open, can we be free of the destructive cycle. Confession involves admitting our wrongs to God, ourselves, and another person. This is an important key to breaking free from our past failures.

2 Sam. 12:1-7

God chose his prophet Nathan to intervene after David's failure. Notice how Nathan used a story to broach the topic with David. Then, when David had become emotionally involved, Nathan turned to direct confrontation: "You are that man!" Nathan hoped that this piercing declaration would help David realize the serious nature of his sin and bring him to repentance. Nathan's wise intervention should serve as a model for us. He confronted David with the terrible reality of his acts, but he did it in such a way that David would listen. Part of our spiritual growth calls us to participate in the spiritual growth of others. There may be times God will use us to help someone else see the truth of their spiritual condition.

2 Sam. 12:9-13

David's admission here, "I have sinned against the LORD," was the right response to his wrongdoing. Spurred on by Nathan's appeal, it was an acknowledgment of David's accountability before God. He saw the truth, confessed his sin, accepted responsibility for his actions, grieved before the Lord, and pleaded with God to cleanse his heart and set him on the right course (Psalm 51). Notice, however, that despite David's humble confession, he would still have to face terrible consequences (2 Samuel 12:10-12). Our confession only starts the process toward a new life; we still must face the consequences of our past actions. But we can be sure that as we build for a productive future, God will help us with the difficulties arising from our past.

2 Sam. 12:29-31

After the death of Bathsheba's child, David returned to action. By leading the attack upon Rabbah, he returned to his proper role. He should have been attacking this city at the time he sinned with Bathsheba (11:1). To David's credit, even though he had made some poor choices, he made a dramatic turnaround. He went back to doing the things he should have been doing all along. We would be wise to follow David's example.

2 Sam. 13:1-2

The consequences of our sins often remain long after the sins have been forgiven. David had pursued Bathsheba with no thought to the consequences. Amnon pursued an incestuous relationship with his half sister Tamar. This was an indirect consequence of David's earlier failure. Amnon became obsessed with his quest to seduce the girl, and he satisfied his lusts, much as his father had done before him. We must remember that our children learn by watching what we do. Our actions for good or bad could have consequences for generations into the future.

2 Sam. 13:13

As is true with all things God gives to us for pleasure, there is a right context for sexual gratification. God's Word gives us guidelines for having healthy sexual relationships. God calls us to lives of discipline and self-control. Lasting sexual satisfaction can only be found in the context of a committed marriage. Tamar showed that she was aware of this truth as she tried to escape her attacker by appealing to his reason. Amnon, however, was too obsessed to stop and listen to her.

2 Sam. 13:14-16

Amnon's selfish lust brought some terrible consequences. Tamar's future was destroyed, and her hopes for a good marriage were dashed. Amnon had to live with his guilt, and he soon would be murdered for his actions (13:29). Amnon also discovered the bitter taste of sexual activity driven by selfish desire. His self-centered "love" turned to hate within minutes. These contradictory feelings are often experienced when we give in to lust of any kind, alternately embracing and despising the object of our lust. Love is willing to wait, lust will not. Whenever we see lust begin to take hold, we need to confess it to God immediately.

2 Sam. 13:20

As we see here, Tamar was left a desolate woman and probably never married. Her situation should remind us of the price paid by people close to those who are driven by lust instead of love. Sometimes we try to deny the pain we may have caused others. True spiritual renewal can take place only when we honestly consider how we have hurt others, admit the wrongs we have committed, and seek to restore our relationships and the lives of those we have wronged.

2 Sam. 13:21-24

David was enraged when he first heard of Amnon's sin, but he never did anything about it. Perhaps he felt uncomfortable confronting Amnon since he also had failed in this area. David's failure to intervene allowed the problem to fester, and eventually it exploded when Absalom murdered Amnon to avenge his sister's rape (13:29). When someone close to us acts irresponsibly, it is easy to allow our initial rage or concern to subside. Selective avoidance is often easier for us than confrontation. This was how David handled Amnon's sin, but the consequences to his family were devastating.

2 Sam. 13:37-39

David had let two years pass and did nothing about Amnon's sin. His failure to confront his son, hold him accountable, and restore family unity planted the seeds of vengeance and murder. David also allowed three years to go by without communicating with Absalom, who had avenged his sister's rape by killing Amnon. The result was a broken relationship that flowered into a kingdom torn by rebellion. Forgiveness and the restoration of relationships are two primary concerns as we pursue spiritual renewal. David's disregard for these principles brought painful consequences upon both his family and his kingdom.

2 Sam. 14:1-20

Joab, with the help of a woman from Tekoa, intervened in the conflict between David and Absalom. When we are avoiding or ignoring a festering problem in our lives, God often uses other people to confront us with the real issues. The wise woman gently opened David's eyes to the situation and called him to restore his relationship with Absalom. David humbly listened and took steps to bring Absalom home from exile. When God provides wise counsel, we would be wise to humbly listen and then act accordingly.

2 Sam. 14:28-33

Absalom had been in limbo for five years. He was exiled for three years in Geshur. Then he spent two years in Jerusalem without ever speaking to his father. Finally Absalom resorted to theatrics to force contact. He had waited long enough! Reunion with David, when it did come, was far too stilted and formal for genuine reconciliation. No tears were shed; no brokenness was evidenced; no effort was made to set things straight. The relationship between father and son was not restored. It seems that David gave Absalom only partial forgiveness. This led to bondage and bitterness and was probably worse than his giving no forgiveness at all. True forgiveness and reconciliation are an essential part of spiritual renewal.

2 Sam. 15:7-10

It had been nine years since Absalom's murder of Amnon, six years since his return to Jerusalem, and four years since his awkward reunion with David. He had given up hope of ever being truly reconciled with his father. Using religion as a cover, Absalom proceeded to lead an open rebellion against David. We are called to seek reconciliation with the people we have wronged. We must be careful not to delay; if we wait too long, we may suffer as David did.

2 Sam. 15:19-22

As we face difficult trials in life, faithful friends can be our greatest asset. Ittai had led a foreign contingent of David's army for many years. As a foreigner, he could have returned to Jerusalem and declared his allegiance to Absalom. But instead, despite a probable tragic outcome, he stood by David. We need to seek out and cultivate true friends who will come alongside us, even when it would be to their advantage to leave. Sometimes the crucible of affliction helps us to see who our real friends are. It may also strengthen relationships that were not close previously, as in the case of David and Ittai.

2 Sam. 16:5-12

What did David get for 30 years of successful, sacrificial leadership? Stones and curses. Notice that David refused to seek revenge against Shimei. He was well aware of his own failures and was willing to accept Shimei's criticism. He was beyond the point of denial. At this point David put himself in God's hands, trusting that God would do what was right—whether it meant judgment or deliverance. As we experience failure, we need to follow David's example. We must put ourselves in God's hands; he will always do what is best for us.

2 Sam. 17:14

No matter how strong our enemies, they can never thwart God's plan. God used Hushai to lead Absalom toward disaster. God was working behind the scenes to protect David and give him a chance to recover his losses. As we continue following God's will day by day, God will accomplish his purposes for us. And we can trust that he will work behind the scenes on our behalf, supporting us in ways we'll never know.

2 Sam. 18:15

Absalom died tragically: a rebel and the victim of a broken relationship with his father. He was the product of an unreconciled past. If we are driven by painful emotions or events from the past, we also may end up fighting unnecessary battles and end up in an early grave. As with Absalom, we may not be completely to blame for our broken relationships. Yet we are still responsible to deal with the issues and seek reconciliation. If we don't, we will probably destroy ourselves and bring all the people close to us down as well.

2 Sam. 18:32-33

David could have avoided this great sorrow had he been willing to forgive, set things straight, and restore his relationship with Absalom. David had failed to seek reconciliation, and now it was too late. He could never have Absalom back; he could never make things right with him. Once again, as with Amnon earlier, we see that the consequences of sin live long after the act itself. We also see the importance of reconciliation if we want to build a peaceful future.

2 Sam. 19:5-7

Joab was courageous enough to confront David about his improper behavior. David had failed to thank his men for remaining loyal to him throughout the civil war. They deserved grateful congratulations. Instead, David was mourning the loss of his son, who had also been his enemy. Joab's intervention probably saved David's still shaky kingdom. The criticism of a friend is sometimes the right medicine to prompt us to proper action (Proverbs 27:6).

2 Sam. 19:18-20

Shimei, trying to reconcile his relationship with King David, asked that David forgive and forget the stones and insults he had hurled during Absalom's rebellion. Shimei wanted to be set free from the burden of his past mistakes so he could build a solid future. God offers us this kind of forgiveness when we come to his Son, Jesus. Through him our sins are forgiven and forgotten; we are given the opportunity to start over again with a clean slate.

2 Sam. 21:1-14

The land of Israel suffered a drought because King Saul had broken a treaty with the Gibeonites. The consequences of Saul's sin lingered on, long after he had perpetrated it. Sometimes we allow to remain hidden in our lives things that serve as barriers to God's blessings. We need to invite God to shine his light into the hidden areas of our lives; then God can help us remove these barriers. When the Israelites did this, God answered prayers on behalf of the land and its people.

2 Sam. 21:16-17

The acceptance of our limitations is a critical mark of maturity. David acknowledged his diminishing physical strength and agreed to stay away from battle. Sometimes our pride will not allow us to admit our limitations. As a result, we try to do things we are not capable of doing. We might think we are strong enough to resist temptation, even in unsafe contexts. Such an attitude of pride and self-sufficiency will only lead to a fall. We would be wise to follow David and admit there are certain things we cannot and should not try to do.

2 Sam. 22:1

Near the close of his life, David still had a song. You can't sing in a storm until you have surrendered to God's sovereignty. This chapter records lyrics that also appear in Psalm 18. David's song is a celebration of his deliverance. It is this sort of unabashed, authentic praise that puts the devil to flight.

2 Sam. 22:17-18

Through it all, David was able to recognize God's hand in his life. He knew that God had reached down, taken hold of him, and drawn him out of deep waters. Even at the end of his life he recognized his vulnerability and God's sovereignty. This attitude of humility allows us to seek God and surrender to him; it is a character quality we can never afford to outgrow.

2 Sam. 23:5

Through all of David's ups and downs God had stood by him. Early in David's life, God had promised that David would father a dynasty that would rule forever. There must have been times when David wondered if that would ever happen. He had seen his kingdom crumbling and his sons tearing each other apart, but he knew that God could sustain his promises. Here, near the end of his life, David's faith was still strong. Even now, David's God promises hope and forgiveness for us. We can be sure, no matter how bad things may seem at times, that God is faithful to his promises.

2 Sam. 24:10

Here again, David sinned. But notice how sensitive his conscience was: He quickly admitted his failure. Even near the end of his life, David was clearly less than perfect. Yet he was greatly used and deeply loved by God. This reality should encourage all of us; no one is perfect! God never requires perfection; he looks for a humble willingness to accept correction. God's grace is extended to everyone who comes to him without pretense.

2 Sam. 24:15-25

Once again, David's sin brought tremendous suffering upon innocent bystanders. Yet David responded properly and brought restitution. We leave him at his altar, his fellowship with God restored. We should be aware that the consequences of our sins and disobedience will touch the people around us. This is especially true when we are leaders.

1 Kgs. 1:5-6

This conflict between Adonijah and Solomon was one result of King David's earlier mistakes. We are told here that David had never disciplined his son Adonijah. David's failure as a father led to conflict among his sons on a number of occasions. Notice also that Solomon was the son of David and Bathsheba, whose relationship began with adultery, deceit, and murder. Despite the painful start to their relationship, Bathsheba became David's favorite wife, and her son Solomon was promised the throne. It is interesting to see that God used David's many failures to work his divine will for Israel. Solomon became the wisest and most powerful of all of Israel's kings. We have all made mistakes, and yet we can trust God to take our lives as they are—warts and all—and make something good out of them.

1 Kgs. 1:28-40

Nathan the prophet and Zadok the priest anointed Solomon king under the orders of King David. David realized that he was going to die soon and took care of his responsibility to secure the throne for Solomon. Unwisely, many of us put off the task of providing for our family's future. Planning for our death is not being morbid; it is part of what it means to be responsible.

1 Kgs. 1:41-53

Adonijah, David's oldest living son, expected to take Israel's throne and, for a span of a few hours, apparently held the kingship. When Solomon finally gained control, he would have been expected to kill his rival. But Solomon showed great mercy and forgiveness to Adonijah. When we are attacked at a personal level, it is natural to seek revenge. Granting forgiveness requires great strength of character. We need to let go of our desire for revenge, releasing to God the wrongs others have committed against us. We impede spiritual growth when we hold on to our anger and refuse to forgive.

1 Kgs. 2:1-12

David instructed his son Solomon how to rule and whom to trust. David advised his son to keep his eyes on God. Solomon learned who his allies and enemies were. As parents, we need to sit down and talk with our children just as David did with Solomon. This will increase our children's respect for us and equip them to face the challenges ahead.

1 Kgs. 2:13-25

Adonijah again plotted to take the throne by asking that Solomon allow him to marry David's nurse, Abishag. In ancient times, sleeping with one of the king's wives was tantamount to making a claim to the throne. Bathsheba was apparently unaware of Adonijah's plot and took him at his word. Solomon understood the true nature of Adonijah's request and ordered that he be executed, fulfilling his earlier promise (1:52-53). Solomon showed strength by living up to his previous promise. Likewise, we need to live up to any promises we make.

1 Kgs. 3:3-15

God appeared to Solomon in a dream and told him he could have anything he wanted. Solomon asked for wisdom and discernment so he could rule his people well. God was pleased with Solomon and granted him his wish, adding to it wealth and honor. Solomon put his concern for his people before his own desires. And his selfless attitude brought him blessings beyond belief. Often the road to personal blessing is a life lived selflessly for others.

1 Kgs. 3:16-28

Solomon was put in a difficult situation. Two women claimed to be the mother of the same child. Obviously one of the women was lying, but which one? This was a major test of Solomon's wisdom. Solomon handled the situation wisely, and the child was returned to his real mother. Solomon had been given the special gift of wisdom to maintain peace in his kingdom. We all have gifts to offer others, and we need to use these gifts to the best of our abilities.

1 Kgs. 4:29-34

Teaching others what we know is one of the greatest gifts we can offer. Solomon had been given wisdom by God (3:11-12). Instead of being "puffed up" at this point in his life, however, he chose to share his wealth of knowledge with others. People came from other countries to listen and learn from the wisdom with which God had gifted Solomon. All of us have been "gifted" with a special kind of knowledge that comes from what God has allowed us to experience. We can offer our experiences and victories to others, helping them in their spiritual journeys.

1 Kgs. 5:1-12

The benefits of a strong relationship can reach even beyond death. King David had established a sound relationship with Hiram of Tyre. Solomon continued that relationship and enjoyed its numerous benefits. Solomon's great building projects could never have been achieved alone. Hiram was able to provide some of the expertise and many of the materials needed. God may have chosen people to encourage us and to provide us with resources we need for spiritual growth. We need to allow God to use these people in our lives by making ourselves accountable to them and by receiving their encouragement.

1 Kgs. 5:13-14

It is necessary to set priorities in life. Solomon recognized this when he set up shifts of one month at work and two months at home (5:14). This schedule showed that Solomon placed great importance on the family. Whenever we set up schedules at work, home, and church, we need to examine the impact they have on our families. Too often we strive for material things and lose what is much more precious, such as wonderful memories and warm family relationships.

1 Kgs. 8:46-53

Intercessory prayer is an important part of our relationship with God. Solomon showed that he understood this when he prayed for himself and the people. He asked God to have mercy on them before they had even made any mistakes (8:46-50).

Intercessory prayer is important for us, too. When we feel overwhelmed in our journey, we can find strength from the prayers of others. We should ask at least one person to pray for us regarding specific concerns. That person can also hold us accountable for our actions.

1 Kgs. 8:56-60

Solomon's prayer provides us with a good example to follow as we come before God. It can be divided into six steps: (1) He began by praising God (8:56); (2) he requested God's presence (8:57); (3) he prayed for the desire to obey God (8:58); (4) he asked for help to do God's will (8:58); (5) he asked God to remember his prayer (8:59); and (6) he prayed that all people would come to know God (8:60).

1 Kgs. 9:1-9

God promised to extend to Solomon and his descendants the promises he had given to David. But with the promises came added responsibilities. God would not bless his people unless they chose to serve him and live according to his plan. If Israel worshiped other gods, then they would lose their position of blessing (9:6-7). Through the Bible, the Holy Spirit, and godly friends, we are often given warning signs before we commit sins. Unfortunately, like Solomon and Israel, we often ignore the warnings and then must suffer the consequences.

1 Kgs. 9:10-28

Upon completing the Temple and the palace (9:10), Solomon did not take time out for God and family. He also failed to give his labor force a chance to rest. Instead, he went on a building spree. Solomon built the fortresses of Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer and extended the fortified walls of Jerusalem to protect the Temple and palace (9:15). Solomon sacrificed his relationships with God, his family, and his people to fulfill his compulsion to build. Many of the consequences of Solomon's driving personality were suffered by Rehoboam, his son. The people rebelled against Rehoboam because he promised to maintain the heavy burdens of labor and taxes initiated by Solomon (12:1-11).

1 Kgs. 10:23

In the Old Testament, a person's wealth was often seen as a result of his or her relationship with God. Throughout the earlier part of Solomon's life, this was the case. As Solomon grew older, however, his wealth led him to trust in himself rather than in God. We also have a tendency to allow our material wealth and pride to lead us away from God. We must remember that everything we have, even life itself, is a gift from God. As we progress spiritually, we must remember to give God the credit he deserves. If we begin to think we did it alone, we are headed for trouble.

1 Kgs. 11:1-13

Solomon broke God's commands (Exodus 23:32-33) by marrying women from Moab, Edom, and other nations (1 Kings 11:1). God had prohibited marriage with the people of Canaan because he knew that they would lead the Israelites to worship other gods. Not only did Solomon begin to worship other gods, but he even built altars to them (11:7-8). God became angry and punished Solomon for his disobedience (11:9-13). It is tempting to go about things in our own way without looking to see what God has to say on any given matter. When we do this, however, we shouldn't be surprised when we face problems. God is calling attention to our mistakes, hoping we will see the truth, surrender to him, and accept his offer to rescue us.

1 Kgs. 11:14-25

For years, God allowed Solomon to rule in peace. He put down the threat of hostile neighbors so a man of peace could build his Temple (1 Chronicles 28:2-3). But as Solomon turned his back on God, he was confronted with foreign enemies, such as Hadad (1 Kings 11:14) and Rezon (11:23). The problems we now face are often consequences of choices we have already made. Before blaming others for our situation, we should examine our past. We may find that we are the ones responsible.

1 Kgs. 11:26-40

The most tragic consequence of Solomon's sins was realized after his death—Israel was divided. God raised up Jeroboam as the first king of the northern kingdom of Israel. Solomon attempted to kill Jeroboam to try to prevent God's will from coming about (11:40). Solomon's decisions were obviously being driven by a false self-perception. He had begun to believe that his actions could rewrite the will of God. No matter how rich, popular, or important we might become, we will never be able to change what God has said will happen. How often do we fall prey to the sin of thinking we can out-manuever God?

1 Kgs. 11:41-12:1

Solomon's life ended (11:43), and his son Rehoboam inherited the throne (12:1). Before he died, David gave his son Solomon advice on how to run the kingdom (see 2:1-12). But Solomon failed to do this with his son. Rehoboam was left to rule without the counsel of his father. Parents must never underestimate the value of helping their children in their new responsibilities. Parents have valuable contributions to make—contributions that can save their children the pain of learning the lessons on their own.

1 Kgs. 12:6-14

Rehoboam was wise to ask for counsel (12:6). He made a mistake, however, in not evaluating the advice properly. Counsel should always be measured against the principles set forth in Scripture. Had Rehoboam done this, he would have seen that the advice of his peers (12:9-11) was unwise. We need to carefully weigh the counsel we receive, asking God for the wisdom to know what is right.

1 Kgs. 12:15-33

Jeroboam and Rehoboam, the kings who followed Solomon, both made foolish, self-serving decisions. Rehoboam followed his selfish inclinations, which led to the division of the kingdom (12:15). Jeroboam was so afraid of losing his kingdom (even though God had appointed him king) that he broke God's laws. He made idols for the people so they wouldn't have to go to Jerusalem to worship. The selfish attitudes of these two men led entire kingdoms on the path toward sin. We need to realize that our decisions always touch the lives of others. We should base our decisions on God's truth and on how they will affect others.

1 Kgs. 13:33-34

Persistence in doing good is admirable. Persistence in doing wrong displays arrogance and is sure to result in great harm. Jeroboam's apostasy demonstrates just how harmful persistence can be when a person is doing the wrong thing. After he was warned of God's coming wrath (13:1-32), Jeroboam violated God's commands about the priesthood (Numbers 3:10) by making unqualified people priests. Without accountable relationships, all of us tend to start down the wrong track. We would be wise to find a trustworthy friend who will hold us accountable to the truth in God's Word.

1 Kgs. 14:1-11

Jeroboam had made deceit a regular practice during his reign over Israel. As his son was lying on his deathbed, Jeroboam asked his wife to deceive the prophet Ahijah by disguising herself. The result of their combined sin was the destruction of their family. By consciously or unconsciously calling upon another to join us in sin, we cause them to join us in the consequences of our sin. Jeroboam's wife would have been wise to confront Jeroboam about his sinful ways. Instead, she joined him and bore the consequences with him. Confrontation, though difficult, can often help people realize that their intended actions are outside of God's will. If we dissuade them from sin, we help them avoid destructive consequences. However, if we join them in the sin, we help them cause great suffering.

1 Kgs. 14:22–15:3

Children learn from their parents. Rehoboam learned from Solomon that idol worship was all right. So when Rehoboam became king, idol worship flourished. When Rehoboam's son Abijam became king, he followed in the footsteps of his father and "committed the same sins as his father before him" (15:3). We may not realize how deeply our sins affect others, but here we can see that Solomon's worship of idols led to the disobedience of his son and grandson. What are our children learning from our behavior and attitudes?

1 Kgs. 15:9-13

Courage is needed to confront generations of corruption and sinful behavior in any family. Asa showed courage when he confronted the sins of his forefathers by making the decision to serve God. Asa's changes included destroying idols and deposing his grandmother from her position as queen mother. The early years of Asa's reign leave us with a wonderful example of how to foster spiritual renewal.

1 Kgs. 15:25-31

Nadab continued to lead Israel into sin as his father, Jeroboam, had done before him. Leadership must be taken seriously because leaders are responsible for their followers. As a result of the irresponsible leadership of Jeroboam, God destroyed him and his descendants (15:30-31). Leadership and responsibility go hand in hand. If we desire to grow spiritually, we need to take responsibility for our actions. Then we can make the appropriate changes in our lives.

1 Kgs. 15:32-34

Baasha is a good example of a person who was blind to the truth. Baasha ruled in Israel at the time of Asa's reign in Judah (15:32-33). Baasha surely was aware of Asa's reforms and the resultant blessings. He had also seen the sin of his forefathers and the trouble it had caused. But apparently he was blind to the facts, for he repeated the sins of his fathers (15:34). We need to search our lives for areas in which spiritual blindness may keep us from seeing the truth about ourselves. We should ask God to show us the problems that we are unable to see. If we cannot see the problems in our lives, we will never be able to deal with them.

1 Kgs. 16:15-20

Zimri had the shortest reign (seven days) of all the kings of Israel. Omri led the army of Israel against Zimri at Tirzah, and seeing that his end was near, Zimri chose to commit suicide. Zimri, like those before him, was an evil king. But even at the end, he had time to call upon God to save him. Rather than submit to almighty God or face the judgment of his own people, Zimri took his own life. When it looks as if there is no way out of our problems, we need not take drastic measures. We should always start by turning to God for help.

1 Kgs. 16:29-31

A descending spiral illustrates well how we tend to fall progressively deeper into trouble unless we take steps to turn things around. God uses the stories of the kings of Israel to illuminate this principle to us. Ahab continued the downward spiral by being more wicked than anyone before him. Ahab and his forefathers serve as reminders that problems left unresolved will continue, and even worsen, until they are confronted and resolved.

1 Kgs. 17:8-16

The widow of Zarephath demonstrated her great faith in God's ability to provide for her needs. She and her son faced starvation, but still she shared the last of her food with Elijah. She believed that God would come through, so she gave up her last resource for survival. The result was her deliverance. God provided for her need. When we are at the end of our rope, all we need to do is call out to God. He will take care of us and deliver us if we are willing to trust him.

1 Kgs. 18:22-39

"The odds are against us" is a commonly used phrase in our society. Few enjoy being the underdog, the one that the odds are against. The underdog here was Elijah, who was greatly outnumbered by the prophets of Baal. Elijah trusted God to be with him in what has become one of the greatest spiritual victories of all time. When God is on our side, we are always a majority. No problem will ever be able to stop our progress if we turn it over to God. “If God is for us, who can ever be against us?” (Romans 8:31).

1 Kgs. 19:1-4

After our greatest victories, we are often the most vulnerable to a fall. Elijah had just won an amazing victory for God, but suddenly he was so discouraged he wanted to die. He had already forgotten the power that God had shown him on Mount Carmel. We often do the same thing. As we depend on God's power, we may quickly progress spiritually. But then suddenly some kind of opposition comes our way, or we are overcome by temptation. We begin to wish we could die. Let us learn from Elijah. We would be wise to consider our victories as warning signs, times when we should renew our dependence on God. This will help us to experience one success after another.

1 Kgs. 19:5-18

Self-doubt is a trait common to all of us. Elijah doubted himself when he was on the run from Jezebel. God dealt with Elijah in a loving, patient manner by reassuring him that he was not alone. Reassurance and rest are a solid prescription for someone afflicted with self-doubt. We also need to build a community of support to help us through the difficult times.

1 Kgs. 20:10-21

Ben-hadad, who was drinking when Ahab's refusal to surrender arrived, was soundly surprised by Ahab's attack in the middle of the day. He and the other kings of his coalition were drunk, their judgment impaired. While Ben-hadad survived, his men did not. Our spiritual growth can be endangered whenever our judgment is impaired. This is a good reason not to get drunk and to beware of using anything that prevents our thinking clearly.

1 Kgs. 20:35-43

When we reject God's will in favor of our own, we are headed toward trouble. Ahab was commanded to execute Ben-hadad, but he allowed him to live. He saw Ben-hadad as a possible ally against Assyria. The eventual result of Ahab's disobedience was death. We must learn to obey God's Word in every detail. Only then will we be able to live holy lives. If God calls us to remove certain things from our lives, we must act immediately. Allowing them to remain will lead to our eventual destruction.

1 Kgs. 21:1-6

Ahab tried to use his power as king to force Naboth to sell him his vineyard, but Naboth refused his request. Even though Ahab was the king of Israel, he could not force Naboth to sell the land. He had to abide by God's laws. Ahab had been worshiping idols, but he still recognized God's authority in his life. If we are in positions of authority, we must remember that we will have to answer to God for our actions. Are we following his commands?

1 Kgs. 21:7-14

Jezebel's need to "have it all" drove her to the point of plotting the death of an innocent man. An obsession, such as greed, can severely taint our sense of right and wrong. This is evident in the murder of Naboth. If we are driven by such passions, we are in danger of committing a multitude of other sins. When we reflect honestly on our lives, we should seriously consider anything that drives us to step outside of God's will. These need to be confessed and surrendered to God. Then he can help us follow his plan for us rather than be driven by sinful passions.

1 Kgs. 22:30-40

Whatever God says will happen, will happen. Ahab disguised himself in battle so he wouldn't be killed, but he was shot by a stray arrow. Notice that the prophecy in 21:21-24 came true here, three years after Elijah spoke it. Justice is served by God in his timing, not ours. People may seem to get away with sin for a while, but eventually their deeds will catch up with them.

1 Kgs. 22:41-43

Jehoshaphat was a good king who built on the positive steps of his father, Asa. Successful parenting involves modeling godly standards of conduct for our children. As they watch us progress spiritually, they will learn about God's power and the blessings that result from trust and obedience.

2 Kgs. 1:2-5

Ahaziah sought guidance from the wrong spiritual source, and God made his error clear in no uncertain terms. Not everything passed off as spiritual guidance is “the real thing.” God is far from pleased with those who know better but still seek spiritual renewal by means of “alternative resources,” such as the New Age movement today. God is the only valid source of help, and the Bible our standard of truth.

2 Kgs. 1:5-17

Ahaziah sought to silence Elijah and persisted in trying to capture the prophet even after his first two military detachments had been destroyed by God. Ahaziah’s resistance to the truth is amazing. As his spiritual blindness deepened, Ahaziah failed to see the innocent lives he was throwing away. We, like Ahaziah, often fail to notice the toll that our resistance to the truth takes on the people around us. Admitting our sins will not only help us but will also stop us from hurting the people close to us.

2 Kgs. 2:1-7

Even mature believers can suffer from spiritual blindness. It was difficult for Elisha to face the truth about Elijah’s departure. Elijah tried repeatedly to prepare him for this hard inevitability, but Elisha did not want to let go. Even the younger prophets were aware of this painful reality, but Elisha did not want to deal with the loss looming on the horizon. Because we are vulnerable to spiritual blindness as well, we should be attentive to the insights of those who are helping us face the truth.

2 Kgs. 2:13-15

We all recognize the warping impact that an ungodly hero can have on us. But we should also realize that a godly mentor can make a significant impact for the better. Here, for example, Elisha took over where Elijah had left off. Elisha was recognized to have received the same spirit as Elijah. He lived his life with the same faith and commitment as his mentor. We need to seek out godly examples who will teach us to obey God. By following a godly example, we will discover a pathway toward maturity.

2 Kgs. 3:1-3

Simply beginning the process of spiritual renewal is not enough by itself. It was truly a positive move that Joram tore down the idolatrous pillar, but that did not constitute full surrender to God in any sense. Whatever motivated Joram to destroy the pillar was not heartfelt enough to bring about a complete break from idolatry. He had not come to the point of surrendering fully to the true God and forsaking all others.

2 Kgs. 3:5-14

When we show the slightest inclination to seek God, God will respond in some way, perhaps directing us to someone who can lead us closer to God. Here Joram's foray into the wilderness of Edom brought him and his thirsty troops to a point of desperate need. In their predicament, they consulted Elisha the prophet for insight. He challenged Joram's idolatry and urged the desperate king to be aware of the godly influence of King Jehoshaphat of Judah. We should not ignore the godly people God has placed in our lives. They are there to encourage us and help us grow spiritually.

2 Kgs. 3:16-20

God had a battle plan devised for Joram. Joram had only to admit he needed help; God was there to ensure the victory. God always has a plan to rescue us; he provides the resources and guidance we need. We just need to surrender to him and obediently follow his battle plan.

2 Kgs. 4:1-7

People willing to pursue God can count on the fact that when they can't hold on anymore, God is holding on to them. He is the God of limitless resources who can provide incredibly when we are in need. As was true with the widow and her sons, God sometimes waits until the last minute to act in order to stretch our faith. Then, when he comes through, our faith in his power is strengthened for the battles ahead.

2 Kgs. 4:8-37

In these verses, God used Elisha to perform two amazing miracles. First, Elisha promised that a woman unable to bear children would have a child. Then, after the child died, God used Elisha to bring him back to life. The God who performed these impossible miracles is also able to provide all the power we need. Notice that God often uses people, like Elisha, to bring about new or renewed life. We should be aware of this, accepting God's gifts through the people chosen to help us along the way. We must remember, too, that God may also use us to touch the lives of others in need.

2 Kgs. 5:1-8

People who are hurting deeply enough will try almost anything to find relief. For Naaman, a Syrian general, looking for help from a prophet in Israel was a desperate long shot. Naaman was willing to sacrifice prestige and wealth to find healing for his terrible disease. In the end, Naaman was healed of his leprosy, but not because he was willing to offer a reward. The real issue was not how much it cost; it was more important that he sought help from the only one who is really able—the one true God.

2 Kgs. 5:9-15

Strong-willed people, especially leaders who are used to getting their way, often have a hard time humbling themselves. What Elisha asked Naaman to do was simple, but it was hardly dignified. Elisha certainly didn't do things the way Naaman thought they should be done. Fortunately, Naaman was not so angry and resistant that he was unwilling to listen to the advice of his officers. By following Elisha's instructions, Naaman showed that he had surrendered to God. That allowed him to receive the healing God wanted to give him all along.

2 Kgs. 5:20-27

The shameful example of Gehazi and the resulting consequences he faced should serve as a warning to us. Those of us who are empowered by God and gifted to do his will need to be aware that there are those who would try to take advantage of us. Some people may try to get us to use the gifts God has given us for selfish gain. When we see others who are gifted by God, we must make sure that we never try to take advantage of their God-given gifts for our selfish purposes. God is never pleased with this kind of exploitation.

2 Kgs. 6:1-7

By helping the prophet retrieve the borrowed ax head, God revealed his concern for the day-to-day needs of his people. He also showed how concerned he is for the maintenance of relationships. In ancient times, an ax head was extremely valuable, and losing such an item would have resulted in conflict between the borrower and lender. So Elisha's miracle helped the young prophets not only with their building project but also with the maintenance of their relationships.

2 Kgs. 6:14-20

Elisha's servant was terrified by the awesome Syrian army because he couldn't see the help available to him. He was totally unaware of the great army of heavenly soldiers on his side. At times, we may be tempted to give up; our spiritual enemies may seem too powerful to overcome. But as we begin to see through the eyes of faith, we will discover the awesome power available to us. God's power is far greater than that of any of the enemies we might face. If we trust God for help and ask him for the ability to see the truth in the spiritual realm, we will find his power more than sufficient for our needs.

2 Kgs. 7:1-20

Many who stand on the brink of a spiritual breakthrough never progress because, as much as they desire God's victory in their situation, they believe it to be impossible. The officer assisting the king tragically missed his opportunity for victory and freedom because of his unbelief. The obstacles we face are never too great for God. But if we fail to believe this, we may be destroyed by the obstacles that God could easily have removed. By looking to God for help and placing our lives in his hands, we can enjoy blessings beyond our wildest dreams!

2 Kgs. 8:7-15

Spiritual renewal in the fullest sense cannot proceed when people refuse to handle things honestly. Elisha knew that King Ben-hadad could have recovered if he had been allowed to do so. However, Hazael would not let this happen because of his own desire to dominate and control. Likewise, some of us are hindered from spiritual growth because we allow ungodly people to dominate our lives. We need to surround ourselves with people who will support our spiritual growth.

2 Kgs. 8:16-22

During King Jehoram's relatively brief rule over Judah, we see the actions and fruits of sinful leadership. In spite of God's great patience with him (8:19), Jehoram continued to follow in the evil ways of his father-in-law, Ahab. When he found himself in dire straits, his army abandoned him. He was left alone to cope with his loss of Edom. If we resist God and oppress others, we can expect to be deserted by the people closest to us. We would be wise to learn from the sad consequences that resulted from Jehoram's wicked behavior.

2 Kgs. 9:1-10:36

The judgment that befell King Ahab's family (see 1 Kings 21:19-29) should remind us that God does punish sin. No one will ever get away with it forever. God delays his judgment to give people more time to repent (see 2 Peter 3:9), but his patience does run out. After giving plenty of opportunities to repent, God always acts decisively to punish those whose sinful behavior has hurt others.

2 Kgs. 10:1-11

As gory as this event was, it appears to have been motivated by commitment to God's will, as earlier expressed by the prophecy of Elijah about the destruction of Ahab's family (10:9-10; see 1 Kings 21:19-29). Although later events show that Jehu was not altogether pure in his motives either, he at least seems to be acting responsibly and with accountability toward both God and his people (10:9-10). He went too far in his killing spree, however (see Hosea 1:4-5). Sometimes our own zeal can cause us to go beyond what is necessary, being swept up in the emotion of the situation. Even our zeal must not cause us to overstep what God has called us to do.

2 Kgs. 10:17-29

Even in this crowning victory over Ahab's legacy of Baal

worship, two troubling defects in Jehu's personality and actions are seen. First, Jehu was not honest about why he wanted the Baal worshipers to gather (10:18-25); he manipulated them with a lie. Second, he got rid of the Baal worship in the northern kingdom but not all the false worship (10:26-29). Spiritual renewal and growth can proceed only with honesty and wholehearted commitment to God. Telling only part of the truth or changing only part of our lives will lead to only partial spiritual growth.

2 Kgs. 10:30-33

It is entirely possible to please God in one part of our life and to displease him greatly in another. Jehu honored God by destroying Ahab's family, and he was blessed for it. However, his divided spiritual allegiance prevented the full restoration of the northern kingdom (10:31). Because there was no clean break from the sinful worship patterns established long before by King Jeroboam, Israel moved closer to judgment (10:31-33). We, too, need to turn our entire lives over to God's control. The areas we refuse to commit to the Lord will only lead to a future downfall.

2 Kgs. 11:1-3

Spiritual renewal can be difficult, even terrifying, if we live with someone who is given over to evil. Such a person may attempt to do whatever it takes to intimidate you and undermine your spiritual growth. The flaw in Athaliah's "reign of terror" was her failure to believe God's promises to David and his line (see 2 Samuel 7:12-16). The survival of young Joash was not only God's will; it was also a manifestation of God's ongoing care of his chosen people (see 2 Kings 12). We must trust in God's care for us, even when we live in close proximity to someone who is given over to evil.

2 Kgs. 11:4-21

Jehoiada's faith was the catalyst for Judah's move toward God. The process of anointing Joash and proclaiming him the rightful ruler was undergirded by Jehoiada's courage. He desired to restore Judah to a right relationship with God. Under his leadership, the people and king made a commitment to worship God, follow his commands, and destroy the altars to false gods. All the people were responsible for the nation's restoration, and everyone was held accountable. Courage to change our situation, and personal accountability to others are necessary parts of preserving our spiritual gains.

2 Kgs. 12:1-3

The forty-year reign of King Joash of Judah was a time of substantial personal and national restoration. Yet, as much of a model of faith as Joash was, he never completely destroyed the places of idol worship—the shrines on the hills. Spiritual renewal and transformation is a lifelong process; we must not stop when we start to feel good. We need to ask God to give us the strength and patience to continue in our journey, and then go on to see God fulfill his will for our lives.

2 Kgs. 12:4-16

Repairing the Temple was an important part of Judah's spiritual restoration. Yet raising the money to rebuild proved difficult. The priests and people were not willing to make the sacrifices necessary to get the job done. So Joash set up a system in which the priests were accountable for the money they received (see 12:7). With this system of accountability, the people of Judah were able to accomplish the renovation process. This should remind us that accountability and concrete planning are important for successful renewal. Without them, we will probably take the path of least resistance and make little progress.

2 Kgs. 12:17-18

Joash had made great strides toward leading Judah into spiritual restoration. But here we see that his faith wavered easily when he was put in a difficult situation. Under threat of Syrian attack, he gave away the Temple treasury to pay off King Hazael of Syria. He failed to turn to God, who was capable of delivering his people from the Syrians, and sought his own human solution. The consequences were great national losses and a perpetuation of faithless living. Even after great success, we are still susceptible to giving in to fear and spiritual blindness. We need to trust God to defeat the problems that threaten to overwhelm us.

2 Kgs. 13:1-7

The experience of King Jehoahaz of Israel is a solemn case study of what happens when you approach spiritual growth halfheartedly. Jehoahaz apparently was humbled by his consistent defeats at the hands of the Syrians. He sought God when he saw his desperate situation. However, after God graciously granted a measure of relief and freedom, Jehoahaz fell back into his old sinful patterns once again. The consequences of his actions then led to the near collapse of his rule. It is relatively easy to seek God and put our lives in his hands when we are in a desperate situation. However, true spiritual renewal and genuine growth take place when we place our lives in God's hands—even when things are going well.

2 Kgs. 13:9-19

King Jehoash of Israel was another individual who started to redirect his life toward God but didn't go far enough. Though he "did what was evil in the LORD's sight," Jehoash of Israel was greatly touched emotionally when the prophet Elisha was about to die. He expressed his great respect and his grief for Elisha. Thus, Elisha urged Jehoash to follow his instructions, which would lead him to victory. Jehoash followed the instructions halfheartedly and was thus limited in his progress. Anything less than complete commitment to God will result in an incomplete spiritual renewal and transformation.

2 Kgs. 13:20-23

Both the power and patience of God are evident in these verses. The reviving power of God is witnessed even in the dead body of Elisha (13:21). The patience of God is tied to his covenant made with Abraham and his successors (13:22-23). Except for God's great covenant loyalty, the northern kingdom would have been destroyed long before its fall to Assyria in 722 B.C. God offers us a covenant through Jesus Christ, through whom we are forgiven and empowered to become God's children. God will care for anyone who believes in his Son's name. Jesus Christ is the source of all true spiritual renewal.

2 Kgs. 14:1-7

Amaziah of Judah demonstrated how a parent's behavior often has a significant impact on the behavior of his children. Amaziah "followed the example of his father, Joash" (14:3). Joash's various strengths and weaknesses were evidenced in the behavior of his son Amaziah. Notable was their blind spot in regard to the shrines of false worship (14:4). Perhaps it is best to say that Amaziah's commitment to God was mostly defined by Joash's commitment. Likewise, we need to remember that our children are watching us and may well follow suit. Learning to trust God and obey his plan for godly living is more than just a personal victory. It is an opportunity to leave a godly legacy for our children and grandchildren.

2 Kgs. 14:8-14

This tragic incident illustrates the dangers of overconfidence. After having defeated the Edomites, King Amaziah of Judah picked a fight with Israel—a fight that ended in disaster. It is easy to become overconfident in our own abilities after winning a major victory—we feel invincible! But we must proceed with caution because we may be letting our emotions blind us to reality. We need to continually recognize our need for God's helping hand and remain accountable to those who will help us to see if we are becoming overconfident in our own abilities.

2 Kgs. 15:1-7

King Uzziah of Judah followed in the footsteps of his father, Amaziah (14:1-20), and his grandfather, Joash of Judah (12:1-21). Like them, he displayed a basic faith and commitment toward God (15:3). But also like them, he tolerated false worship at the pagan hilltop shrines (15:4). As a result, even though his reign was fifty-two years long, it was mostly sad and solitary because God judged his halfhearted devotion by giving him leprosy (15:5). Partial commitment will never bring complete results. Only full devotion to God will bring lasting change.

2 Kgs. 15:8-12

The long, evil reign of Jeroboam II of the northern kingdom (14:23-29) could not guarantee stability or power for his equally evil son, Zechariah (15:9). God allowed Zechariah to survive for only six months before he was assassinated (15:10). God kept the word of judgment he had made against Jehu generations before (15:12; see 10:30); this was the end of his primarily evil line of descendants. Jehu's failure had led to the failure of his descendants. Unless we seek God now and surrender to him, the results may be disastrous for our own children and grandchildren.

2 Kgs. 15:32-38

The reign of King Jotham of Judah, first as coregent with his father, Uzziah (15:3-5), and then in his own right (15:32-33), was a mixed bag. He exemplified faith and commitment to God up to a point, as had his predecessors. On one hand, he gave attention to God's Temple. However, the ongoing presence of the hill shrines and false worship in Judah (15:34-35) prompted God to "turn up the heat." God allowed Syria and Israel to attack in order to make Jotham see the truth (15:37). God often brings trials into our lives in order to make us see the truth that we may have been trying to avoid.

2 Kgs. 16:1-4

It was only a matter of time before the halfhearted attempts at spiritual renewal by Judah's kings would cause great damage. Ahaz's reign wasn't even a mixed bag. He completely denied his need for God and disobeyed God's laws (16:2-4), even sacrificing his own son to pagan gods. Halfhearted relationships with God over the course of many generations had a cumulative impact on the later generations. Children can quickly see through the hypocrisy of halfhearted devotion. This may cause them to reject everything we stand for—especially the good things. What kind of example are we setting for our children?

2 Kgs. 16:5-9

King Ahaz paid tribute to the king of Assyria, placing his trust in the human resources at his disposal. In seeking human solutions to the conflict, however, he failed to trust God to help him. The peace that Ahaz established in Judah was dependent on the payment of money. When Ahaz's son Hezekiah refused to pay tribute money to Assyria, Assyria attacked (see 18:7, 13), but God protected Hezekiah and his kingdom. Had Ahaz turned to God for help, the peace he sought would have been unconditional—built upon the unchanging power and presence of God. As we face difficult problems, we also need to look to God for help and not assume that we can overcome them merely by human effort.

2 Kgs. 17:1-23

This chapter records the progressive degeneration of the northern kingdom of Israel. The reign of Hoshea was the straw that broke the camel's back. He led Israel through its final climactic period of sinful resistance to God, which ended in Assyrian exile (17:1-7). But then notice that the nation of Judah is criticized for making the same mistakes, following the same evil path toward judgment and exile (17:18-23). The southern kingdom of Judah should have looked at the consequences of Israel's disobedience and then pursued God. Have we ever criticized others for their sinful behavior and taken notes on the consequences of their actions? If we have, we should be careful to redirect our course in the opposite direction. We must be careful to avoid Judah's terrible mistake.

2 Kgs. 18:1-8

King Hezekiah made a radical break from the evil ways of his father, Ahaz. Hezekiah's stated faith and commitment gave him the courage to stand against Judah's sinful past and take significant steps to rebuild his kingdom in God's way (18:5). His honesty in assessing the spiritual state of his kingdom and his willingness to break from sinful ways made him one of Judah's greatest kings (18:6-7). We also must honestly admit our failures and do all we can to rebuild our lives in keeping with God's commands.

2 Kgs. 18:9-16

Although Hezekiah was one of the best of Judah's kings, he responded exactly as his father had at the threat of the Assyrian invasion. Hezekiah trusted God with the smaller things, but at the threat of invasion, he looked for help elsewhere. Rather than trusting the God who gave him his kingdom, Hezekiah trusted the very enemy who was attacking him. Whenever we choose to trust in the things that are ruining our lives rather than in the God who created us, we put ourselves at great risk. God can be trusted with both the small and the large problems we face. Whether we are facing troubles great or small, we would do well to surrender our lives fully to God.

2 Kgs. 18:17-19:1

King Hezekiah of Judah bought off Assyrian invaders, but it was only a matter of time before the enemy would come back for more. The Assyrian spokesman knew that Hezekiah had failed to trust in God in the earlier crisis. So he used that very point to intimidate the people of Judah into surrendering. It was a terrible situation to face, but at least it led Hezekiah to surrender to God. Even if our situation looks hopeless, it is never too late to seek God and surrender to him.

2 Kgs. 19:2-36

As Hezekiah faced this seemingly impossible situation, he humbly turned to God for help. God answered Hezekiah's desperate plea and delivered his people from a formidable enemy. In this case, God didn't roar in with blaring trumpets or a terrifying earthquake. The enemy army was quietly lured from its siege of Jerusalem. We may wish for an immediate, miraculous deliverance from our problems, but it doesn't usually happen that way. God often uses quiet resources—the steady support of a friend, the encouragement of a support group, the quiet leading of the Holy Spirit—to strengthen us in spiritual growth.

2 Kgs. 20:1-11

Hezekiah pleaded with God to spare his life and recounted his previous consistent faith and commitment to God. So Hezekiah was granted another 15 years of life. God also performed a great miracle as proof of his promise of life to Hezekiah, who seems to have been greatly troubled by doubt. Although God may not make the sun go backwards for us, we should never doubt that God is able to rescue us if we honestly cry out to him.

2 Kgs. 20:12-21

Hezekiah made a major mistake. When the delegation from the rising nation of Babylon came to Jerusalem, Hezekiah put on the most impressive show possible. Not only that, he took the credit for all his wealth instead of giving the glory to God (20:15). The unconsidered consequences of his prideful actions came to painful fruition in the Babylonian exile (23:36–25:30). God desires humility from us. We must always remember that he is the true source of our success.

2 Kgs. 21:1-17

Manasseh reversed all the positive steps instituted by Hezekiah for Judah's national restoration. His evil and oppressive reign further incited the Lord to send Judah into exile. Judah would follow the northern kingdom of Israel into exile just as it had followed them into sin. By the end of Manasseh's fifty-five-year reign, the possibility of meaningful restoration in Judah seemed very dim. This reminds us that those who submit to our leadership will often suffer the consequences of our mistakes. Leaders must be all the more careful about following God's ways.

2 Kgs. 21:19-26

King Amon of Judah was a virtual "carbon copy" of his father, Manasseh. God allowed Manasseh's oppression to continue for many years, but he did not do the same for Amon. God was lovingly anxious to promote one more cycle of restoration in Judah from their unbelief and idolatry. Josiah, Amon's young son, would be the initiator and primary instrument for this revival among God's people (22:1-23:30).

2 Kgs. 23:1-20

The revival under Josiah wasn't halfhearted. Unlike the moderate but incomplete restoration achieved by many of Judah's earlier kings, Josiah concluded that there could be no middle ground. Josiah destroyed all aspects of the longstanding idol worship. He also went to great lengths to reinstitute proper worship of the true God. As we seek spiritual renewal, we also must strive to completely purge sinful practices from our lives.

2 Kgs. 23:36–24:4

The reign of King Jehoiakim of Judah was basically an eleven-year military and political nightmare. Rather than admitting his hopeless situation and turning to God, Jehoiakim continued to try to maneuver his way out of each successive crisis. As disaster after disaster befell Jehoiakim, his resistance to the truth only deepened. He continued to trust in his own power and sank deeper into despair. There is no need to continue in the nightmare of sin. If we are willing to see the truth and face the reality of our situation, we can turn to God for help. He will help us to break out of our downward spiral.

2 Kgs. 25:8-26

Like it or not, Judah finally had to face the truth. King Nebuchadnezzar ordered Jerusalem, the once proud capital of Judah, to be destroyed. He plundered the city and Temple, carrying all its valuables off to Babylon. Realistically, the restoration of Judah was now humanly impossible. What was needed was a full-scale resurrection for God's people. God has to allow some of us to come to a point where life seems to be over, leaving us in a situation that is humanly impossible to bear. At that point we may become open to the possibility of the new life offered by Jesus Christ. "Anyone who belongs to Christ has become a new person. The old life is gone; a new life has begun!" (2 Corinthians 5:17). New life and restoration are possible no matter how impossible the situation. All that we need to do is ask Jesus Christ into our lives. Then he will take away our sins and give us a new start; that is true spiritual renewal.

2 Kgs. 25:27-30

The kindness shown to captive King Jehoiachin by Evil-merodach decorates the tragic conclusion of Kings with a glimmer of hope. With the Babylonian exile came the destruction of Jerusalem and an end to the rule of the Davidic kings. Many exiled people lost all hope that God might still be with them. They probably thought that God's promises to his people through Abraham and David were no longer valid. When they heard that Jehoiachin, one of David's descendants, was being treated well in exile, however, hope must have stirred in their heavy hearts. Perhaps God's promises to them were still valid! The continued story of rebuilding after the Exile shows us that this was true. God still planned for their restoration, and through this broken nation the King of kings, Jesus the Messiah, would be born. No matter how terrible a situation we face, there is hope for the future. Our sin has been paid for by the work of God's Son; God is still in the business of restoration.

1 Chr. 1:1

As the father of the human race, Adam is the head of our family, so to speak. The account of his life in the perfect environment of Eden is given in Genesis 2. We often are prone to blame our environment or family background for the mistakes we make. Living in Eden, Adam couldn't use this as an excuse. He had no choice but to take responsibility for his actions. Blaming our environment or circumstances for the sins we commit will never lead us to spiritual renewal. Each of us must accept responsibility for our past mistakes and redirect our course to correct them.

1 Chr. 1:1

"Adam . . . Seth, Enosh. . . ." Notice that neither Cain nor Abel followed Adam in the genealogy of Israel. The account in Genesis 4 records how Cain committed the first murder by killing his brother, Abel. One of the consequences of Adam and Eve's first sin was their deeply troubled family. It is encouraging to notice, however, that despite Cain's and Abel's failure to leave descendants in Israel's ancestry, God provided Adam's broken family with a new start. He gave them another son named Seth.

1 Chr. 2:3-15

Many regard these verses as a boring list of people in David's ancestry, the family line of the promised Messiah. Among these names, however, are hidden stories of God's grace. Notice that the Messiah's line comes through an illegitimate union between Judah and Tamar (2:4; see Genesis 38). Notice also that the line passes through Salmon, who fathered Boaz through Rahab, a former Canaanite prostitute from Jericho (Joshua 2). And Boaz bore Obed through Ruth, a Moabite woman (Ruth 1–4). God used numerous people, some less than ideal, to bring his Messiah into the world. God can also use us significantly in his plan, no matter what our past.

1 Chr. 2:42-55

God rewards faith. This entire section is devoted to the family of Caleb, one of the 12 spies sent by Moses into Canaan. You will remember that Caleb, along with Joshua, brought a positive report based entirely upon his faith in God's provision. Caleb refused to be discouraged by difficult obstacles, believing that God could overcome all of them. We need not be stopped by difficult circumstances. Like Caleb, we should remember that God is able to overcome anything we might face. God is the source of true victory.

1 Chr. 3:1-24

This chapter is devoted entirely to the family of David. As such, it is the most important of the genealogies—the line of the promised Messiah. Many of these names are cited in the New Testament genealogies of Jesus in the books of Matthew and Luke. Just as the entire Old Testament looks forward to the Messiah, Jesus, we also must look to him if we hope to experience a meaningful future.

1 Chr. 5:1

After plowing through all these names, people usually wonder, Why are these lists in the Bible? Each of these names represents an individual and, in some cases, a family. It is obvious from this that God values individuals and he uses them to work his plan. Most of these people are not well remembered in history. Some of them were far from ideal. We don't have to look far to realize that God cares for us—no matter who we are or what we've done.

1 Chr. 6:1-30

This chapter contains the priestly genealogy. Access to God is vital. In the Old Testament, the priests represented the people before God. Whenever any breach in fellowship was committed, the priests had to serve as mediators to effect reconciliation. In the New Testament, Jesus Christ stands before God as our Mediator. This truth is where spiritual renewal begins, for Christ makes it possible for us to deal with our sin and draw close to God.

1 Chr. 6:31-48

These verses contain a genealogy of the family that led the people in worship. Music and singing were vital parts of serving God in the Temple, calling the people to express their thanks joyfully to God. Our worship of God needs to contain the element of joy. Joy is an aspect of worship that is often ignored. Worship must never become an arduous task—it should be a happy response to a good and loving God. It does not need to be an elaborate ceremony. It begins with simple thanks for God's grace, power, and rich blessings in our lives.

1 Chr. 8:1-33

When the people demanded a king, God gave them Saul. These verses contain an account of his personal genealogy. Even though he was well received by the people, it soon became obvious that he was attempting to build his kingdom with only human resources. Any project, on either a personal or a national level, must be blessed by God if anything lasting is to result.

1 Chr. 9:1-44

This chapter contains a record of the Jews who returned to Judah after the Babylonian exile (539 B.C.). The books of Chronicles were written to encourage these people as they rebuilt their nation after their 70-year exile. The Temple had been destroyed, and the Davidic line of kings had been discontinued. It must have been a great encouragement for them to see that they were still God's people. God had made promises to their ancestors, and though they had gone through hard times, God's promises were still valid for them. In Scripture, God gives numerous promises to his people. In Christ, God's promises are for all of us to embrace, no matter what we have done or suffered in the past. We, too, are the people of God.

1 Chr. 9:1

We are reminded of the primary reason for Israel's punishment of exile—the people had turned from God and worshiped idols. The idols in our lives often lead us into similar states of exile.

When we worship anything other than God, our values get distorted. We forget about God, our families, and the other important things in life. But just as Israel was restored through their exile, we also can find restoration through the exiles we may experience. Even when our past is filled with sin and failure, God has the power to give us a new start. All we need to do is look to him.

1 Chr. 10:1-10

Here is a horrifying account of personal defeat. Saul had started out well. At first, he was humble; he was willing to follow the leadership of the prophet Samuel. But then he began to take matters into his own hands. Once he started on the downward spiral, he added rebellion to rebellion. The final outcome was the defeat described in these verses. We need to be careful! We are capable of starting down this same pathway toward complete disaster. We must seek God daily. And no matter how we may go astray, he can redirect our course back to his ways and redeem us.

1 Chr. 10:11-12

In spite of Saul's failure and final downfall, the men of Jabesh-gilead remembered the kindness that Saul had shown toward them. They were loyal to his memory and, at great personal risk, rescued the bodies of Saul and his three sons. Faithfulness and loyalty are important traits that should characterize the life of every believer.

1 Chr. 10:13-14

As we face problems in life, we must be careful about where we go for help. God is our true source of help. In many cases, looking elsewhere will prove fatal. This was true in Saul's case. Notice that Saul's sins, which cost him the throne, came from his failure to seek God for help. Instead, he went to a source that stood against God. God is waiting to help us. All we need to do is seek the true God and surrender to him. Looking to the occult and other sources for help will always spell disaster.

1 Chr. 11:1-3

With every God-given opportunity comes a God-given responsibility. This is clear in the career of David, the man after God's own heart. The people of Israel pledged themselves as subjects to him. In this relationship, the people had a perfect right to look to David for military leadership and personal protection. This is an example of a proper definition of roles. When God gives us opportunities to help others, we need to realize that with the position of leadership comes a responsibility to "shepherd" God's people.

1 Chr. 11:4-7

These verses recount David's capture of the city of Jerusalem, which would soon become the center of worship for Israel. This place remained the focal point for Israel's worship for centuries and is important in the thinking of Jews to this day. Today God has provided his people with a worshiping community—the church. Through the church, God encourages us, giving us the strength we need to persevere in our spiritual walk.

1 Chr. 11:9

All of us desire success of one kind or another. When the Bible makes note of the success of any individual, it always attributes it to a strong relationship with God. True success is possible only when God is with the victorious individual. If we achieve personal greatness but are spiritually bankrupt, our efforts will have been in vain.

1 Chr. 12:1-7

All the warriors mentioned here were well prepared for conflict. Proper preparation is necessary for winning any battle. The example of David's warriors should encourage us to be prepared as well. When we are armed with God's armor, we will be prepared to fight life's battles (see Ephesians 6:10-18).

1 Chr. 12:16-18

These verses record how a group of warriors came to David, wanting to submit to his leadership. During the period of anarchy in Israel after Saul's death, many desperately sought direction for their lives. David gave this band of warriors the direction they needed. We all desire our lives to be meaningful. Notice that the volunteers here were not only anxious to serve, but they were also empowered by the Holy Spirit. We also must depend on the Spirit to empower us, for "it is not by force nor by strength, but by my Spirit, says the LORD of Heaven's Armies" (Zechariah 4:6). If we hope to move forward spiritually, we must do it with God's power.

1 Chr. 12:18

In this passage, under spiritual direction, Amasai proclaimed peace to David. How can there be peace in the midst of conflict? The Hebrew word shalom conveys the idea of completeness. It is a peace based on the fact of God's presence, not on the surrounding circumstances. As such, this peace may be enjoyed even during warfare. No matter what personal conflicts we face, we can find some peace and comfort in acknowledging daily that God is in complete control of our lives and our world.

1 Chr. 13:1-10

Here we see David doing a good thing but in the wrong way. God had prescribed exactly the method of moving the Ark of the Covenant. David used the expedient way—and the results were catastrophic! God's clear guidelines were ignored. As we go about our lives, we can fall into the same trap. We must be extremely careful to obey God in the means we use to grow spiritually. Spiritual growth is clearly within God's will, but we need to go about it in God's way. If we don't, we will have to suffer the consequences.

1 Chr. 13:9-11

We must take great care as we deal with obstacles in our path. We are prone to do the first thing that comes to us—almost a knee-jerk reaction. But some things are absolutely forbidden by God. Uzzah discovered this basic principle too late. We must always be careful to do things God's way; otherwise, the results could be disastrous.

1 Chr. 13:13-14

We often experience setbacks when we attempt to accomplish something good. Such was the case in this passage. David wanted to bring the Ark to Jerusalem, but the death of Uzzah brought his project to a standstill. The good thing went undone because God's requirements were not observed. We often experience similar setbacks in our spiritual lives when we try to achieve spiritual goals in our own way. We must never forget to seek God's will God's way. He is concerned that we not only reach the goal but also go about it in the right way.

1 Chr. 14:1-2

God gave great success to David. Here we see one reason why God blessed him so much: God wanted to give joy to his people. By helping David, God was helping the whole nation of Israel. Often when God gives us success, we become a source of blessing and help to many others as well.

1 Chr. 14:16-17

David did as God commanded, and God granted him success. Simple obedience was certainly the key to David's victory. It is important here that we do not misunderstand and begin to see God as a "push-button" deity who will act or react based on a set formula. Some teach that if we have enough faith or if we follow certain instructions, we will experience an immediate solution. This is not always the case. Sometimes our obedience will be answered by new and difficult circumstances. When hard times fall repeatedly upon us, we need not fear that God has rejected us. Sometimes he uses such situations to work his will in us. We can be sure that God will always stand with us, even if he doesn't always give us an immediate solution.

1 Chr. 15:25

What happens when victory is finally achieved? What are the emotions? What are the reactions? This verse says that these people did their work "with a great celebration." The joy of accomplishing God's will is one of the sweetest joys of all.

1 Chr. 15:27-28

In modern America, there seems to be an ingrained notion that people, especially men, should hide their true emotions. Many Christians support this idea, believing they should be stoic about what they are feeling. Contrary to this popular view, God's Word insists that we be honest about our feelings, releasing them to God. In this passage, David responded with an intense emotional outburst that was commended, rather than condemned, by God. Expressing our sorrow and joy to God should characterize our lives as Christians; both grieving and rejoicing are part of genuine spiritual growth.

1 Chr. 16:1-3

When God's will is accomplished, celebration should be an automatic response. We should celebrate each victory we have, no matter how small it may be. When David finally brought the Ark to Jerusalem, he threw a great celebration. The whole city enjoyed a happy time of worship. This kind of appropriate celebration will affirm our progress and encourage us to move forward once again.

1 Chr. 16:8-13

In times of victory or defeat, turmoil or stability, God remains the same. Our response to him in all circumstances should include the elements of thanksgiving and praise. There is never a time when it is inappropriate to seek God.

1 Chr. 16:14-22

There are times when it is tempting for us to think that God has somehow lost control of things. We are not the only ones who have felt this way. There were times during Israel's history when God seemed far away. God's plan for his people must have seemed obscure and distant. But as time passed it became clear that God had been with Israel all along—even as they wandered in the wilderness. God used the difficult times to work out his plan. Sometimes we experience crises and emergencies that seem beyond God's sovereign control. We can be sure, however, that even in such times God is there and in control! During these times we must learn to rest in our knowledge of God's goodness and love.

1 Chr. 17:1-2

In these verses, David had a wonderful idea: He wanted to build God a temple to house the Ark. David's idea to build the Temple was a good one, but, like all good ideas, it had to pass muster. It needed to conform to God's will and timing. We must learn to seek God's will and submit to his plans in all that we wish to accomplish.

1 Chr. 17:3-4

As we make our plans, we must remember that God's will and timing always take precedence over ours. Nathan, who had approved the idea of the Temple earlier, discovered that the timing was wrong in God's eyes. We tend to believe that if we desire a good thing, God's timing for it is now! But we must learn that God knows what he is doing and his plans and timing are best.

1 Chr. 17:9-10

David wanted to build God a house—and that was a good idea. But this did not conform to God's plans. God assigned that job to Solomon, David's son. More important, God promised to build a "house" for David—a dynasty that would reign forever. From that dynasty came David's greater son, Jesus Christ, who provides salvation for all willing to receive it! This promise to David became a promise for all who need cleansing from the powerful effects of sin.

1 Chr. 18:4

Why did David cripple the horses? God had commanded that Israel's kings never build up large stables of horses (Deuteronomy 17:16). God wanted Israel to depend on him for protection, not on great armies of chariots and horses. This is an important principle for us to keep in mind. Only God can truly protect us and give us the power to overcome. We must be sure that as we build human relationships to support our spiritual growth, we don't forget to depend on God, for without his strength, our personal resources are never sufficient for success.

1 Chr. 19:1-4

The distrust of Hanun's men caused them to misread David's friendly overtures. So instead of building a strong relationship with Israel, they created a destructive one. We often make the same mistake, especially if we have been disappointed by people we love. If we are lied to, we learn to distrust others. This causes us to cut off even the healthy relationships offered to us. We must learn how to discern between the people we can trust and those we can't. Honest relationships are extremely important, and we cannot afford to alienate the people who will encourage us in our spiritual growth.

1 Chr. 19:5

In this very delicate situation, David showed deep sensitivity to the embarrassment of his ambassadors. He gave them time to recover their dignity before returning home. Surely there is a lesson here for all of us. Like David, we need to exhibit sensitivity to others as they deal with embarrassing issues. This is especially true when people confess sins to us. We must be trustworthy confidants and help them to overcome these sins through the Lord's power.

1 Chr. 19:13

Joab's words here are worth remembering. He began by calling his men to act, but he also recognized that ultimately God was in control. We need to keep the same tension before us. We are responsible to act and strike out boldly to seek God's will. Yet, ultimately we don't have the power or resources to accomplish God's will on our own. We always need God's help. We need to continually leave things in God's hands, seek his will, and surrender to him. As we face trials, we can rest assured of God's powerful help, but we also need to take responsibility for our situation and act accordingly.

1 Chr. 20:1-8

David knew who his enemies were, and he acted accordingly. With God's help he overcame each one in turn. We often make the mistake of allowing enemies into our lives. We entertain sinful behaviors that are dangerous to our spiritual health and treat them as our friends. David understood who his enemies were. In spiritual battle, we need to identify our enemies and act accordingly.

1 Chr. 21:1

God punished David for his acts of adultery and murder, but the punishment suffered for David's census was far greater and more widespread. What was wrong with counting the people? David was counting the people to assess their human strength. He was putting his trust in Israel's numbers and the army it could muster. He had forgotten that with God's help, they needed no army at all to achieve victory. We often make the same mistake. We seek to do things in our own strength, rather than depend on God's. Seeking spiritual growth, or anything else, through human strength alone will end only in disaster.

1 Chr. 21:17

It is a terrible thing, but very often our personal sins have consequences in the lives of other people. David was aware that the people of his kingdom would suffer for his sin. It is heartrending to hear David's admission of guilt. He saw the truth, confessed his sin, and accepted full responsibility for it. Then he prayed diligently for the rescue of his people. When people close to us suffer because of our sins, we would be wise to pray that God would give them special grace to overcome the consequences of our failures.

1 Chr. 22:1-5

Although David would never build the Temple, he collected numerous materials for the project. A whole chapter is dedicated to David's preparations for building the Temple. What does this have to do with spiritual renewal? Any building project needs careful planning and the necessary materials and resources to get the job done. We need to assess our needs and seek help and resources to support us in our spiritual growth process.

1 Chr. 23:1-2

At a certain point in his life, David stepped down from his position of responsibility. Since many of us derive our self-worth from our activities, this is often a difficult thing to do. But none of us can take responsibility for everything. There are some matters that we are not capable of handling. We may need to relinquish some of our burdens to others. This is important for maintaining the balance necessary to preserve spiritual gains. We need to determine our limits and then stand by them. Being loaded down with responsibilities can be just as destructive as being irresponsible.

1 Chr. 26:1-32

God wants all kinds of people to serve him. Not everyone is a musician or worship leader. Not everyone is gifted with a golden tongue. This chapter reminds us that gatekeepers, ushers, financial officers, and those essential to running the services are also valued by God. These duties, which we might consider mundane, are of great importance. God values our service even if few people ever become aware of it.

1 Chr. 27:1-34

This chapter details the proper lines of authority for the people of Israel. Recognizing and submitting to authority is important for God's people. Believers need to be accountable to others, including those in our local church body.

1 Chr. 28:8-10

David took the time to pass on to Solomon the wisdom he received from God. David recognized that he and his descendants were responsible to obey God's commands. Likewise, we must recognize God's greatness and pass this knowledge on to our children.

1 Chr. 28:19

God had a plan for building the Temple in Jerusalem. Here

David passes it on to Solomon, who would complete the project. God also has a plan for each of us, and his blueprint includes our spiritual growth. Each of us is a “temple” of the Holy Spirit; God actually dwells inside his people (1 Corinthians 6:19). In light of this, our thoughts and behavior should reflect the character of the one who dwells within us.

1 Chr. 29:3

Setting proper priorities is necessary for aligning our lives with God’s will. We need to put God first in our thinking. We also need to help others. David gave out of his own personal wealth and energy. His personal treasures would help support the work of God in Israel. His giving would also contribute to the blessings received by people worshiping at the Temple for generations to come.

1 Chr. 29:11-12

David’s prayer of praise is filled with important truths. It recognizes that God is the source of all true success. It ascribes all greatness, power, glory, victory, and majesty to him. It recognizes that God is the source of all riches and honor; God is sovereign over peoples, tongues, and nations. These are essential truths. We must daily affirm the truth that God is our source of strength. We are helpless on our own, but God is more than able to help us overcome our struggles.

2 Chr. 1:1

We all want to succeed, whether in spiritual or practical ways. At the outset of this book, God gave Solomon unprecedented success in everything he did. But notice that Solomon's success depended on God's presence with him. We, too, must recognize that true success depends on God's helping presence in our lives.

2 Chr. 1:7

What might we request if God gave us this offer? Solomon asked for wisdom, passing over the opportunity to ask for wealth or power. Solomon made a request that would serve the best interests of his people. God was pleased with his selfless attitude and rewarded him with more power and wealth than he ever could have wished for. We also need to ask God to give us his wisdom and whatever else we need to fulfill his calling for us.

2 Chr. 2:1

In order to move toward spiritual renewal and transformation, we must begin with the proper resolve. Solomon was anxious to fulfill the plans God had for him. He began by building the Temple—a huge task—perhaps even an impossible one! God has certain tasks ordained for each of us. Some of these tasks will be difficult; some may even seem impossible! But with God's help, we will be able to accomplish them.

2 Chr. 2:5

Solomon's achievements for God were great. Here we are told why: "This must be a magnificent Temple because our God is greater than all other gods." The deeper our relationship with God, the more we will realize how much he deserves our obedience and service. The realization of God's great power and love should give us courage as we seek to grow spiritually. God is sufficient for the task.

2 Chr. 2:6

This verse reminds us of how great God really is. He is far greater than we can even imagine or understand. Solomon's Temple was magnificent, but even it was not good enough for God. God's greatness may discourage some of us. Why would such a great God bother with us? We need to learn that though God is great, he is also loving and gracious. He reaches out to sinful, weak people like us to bring about our restoration. And as great as God is, he certainly does not lack the power we need to accomplish anything he has called us to do.

2 Chr. 3:3-17

This begins a description of the Temple's specifications. We are overwhelmed by the immense wealth required to build it. Large projects always require great resources. God is the only one with sufficient resources for the huge task of spiritual transformation. We need to learn to depend on his power.

2 Chr. 4:1

Immediately upon entering the Temple area, worshipers were confronted by the great bronze altar. This object would remind them that each individual was in great need of forgiveness. Great numbers of animal sacrifices were offered in payment for the people's sins. Before any approach to God was possible, forgiveness had to be achieved through sacrifice. God made it possible for us to approach him through the death and resurrection of his Son, Jesus Christ.

2 Chr. 4:2

The bronze tank is the item of furniture corresponding to the Tabernacle's laver. As they did God's work, the priests became covered with the blood of the dead sacrificial animals. They were in need of immediate cleansing. Likewise, we often encounter pollution in our daily walk. How wonderful to remember that our sins can be forgiven daily through Christ!

2 Chr. 4:20

Light was needed in the Temple's dark interior. Even as the Holy Place would have been dark were it not for the lampstand, so would our lives be in total darkness without the presence of the "Light of the World"—Jesus Christ.

2 Chr. 5:13-14

The trumpets sounded with joy! The singers sang out their praises to God in a beautiful celebration! For the victories in life, we must remember to respond with thanksgiving and praise to God.

2 Chr. 5:13-14

As the people praised him, God's visible presence appeared and entered the Temple. For us to have any hope for spiritual growth, God must be present in our lives. No matter what we set out to do, God's presence is essential for true success. No wonder God's people responded with such a joyful celebration. They were assured that God was with them! This fact alone gave them confidence in a future filled with joy and success.

2 Chr. 6:14

We often become impressed by trendy strategies that claim they can solve all our problems. New techniques or programs promise to accomplish great changes in our lives. Usually these programs are filled with human wisdom that requires us to effect change in our own strength. This verse reminds us that there is no substitute for God. He alone is able to transform us into the people he created us to be. Notice also that God's promises are realized only when we submit to God's will. Though God gives us the power to change, he also requires us to surrender to him.

2 Chr. 6:18

As humans, we have many limitations: Our strength is limited; our money is limited; our time is limited; our opportunities are limited. But this verse reminds us that God is never limited. God's resources can be counted on in every circumstance we face.

2 Chr. 7:1-3

A powerful response is called for when we achieve victory over a significant challenge. Solomon and the people had just finished a monumental task—the Temple was now complete! In verse 3, the response of the people was enthusiastic: “He is good!” They affirmed God’s goodness as they thanked him for his help in building the Temple. As we experience great victories, we also need to affirm God’s goodness in our lives.

2 Chr. 7:14

This verse contains one of God’s greatest promises to Israel. Although this promise was given specifically to Old Testament Israel, we know that through Jesus Christ, God does listen to our prayers and he does forgive our sins as we confess them. It is part of God’s nature to be forgiving. This fact should give us great comfort as we seek to deal with past failures.

2 Chr. 8:3

Even Solomon, whose name means “peaceful,” encountered some conflict. We, too, will encounter conflict in life. If we believe that the world should be a bed of roses, we are not acknowledging God’s Word that tells us to expect troubles, trials, and spiritual attacks. We must recognize that we are in a constant state of warfare against the spiritual forces that stand against God and his people. Then we can begin to prepare ourselves to overcome these struggles through the power of God.

2 Chr. 8:11

In Solomon’s day it was common for a head of state to confirm a treaty with a foreign king by marrying one of his daughters. Solomon accepted this worldly practice and married numerous foreign wives to validate his treaties with the surrounding nations. Sadly, this practice eventually led Solomon into idolatry. We should learn from Solomon's mistake of being negatively influenced by those who do not know God.

2 Chr. 9:28

When we seek security from any strategy or resource outside of God himself, we are in grave danger. For most of his reign, David had refused to trust in horses and the military advantages they offered (1 Chronicles 18:4; see Deuteronomy 17:16). Unfortunately, Solomon did not follow his father's example. No matter how far we progress spiritually, we must always remind ourselves that God alone is capable of leading us to victory. No one else is capable of providing all the support we need through life's trials.

2 Chr. 10:1-14

Rehoboam followed some foolish advice in responding to what seemed a reasonable request. Advice is cheap. We will always have people trying to tell us how to live. Sometimes that advice will be godly; other times it will be foolish. Before heeding the advice of any individual, we should look at the fruits of his or her own life. Where have their decisions led them? Also check to see whether or not their advice is in line with God's revealed will. If it contradicts God's Word, it must be rejected.

2 Chr. 10:15-16

Responding to Rehoboam's foolish decision, the people rebelled and split the kingdom of Israel in two. Two wrongs never make a right. The consequences that followed the rebellion and division were far more harmful to Israel than were the foolish responses of Rehoboam. Their actions eventually led the northern tribes away from God and toward destruction. We are often tempted to take rash measures when we are mistreated by others, but we must always be extremely cautious in our response.

2 Chr. 11:1-12

Rehoboam was tempted to take matters into his own hands. He was preparing to attack Jeroboam and the northern kingdom when God's messenger came to warn him against the invasion. To Rehoboam's credit, he listened to God and abandoned his plans. Our plans and programs likewise need to be subject to God's leading. We need to be ready to redirect our course based on the direction God gives us. If we try to do things our own way, the outcome will always be disastrous.

2 Chr. 11:13-17

The priests of the northern kingdom found themselves in a difficult position when King Jeroboam ascended to Israel's throne. Jeroboam ousted the true priests and replaced them with priests who would support his rebellious plan. The true priests surely wanted to stay in the land of their childhood, but it was obvious that the northern kingdom had turned from God. They moved to the southern kingdom where true worship was still being maintained. We often face similar decisions. We may have to choose between a good job and a healthy or comfortable environment for our family. We would be wise to do as the priests did. They maintained their relationship with God at the cost of personal stability and comfort. Our relationship with God should shape all the decisions we face.

2 Chr. 11:15

It is tempting to use religion to justify our actions. Jeroboam ordained false priests in order to provide religious respectability for his kingdom. We attempt to justify our actions by finding something in the Bible to support us or by naming some religious authority figure who agrees with our position. When we do this, however, we usually only compound our problems by defending the sin in our lives. As we grow spiritually, we must continually examine our lives, note our sins, confess them to God, accept responsibility for them, and seek, with God's help, to root them out.

2 Chr. 12:1-4

When things begin to go well, we need to sound the alarm! With success comes the danger of pride and self-sufficiency. When Rehoboam got things established and began to feel secure, he forsook his obligation to lead the people closer to God. As a result, the whole nation fell into sin and was consequently defeated by the Egyptians. When we are doing well spiritually, the same thing tends to happen. When things are going well, we begin to relax. We need to stay alert, realizing that good times often make us more vulnerable to a fall.

2 Chr. 12:5

Turning from God has its consequences. Rehoboam had failed to lead his people in godly ways. As a result, God sent him a message: “You have abandoned me, so I am abandoning you to Shishak.” God loves us and wants us to live lives that honor him. We cannot sin with impunity.

2 Chr. 12:13-15

How might our epitaph read? What have we done that is worth remembering? How will people remember our relationship with God when we die? Rehoboam’s epitaph reads this way: “He was an evil king, for he did not seek the LORD with all his heart.” Sadly, we may spend too little time really seeking God. When we die, our wealth and achievements will soon be forgotten. Our relationship with God and the things we do for him are the only things that will last. We would be wise to put our energy into things of eternal value.

2 Chr. 13:1-9

Abijah was about to go into a battle in which his army was vastly outnumbered. But instead of giving in to fear, he stood firm because of his faith in God’s promises. As we grow spiritually, we will face many difficult situations. If we try to face them alone, we will fail. We need to stand on the many promises God has given us in Scripture and trust him to deliver us.

2 Chr. 13:5-9

Taking God at his word is not always easy, especially when God’s promises seem impossible. In the face of Jeroboam’s massive armies, King Abijah of Judah had good reason to doubt God's promises. Practically speaking, the army of Judah didn't have a chance. But King Abijah still trusted God's promises for the kingly line of David. The positive results of Abijah's trust should encourage us to do just as he did. When God makes a promise, we should have no doubt that he will keep it.

2 Chr. 13:10-14

Abijah was able to confidently say, "The LORD is our God, and we have not abandoned him." Because of this, he could be assured that the Lord would watch over him as he fought against those who were disobedient. We, too, must always be certain that we are living in obedience to God as we work to serve him.

2 Chr. 13:18-20

There is great danger in rebelling against God. Sometimes it may seem that God is not paying attention— people seem to get away with murder. But what we sow, we will eventually reap. Jeroboam seemed to be successful, but eventually his sins caught up with him. He was soundly defeated by a small army from Judah that was set firmly in God's hands. Sin has inevitable consequences. We must root it out of our lives before it leads to our downfall.

2 Chr. 14:9-15

Asa was about to be overwhelmed by a mighty enemy army, but he cried out to God. This was his first step toward victory.

We, too, must be willing to surrender to God and trust him to deliver us when we are struggling.

2 Chr. 15:1-8

God sent a prophet to warn Asa, king of Judah, that sin would bring suffering to his kingdom. Asa responded to God's warning with appropriate action. He destroyed the idols in his kingdom and rebuilt the altar of God. We also receive warnings from God. He speaks to us through the Bible, through people, and through our conscience. We need to listen for his direction and then act appropriately. Regular times of prayer and meditation on God's Word help us to be more sensitive to God's leading.

2 Chr. 15:4

God is a forgiving God. No matter how deep the stain of sin upon the people of Israel, God would forgive them if they chose to repent. We may have failed so often that we believe we are beyond the point of God's forgiveness and care. It is never too late to turn to God! When we cry out for help, he will respond with restoration and forgiveness. Then he will give us the courage we need to deal with the problems before us.

2 Chr. 16:7-9

Hanani rebuked Asa for depending on the king of Aram instead of trusting in God. No matter what the odds, God could have delivered Judah without the help of Syria's army. We must learn that God is the only one who is truly able to deliver us. We need to put our trust in him.

2 Chr. 16:10

When someone honestly points out a problem or failure in our lives, we have a decision to make. Rather than humbly trying to discover the truth behind the charges, many of us become angry with the person who told us about our problems. When Hanani rebuked Asa for hiring the Arameans, the king immediately made the wrong response—he punished Hanani. He would have been wise to listen and allow God to correct him through the insight of another. As we grow spiritually, God will send people who can see errors in our lives that we cannot see. We should humbly ask God to help us see the truth about what they are saying. Then, instead of reacting in anger, we should accept responsibility for our failures and ask God to redirect our course.

2 Chr. 16:12-14

King Asa's feet became seriously diseased, so he sought a human solution to his problem. Despite the measures he took, however, Asa's condition worsened, and he died. Asa failed to look to God for help. In times of trouble, God is often the last resource we turn to. We are willing to try every new solution to any problem that we face. Such solutions, however, will never be able to give us true victory. God alone can do that. We would be wise to go to him first.

2 Chr. 17:3-4

The role models we follow make a tremendous difference in how we respond to the challenges we face. It is refreshing to discover that Jehoshaphat chose a positive role model to give direction to his life. Based upon the work of his worthy exemplar, Jehoshaphat instituted excellent reforms in Judah. We must be careful not to follow those whose paths lead away from the heart of God. We need to follow paths that lead us to seek God and surrender to him.

2 Chr. 17:5-6

We can learn a lot about people by the way they find fulfillment in life. Jehoshaphat “was deeply committed to the ways of the LORD.” In following God’s paths, he led his kingdom away from idolatry and sin. Like Jehoshaphat, we need to begin by committing ourselves to the ways of the Lord.

2 Chr. 17:7-9

Notice that Jehoshaphat used the Word of God as the foundation for his reforms. As we attempt to effect changes in our lives, we need God’s Word to direct the changes we make. Scripture furnishes the only adequate foundation for change. We need to take the time to study it so we can discover God’s will for us and learn of the power God offers us.

2 Chr. 18:3-5

Generally, when any project is undertaken, companions and allies must be chosen. However, there is grave danger in choosing our allies wrongly. Jehoshaphat’s alliance with Ahab almost caused his undoing. In this verse, he not only allied himself with Ahab, but he declared himself to be in complete agreement with this godless king. Companions are necessary; it is difficult to accomplish spiritual growth alone. But choosing the wrong companions can be as destructive as having no companions at all.

2 Chr. 18:3-7

Ahab called upon a false prophet; as a result, he got false information. Jehoshaphat wanted to discover what God had to say, so he looked for a true prophet. The false prophets told the people whatever they wanted to hear. True prophets spoke God's Word whether the people liked it or not. As we seek God's will in Scripture, we must be careful not to reject messages simply because we don't like them. Sometimes God will call us to do things that we don't really want to do. In the long run, however, God's way is always the best way. Looking for quick and easy solutions to our problems will never yield permanent results.

2 Chr. 18:13-22

Often it is expensive to be absolutely faithful to God, but it is worth the cost. The prophet Micaiah knew that he would get into trouble if he told King Ahab he should abandon his plans to attack Ramoth-gilead. At first, he appeared to support Ahab's plans, but in the end Micaiah took a stand and told the truth. When God speaks to us in his Word or by some other means, we need to do things his way. We must stand for the truth no matter what the people around us are thinking and doing.

2 Chr. 18:31-34

After hearing God's warning to abandon his plans, Ahab took precautions so he would not be killed in the battle. He dressed as a common soldier so he wouldn't be a target of the enemy. In spite of crafty preparations, however, Ahab was killed by a "random" arrow. He believed that he could escape God's will, but in trying to do so, he sealed his own doom. When God directs us through his Word or through wise counsel, we would be wise to listen. Following God's will for us, no matter how hard that may be, is the only way that leads to life.

2 Chr. 19:1-2

When we make wrong alliances and trust in sources of human strength and ability, there will be consequences to pay. The prophet Jehu met Jehoshaphat to proclaim a message of judgment. Because of Jehoshaphat's cooperation with Ahab, he would have to bear the consequences. We should take this as a warning. Our strongest friendships should be with people who will encourage us to obey God's Word and follow his plan for our lives. Seeking help from anyone else will lead to negative consequences and suffering.

2 Chr. 19:5-7

The judicial system in Judah was corrupt, but rather than despair, Jehoshaphat did something about it. He challenged the judges to pay attention to God's way. He reminded them that the fear of God and his justice was the only proper motivation for action. God's ways should also direct our decisions. We must take time to seek his wisdom in the Scriptures.

2 Chr. 19:11

Jehoshaphat appointed people to make final decisions for justice in the land. He wanted to make sure that the people would be treated justly and that the truth would never be hidden. As we reflect on our lives, we must judge our past performance by God's standards of justice. We must also look honestly at our failures, avoiding any tendency to be defensive. If we are fearless in our stand for truth and honesty, we will build the foundation for true spiritual growth.

2 Chr. 20:6-9

God is in charge of our world! He is master over all peoples and nations! Trust in his sovereignty is the basis for victory. As we learn to believe in God's control even when things aren't going our way, our lives can be serene in the midst of conflict. We can know that God desires what is best for us. Seeking his will and obeying his direction for our lives is always best.

2 Chr. 20:15

If God is on our side, even the greatest of difficulties will not stand in the way of victory. Just as the prophet spoke to the people of Israel, urging them to hope in God's power to deliver them, God speaks to us in the Bible. He calls upon us to trust in him. The most common command in all of Scripture is "Do not be afraid!" God shows us time and again that no matter how terrible the circumstances, he is able to give the victory. All we need to do is trust in him.

2 Chr. 20:17

It is hard for some of us to give up control. We want to do things our way, and often we want the credit for success! God told the people of Judah to sit and watch as he gave them a great victory. We need to learn to give our battles to God. Whether we like it or not, we cannot win them alone. With God's help, however, no enemy is too large or terrible. If we are willing to put our lives in his hands, God will give us the victory.

2 Chr. 21:1-6

It is seldom wise for a father to give extravagant gifts to his children. King Jehoshaphat of Judah gave his children great wealth, but apparently he did little to teach or guide them. Our role as a parent includes much more than merely supplying our children's material needs. They need comfort, direction, and the gift of godly values.

2 Chr. 21:6-7

What an amazing contrast between father and son! Here we are told about the faithlessness of Jehoram. He patterned his reign after the kings of the northern kingdom, and he even married one of Ahab's wicked daughters. The consequences of turning from God are exhibited in Jehoram's failures. It should encourage us, however, to see that Jehoram's actions never curtailed the faithfulness of God.

2 Chr. 21:8-10

In the book of Genesis, we first learn of the feud between Jacob and Esau. Jacob's descendants became the Israelites, and Esau's descendants became the Edomites. In these verses we see that the family feud was still going on hundreds of years later. This should be a lesson to us: The conflicts that we fail to resolve will be passed on to our descendants. For their sakes, we would be wise to confront our broken relationships here and now.

2 Chr. 21:18-20

Jehoram's life of rebellion against God and his failure to fulfill his royal responsibilities led to a tragic end. He was disowned and unwanted by his own people—they didn't even give him an honorable burial. We can only wonder what would have happened had Jehoram sought God, surrendered to him, and reconciled himself with his people. Rejecting God's plan always leads to failure. God's way is the only way to redirect the course of our life before it is too late.

2 Chr. 22:2-4

It is a terrible thing to follow a bad example and listen to foolish advice. Ahaziah had a poisoned heritage and surroundings. His grandparents were Ahab and Jezebel. His mother was godless Athaliah, who served as his chief adviser. Sadly, Ahaziah never turned to God to receive the gift of forgiveness and reconciliation. Regardless of what our spiritual heritage has been, however, we must accept responsibility for our own lives and our relationship with God.

2 Chr. 22:10-12

Again and again we are reminded of the truth that God is sovereign. Everything was against Jehoiada and young Joash, yet they escaped the bloodbath of Jehu and then avoided the slaughter of Ahaziah's family by Athaliah. As we face difficult circumstances, we can find encouragement in the fact that God is ultimately in control. If we entrust our lives to him, he will lead us through even the darkest situations.

2 Chr. 23:1-11

Some people claim that when we trust in God to deliver us, we need not make any further preparations. This is not what we see in Scripture. Even when we entrust our lives to God, he still expects us to take action. In order to accomplish God's will, Jehoiada made painstaking plans. He did everything necessary to restore the royal dynasty of David to Judah's throne. Sometimes doing right requires careful planning.

2 Chr. 23:15-17

After the overthrow of the usurper Athaliah, Jehoiada led the people of Judah to renew their relationship with God. After times of rebellion, we need to renew our commitment to God. He is always willing to offer us a fresh start—no matter how serious our failures have been.

2 Chr. 23:20-21

The results of conflict are not always negative. After the overthrow of Athaliah, the people rejoiced and there was peace in Jerusalem. Conflicts can help us pinpoint problems in our lives. Once we see them, we should accept responsibility for them and ask God to help us redirect our course.

2 Chr. 24:1-2

When we are ill-equipped or unprepared for a certain role in life, it is important that we find a godly mentor to give us direction. The boy-king Joash was greatly blessed to have Jehoiada to guide him in his early decisions. The old priest kept him going in the right direction, leading him in the ways of God. All of us need the help of a godly mentor who knows what we are going through. We must avoid the tendency to go it alone. Let us ask God to provide others who will hold us accountable, help us grow, and preserve our spiritual gains.

2 Chr. 24:4-5

Not only must we be committed to doing God's will, we must also be committed to doing things when God wants them done. Procrastinating when God has shown us what he requires is a form of disobedience. Plans to do God's will "tomorrow" should never be mistaken for obedience. If we know what God wants us to do, we need to get on with it!

2 Chr. 24:17-20

After Jehoiada died, Joash turned away from God. Jehoiada's son Zechariah rebuked Joash for his failure to obey God's laws. Joash was unwilling to face the truth about his behavior and even killed Zechariah to hide from it. When we are confronted with our own sin, it is tempting to deny its existence. But instead, we should admit it, repent of it, and seek God's forgiveness. Then we can redirect our course and praise God as he redeems our lives.

2 Chr. 25:1-2

When it came to God's evaluation, Amaziah's grade was good—but not great. He did the right things, but he failed to do them with the right attitude. As we follow God, we need to do so with our whole heart. We need to seek God sincerely. If we are just going through the motions with hopes of receiving God's blessings, our spiritual progress will be slow and temporary at best.

2 Chr. 25:4

Here we are reminded that we all must take responsibility for our sins. While we may realize that some of what we suffer is a consequence of our parents' mistakes, we must not use this as an excuse for our own failures. We need to take responsibility for them. We must also take responsibility for how we choose to deal with the suffering brought into our lives by others. We alone are responsible before God for our actions and our reactions.

2 Chr. 25:5-8

As Amaziah faced a powerful enemy, it seemed a good idea to hire a large contingent of mercenaries from the northern kingdom. But God told Amaziah to send all the foreign troops home and to trust him for the outcome. When we face difficult situations, we may be tempted to try every human resource available before we turn to God. We must always remember that God is our ultimate protector and provider. When we turn to him in times of need, he may provide through people or in some other way. If we turn only to human resources, we are headed for trouble.

2 Chr. 26:16-18

Uzziah had begun his reign so well; he had the potential of being one of the greatest kings in Judah's history. God blessed him in practically everything he did. But then he became proud and entered the Temple sanctuary, something only the priests were allowed to do. Uzziah discovered an important truth—we cannot sin without suffering the consequences.

2 Chr. 28:1-2

The northern kingdom of Israel was in the throes of death. It had been vanquished by the Assyrians; most of its people had been taken into captivity and would never return. How foolish for Ahaz of Judah to follow the example of the kings of the northern kingdom! He could see where their behavior had led them. We need to be careful about whom we choose to emulate.

2 Chr. 29:1-2

Hezekiah received a high commendation indeed: He followed the example of his ancestor David. King David was continually used as the standard for success as a king. As we seek to grow spiritually, we need to find worthy role models. David is an ideal role model, for though he made many mistakes, he was always willing to humbly confess his sins and seek reconciliation with God and other people.

2 Chr. 29:3-5

Hezekiah began his reign in the right way—seeking God. His father had led Judah into sin and idolatry. The Temple had been closed, and worship of the Lord was discontinued there. Hezekiah recognized the failures of his father and set out to make changes. He opened the Temple's doors and enjoined the priests to cleanse themselves and reinstitute the proper worship activities. When our lives are filled with problems, refusing to see the truth and face reality is not the way to make things better. We need to act like Hezekiah, who assessed the problems of his kingdom and then did what he could to change them.

2 Chr. 30:6-8

Hezekiah called his people to break from the sinful patterns set by their ancestors. Notice that Hezekiah had already broken from the patterns set by his father. He was the ideal person to call his people to do the same. He knew their situation well. Some people feel absolutely imprisoned by the failures and wrong patterns set by their parents. However, there is hope for all who trust God. We don't need to be bound by our parents' failures. We have a chance for spiritual renewal any time we are willing to seek God and surrender to him.

2 Chr. 30:17-19

God is high and holy; he is sinless and perfect. We can approach him only because he graciously allows us to do so. In the Old Testament, seeking God was prescribed by definite procedures. Hezekiah prayed on behalf of those whose preparations were not as complete as they should have been. In the same way, though we have fallen short of perfection, we, too, can come before God because of the sacrifice of his Son, Jesus Christ.

2 Chr. 31:2

Hezekiah here illustrates another important aspect of spiritual growth. He insured constant praise to God by setting up structures and personnel to lead the people in worship. We must never forget to thank God for his help as we seek to overcome the powerful problems in our lives. Praising God is important for spiritual renewal.

2 Chr. 31:4-8

Sometimes doing good is a thankless task. Hezekiah made certain that encouragement was given to the people who took part in Judah's restoration. When the people gave sacrificially to God, Hezekiah praised them for their generosity. How necessary it is for us to be a part of a comforting and strengthening fellowship! We need to remember to give and to receive the encouragement we all need.

2 Chr. 32:3-6

Trust in God—and work hard to do his will. Hezekiah gives us an excellent example of how we should act—with both faith and hard work. He knew that only God could deliver Judah from the Assyrian invasion, but that didn't stop him from doing what he could to protect Jerusalem. Hezekiah built a great tunnel to bring water from a spring into the city, ensuring a steady supply during a siege. There is no question that Hezekiah trusted God for victory, but he made certain that he did all he could to prepare for the invasion.

2 Chr. 32:7-8

King Hezekiah of Judah had his armies; he had made elaborate preparations for defense. But he didn't trust this to bring him victory. It is clear that Hezekiah looked only to God. We are all prone to depend on our own resources in a crisis. Our self-sufficiency and pride will not bring spiritual renewal or restoration; only God has the power we need for victory.

2 Chr. 32:20-22

Prayer is essential to spiritual renewal. We cannot seek God and surrender to him apart from prayer. Every key to spiritual renewal involves prayer as our means of communication with God. And God does hear and answer the call of his people. He does not always send an immediate and miraculous rescue as he did for Hezekiah, but he always answers. God's intervention in this instance is clear. By any human estimation, Sennacherib should have won this battle, but God gave Judah the victory. God is just as able to help us in our "impossible" battles.

2 Chr. 33:1-2

There is biting irony in these verses. Manasseh followed the patterns of the heathen nations—the very ones over whom God had demonstrated his superiority. Manasseh insisted on going a way that had already been proven inadequate. There are some things that will never work to bring about spiritual renewal and godly growth. We need to make sure that the way we follow reflects God's truth as revealed in the Bible.

2 Chr. 33:9

It is a terrible thing to do evil. Likewise, it is terrible to lead others into evil. King Manasseh of Judah was guilty on both counts. He was even worse than the heathen kings who lived nearby. We must be careful to never lead others into evil.

2 Chr. 33:12-13

God placed Manasseh in such dire straits that there was nothing else he could do but seek God. Even though Manasseh had been the worst of all Judah's kings, he was forgiven and restored when he recognized his desperate situation and cried out to God for help. God will do no less for each of us today. Sin and failure will ultimately lead us into difficult circumstances. When this happens, we need to let the hard times drive us into God's open and forgiving arms.

2 Chr. 34:8-11

When things are in ruin and disarray, it is necessary to rebuild, repair, and clean up. Such was the situation in Jerusalem at the beginning of King Josiah's reign. During the godless years of King Manasseh, worship of God at the Temple had been discontinued. The Temple itself had fallen into disrepair. Josiah committed the resources of the nation to the restoration of the Temple. We also need to set aside significant resources to devote to God and his kingdom. It will demand a great deal of commitment and sacrifice, but no matter what we give up, the gains will be well worth the cost.

2 Chr. 34:14-19

Even the Scriptures had been lost during the years of spiritual decline. Without them, the people didn't know how God wanted them to live. Over time it became less and less apparent just what they were doing wrong or what they needed to do to please God. We need some definite standards of right and wrong. Without God's Word, such things become matters of individual opinion. Today, whole systems of faith are based on opinions—what people want to hear rather than what God has to say. Our path to spiritual renewal must follow the way God has set out for us in the Bible.

2 Chr. 34:21

As soon as Josiah heard what God expected of his people, he began to carefully consider the situation in Judah. He was open and willing to see how well he and the people measured up against God's standards. The humility and honesty of Josiah here are truly exemplary. He did not try to hide his sin or the sin of his nation. He was not defensive, but rather open to God. He openly admitted his failures and sought to change things immediately. As we carefully consider our lives, we need to display the same kind of honest humility.

2 Chr. 34:31-32

Hearing God's Word is important, but we must act on what we hear. If we refuse to act, the hearing is all in vain. After hearing the Scriptures, King Josiah pledged himself to obey God's revealed will. Not only did he do so as an individual, but he also called his people to follow. We, too, must hear the Word of God and then act on it.

2 Chr. 35:1-2

Notice that Josiah took the time to encourage the priests in their Temple activities. Encouragement is extremely important for anyone pursuing spiritual growth and a vibrant relationship with God. At this time, the priests were unaccustomed to leading the people in worship. They needed encouragement to face new and difficult tasks. As we seek to live as God says we should, we will need the encouragement and support of others. Our relationships with those who encourage our spiritual pursuits will help us preserve our spiritual gains.

2 Chr. 36:4-8

In this final assessment, King Jehoiakim's reign is condemned as an evil one. By the world's standards, he might have been considered successful. He reigned 11 years through a very difficult time, and he weathered the change of world powers at the battle of Carchemish. But worldly success is never the final measure. If we refuse to live according to God's plan, we will not be truly successful in God's eyes.

2 Chr. 36:14-20

We can never ignore God's will without suffering the consequences. Under Zedekiah the people ignored God's laws and even persecuted the prophets who were sent to remind them of their failure. Is it any wonder that the Temple was destroyed and the people of Judah were exiled to Babylon? As we discover God's will in the Bible, we need to act on it, redirecting the course of our lives to align with his plan.

2 Chr. 36:22-23

These books of woe and doom end with a note of amazing hope. They were written for people who had returned to rebuild their Temple and nation. This final passage would show them that even though their ancestors failed, God is faithful to his promises. He would help them to recover from centuries of failure. No matter what our past, God holds out the same opportunity for us. With his help, we too can find spiritual renewal and restoration.

Ezra 1:1

All of us need something that we can count on. The Jews in exile counted on Jeremiah's prophecy—that their captivity would last only 70 years. Today, God has promises for us, too. If we accept Jesus as our Savior, the Holy Spirit will comfort us and help us. We will become a new person—leaving our old ways behind (see 2 Corinthians 5:17). And though our problems may seem overwhelming today, God has given us promises of deliverance.

Ezra 1:3

We need to make the most of every opportunity God brings our way. The Jews had been living in Babylonian exile for many years. King Cyrus gave them an open invitation to return to Jerusalem to rebuild their nation—and their lives. Through the work of Jesus Christ, God has given us an open invitation to rebuild our lives as well.

Ezra 1:4-6

It is important to have people to encourage us in our spiritual growth. Even though many Jews remained in Persia, they encouraged and supported those who chose to return to Judah. Had those making the return trip not been given assistance, they might not have had the motivation or strength to see the mission through. In the same way, we should seek to encourage others in their journey toward spiritual maturity.

Ezra 3:1-2

The Temple had been destroyed many years before, so there was no altar for burning sacrifices. The people's means of reconciliation with God had been discontinued; their spiritual life had been cut off. So before the people could proceed with the rebuilding process, they needed to straighten out their relationship with God. The Israelites reestablished the sacrifices as a means of reconciliation. We, too, need to reconcile ourselves to God through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ in order to progress spiritually.

Ezra 3:10-11

Having already built an altar for the sacrifices, the people began the work of rebuilding the Temple itself. Notice that they praised God and celebrated after having laid only the Temple's foundation. Big jobs always seem easier and less intimidating when we break them up into smaller steps. When we face overwhelming or long-term projects, we should take time to celebrate the smaller victories. Realizing that we are making progress will encourage us to keep going.

Ezra 3:12

Some of the old people compared this rebuilding project with their memories of the former Temple. This Temple obviously would never match the glory of Solomon's Temple, built during Israel's golden age. Their expectations were too high. Though Israel would never regain its previous status in the world, God promised that the new Jerusalem would be the center of God's eternal kingdom (see Revelation 21). Like the Israelites, we ought to look forward to what God is doing with our lives and not look back and become depressed. God has a new life for us that has yet to unfold, and one day we will be made sinless like Christ for all eternity.

Ezra 4:1-3

When God's work starts going in a great way, enemies almost invariably rise up against it. There will be adversaries against our work as we seek to obey God's plan for our lives, but we must trust in the Lord to help us persevere in obedience to his will.

Ezra 4:17-23

Often obstacles are placed in the way of rebuilding. In this case it was a work-restraining order from Artaxerxes. Today, we must accept the reality that many will not be supportive of our new way of life. We must never allow such people to stand in the way of our spiritual transformation.

Ezra 4:24

Whether it was for a legitimate reason or because the workers were taking an easy way out, the rebuilding work on God's Temple ceased. How often in our own lives have outward difficulties stopped our positive progress? We need to guard against interruptions. It is often hard to get back on track once we have stopped or slowed down.

Ezra 5:3-5

Again the work was going smoothly; the people had begun to work with enthusiasm and joy. But again, enemies tried to halt the rebuilding. This time, though, the Jews did not stop their rebuilding task. God was supervising their work. God cares about us and the outcome of our lives. If he cared for the rebuilding of the Temple back then, surely he cares for the renewal of our lives—his temple—today.

Ezra 6:14-15

Usually spiritual transformation takes more time than we had originally planned. It took more than 20 years, but the Temple was finally finished. The long process had been sometimes tedious, sometimes disillusioning, sometimes actually heartbreaking. But it was done, and it was worth every minute of it! Restoration of our own lives is not easy either, but the end result will make the difficult process worth it.

Ezra 6:16-19

After this long, drawn-out process was finally over, what was the people's response to success? First of all, they acknowledged God in the entire project. Second, they formally recognized the completion in a dedication ceremony. Third, they celebrated this victory with great joy. We need to celebrate our own spiritual progress. What is worth celebrating more than a life brought back into a right relationship with God and other people?

Ezra 6:20

Before they could lead the people in worshiping God, it was necessary for the priests and Levites to purify themselves. They had to be ritually clean. Now purification is available to all through Jesus Christ. When we trust in Jesus, he purifies us and allows us to come before God.

Ezra 7:10

What a noble aspiration is recorded in this verse! Ezra prepared his heart to seek what God was saying through his Word. Then, he was obedient to its requirements. Ezra also wanted to teach the people the truth he had discovered. It is natural for us to share something that we believe to be worthwhile. Ezra wanted to share God's laws with the people of Israel. We should want to share what God has done in our lives in order to lead others to seek God and surrender to him.

Ezra 7:27-28

Many obstacles stood in the way of Ezra's dream of leading the people to learn and obey God's Word. The first obstacle was a governmental one, but God worked in the heart of Artaxerxes to provide permission and resources for Ezra's mission. These two verses record Ezra's prayer of thanks to God. The progress we make is due only to God's love for us. We should praise him for the good work he is accomplishing in our lives.

Ezra 8:15-20

Our spiritual growth generally requires careful preparation and the wise advice of godly people. Ezra knew that his primary task was a spiritual one. These verses detail some of the preparations he made. We also need God's help and the help of others who will encourage us and advise us on how to proceed with our spiritual growth.

Ezra 8:24-30

Ezra's preparations for the safekeeping of money show that he understood the importance of accountability. We also must set up measures of accountability for ourselves. We need to establish spiritual goals and then find someone to hold us accountable to them.

Ezra 8:31-33

Finally Ezra arrived at Jerusalem. He had overcome many obstacles—evidently they faced considerable danger on the road itself. It is interesting that the first thing he did upon arrival was to wait for three days. If we are exhausted or emotionally burned out when we begin a project, our task will seem much tougher than it really is. We need to slow down, develop patience, and gain perspective.

Ezra 9:1-2

God called Israel to be his chosen people. He set them apart to bring salvation to the world. He intended for them to be holy—unique among all the other peoples on earth. Ezra discovered that the Jews were compromising their uniqueness through intermarriage with the pagan peoples living in the land. God has called us as Christians to be his people, too. We should not blend in with the unbelievers around us; we must remain clearly identifiable as God's chosen and holy people.

Ezra 9:3

Upon realizing the people's sin, Ezra responded with deep mourning. He was heart broken that the people had forgotten their calling and the special obligations it entailed. As people of God, we must remember that we also have certain responsibilities before God. The temptation is to procrastinate in dealing with tough issues in our lives. But God wants us to tackle them head-on, remembering that he is there to give us strength and encouragement.

Ezra 9:6-15

Ezra's prayer of confession followed his mourning. He freely admitted the sins of the people and pleaded with God for their restoration. He realized that until they removed this major obstacle to their spiritual well-being, they would never achieve the victory that God intended for them. Often we hold on to some area of our lives that prevents us from experiencing everything God has for us. What areas do we need to confess and surrender to God's control? We should act immediately so we can get on with our spiritual growth.

Ezra 10:2

It was all well and good for Ezra to confess the sins of the people, but until the people confessed their sins, the victory could not take place. If we do nothing about the sins in our lives, we will never move forward. We must confess these sins to God and then take action against them.

Ezra 10:3

The people did not stop at mere confession; they also vowed to reform, redirecting the course of their lives back into alignment with God's commands. It is never enough just to acknowledge that we have sin in our lives. Even as these people did, we must follow our confession with action, accepting responsibility for our sins and taking active steps to eliminate sinful and destructive behaviors from our lives.

Ezra 10:10-12

Heartily, the people responded, "We must do as you say!" They recognized their responsibilities as God's people. When they admitted that they needed to obey God's will, they found victory! Ezra was successful in his mission to lead the nation to restoration. We, too, can know such victory if we follow God's will for our lives and trust him to see us through.

Neh. 1:1-3

In these verses we are shown a situation that demanded rebuilding. When Nehemiah heard of the circumstances in Jerusalem, he was immediately touched. He wanted to do something about it. As we honestly reflect on our spiritual lives, we need to take careful note of what areas need specific work. Renewal cannot take place until we know where to begin.

Neh. 1:4-11

For believers, prayer is often an untapped resource or the last resort after every other possibility has been exhausted. It is refreshing to notice that for Nehemiah, prayer was his immediate response. He knew that if the situation was to be corrected, God would be the one to accomplish it! This is a powerful reminder for us—we should fall on our knees so that we don't fall on our faces.

Neh. 1:11

Spiritual growth is never a solitary journey. Other people must be involved. In this case, Nehemiah recognized the need for the king's favor, and he asked God to secure the necessary response from him. Like Nehemiah, we should determine whose help we need and then ask for their assistance.

Neh. 2:1-3

Here we find an example of God's people openly expressing their emotions. Elsewhere in the Bible, we see Job expressing his emotions to his friends; King David pouring his heart into his many psalms, pleading with God for his rescue; and Jesus showing emotions, even weeping on occasion (see John 11). God expects us to be open and honest in our expression of emotion. Too often, out of a fear of appearing weak, we refuse to express our feelings, only to have them grow in intensity and haunt us for years to come. Grieving and releasing our emotions openly before God is a big step toward moving on from pain and despair.

Neh. 2:4-8

In answer to Nehemiah's prayer, the king's immediate response was one of encouragement and assistance. One wonders how Artaxerxes would have responded had not Nehemiah first approached God on this matter. God is sovereign, and he listens to our prayers. We would be foolish to neglect his help before we begin any new venture in our lives.

Neh. 2:11-16

One of the first tasks in any rebuilding project is an honest evaluation of the situation. As soon as Nehemiah came to Jerusalem, he made a nighttime inspection of the city's broken wall. As we begin our journey toward spiritual maturity, each of us needs to take an honest look at all of the circumstances, problems, and resources before us. Then we can more effectively plan to reach our goal of spiritual renewal.

Neh. 2:17-20

Here we see that Nehemiah performed a ministry of encouragement. He was completely honest about the people's problems; he didn't deny or underestimate their needs. Then he reminded them of God's powerful hand and challenged them to get on with the work. Every one of us needs a Nehemiah—someone who will honestly tell us what needs to be fixed in our lives and then will stick close to help us complete the task.

Neh. 3:1-32

Rebuilding the entire wall of Jerusalem was an enormous task. But Nehemiah had a plan to make it easier—he divided the work and assigned it to different groups of people. This way the people felt responsible for their section, and no one got burned out working on the entire task. There is a lesson here for us, too. As we consider the condition of our lives and the work necessary to conform them to God's design, we may become discouraged by the immensity of the task. But if we break up the process into smaller steps—a day or week or month at a time—the task will look less intimidating.

Neh. 4:1-4

Carrying out the will of God will always bring opposition. Nehemiah's experience was no exception. One kind of opposition that he faced was ridicule. The sarcasm expressed by Sanballat and Tobiah must have stung. But Nehemiah did not have his attention focused on the ridicule; he continued to look to God. We, too, should look to God as we seek to obey God's plans for us.

Neh. 4:4-9

How do we counter ridicule and disdain? In these verses

Nehemiah offers us a magnificent example. In such times, it is essential that we seek God and keep our guard up. Nehemiah countered ridicule by prayer. Not only did he pray, but he also set a 24-hour watch, guarding against an attack. Prayer must be accompanied by action.

Neh. 5:1-5

The previous attack had come from the outside; now a new attack came from within. The rebuilding was costing too much! We experience the same emotions the Jews felt. There is a cost to obeying God's plans, but spiritual growth is worth the pain and sacrifice.

Neh. 5:14-19

Leadership by example is very difficult but very effective. Nehemiah gave up many of his rightful privileges in order to be a godly example. He did not insist on his own rights. Rather, he was willing to sacrifice them for the good of the people as a part of his response to God.

Neh. 6:1-2

As the work neared completion, the enemies resorted to trickery—under the guise of negotiation. As we seek to rebuild our lives according to God's design, enemies will oppose us. We should not allow others to distract us from our goal of spiritual growth, however. We dare not compromise with those who are opposed to God and his plan for our lives.

Neh. 6:3

Nehemiah had set his mind to the task; he had a singleness of purpose. When his enemies tried to lure him away from the work, he answered with the ringing statement, “I am engaged in a great work!” He allowed nothing to turn him from his purpose. Each of us needs to seek God with such clear focus that we can be certain that we, too, are engaged in a great work.

Neh. 6:15-16

After overcoming every conceivable kind of evil opposition, the building of the wall was completed in a record 52 days. The work was completed so quickly because God had helped the Israelites. A job that had not been done for almost a hundred years was finished within two months. If we have delayed our spiritual renewal and now think it is too late, we should take encouragement from this great feat. It is never too late or too difficult to begin spiritual renewal if we go about it with God’s help.

Neh. 7:1-4

It is interesting that after the great project was completed, Nehemiah did not quit. Rather, he set up a careful organization for further building. He made careful provision for the further defense of the city. He wanted God’s people to have a safe environment for their individual building projects. Our spiritual growth requires ongoing attention. We must be on guard for lapses in our resolve that allow us to slip back into sinful habits.

Neh. 8:1-5

Ezra took on the essential task of spiritual renewal in the lives of the citizens. Now that the wall of Jerusalem was rebuilt and its streets were safe, Ezra was able to give attention to the reading of the Law. It is imperative to remember that the Bible contains the directions and resources for rebuilding broken lives. Jesus Christ is the foundation on which we must build the new life God gives us.

Neh. 8:7-8

Not only did Ezra engage in the public reading of Scripture; he also chose a team that was responsible for the public teaching of the Word. This was a group of men who assisted the people in understanding what the Bible meant. The renewing of the mind always involves the study of Scripture and its application to life. Without Scripture, we would not know God's purpose for our lives and what he wants us to do.

Neh. 8:12

The people expressed great joy at understanding God's words. They went out rejoicing. They weren't excited about just hearing God's words; they were excited because they understood God's words. When we understand God's Word—that he is all powerful and that he loves us and sent his Son to die for our sins—we will be filled with great joy.

Neh. 9:1-3

Joy was not the people's only response to the Scriptures. Their fresh understanding of the Bible brought about their repentance. They confessed their sins and expressed deep sorrow for disobeying God. They also confessed the sins of their ancestors—a necessary step for us as well if we are to break sinful family patterns. When we repent, we recognize and admit our disobedience, and we resolve to change course and walk in God's paths. It is only by so doing that we truly surrender our lives to God.

Neh. 9:4-38

In these verses we read words of praise to God. As the Levites sang this beautiful hymn, they gloried in the person of God—who he is and what he has done. We can gain much by making these words of praise our own.

Neh. 9:38

God's people need to be a part of some specific structure of accountability. To establish such accountability, the religious leaders in Israel formally wrote out this pact. In this case, the leaders pledged themselves to be accountable to God and each other. We must not try to “go it alone” in our spiritual walk. We need others to encourage us, give us direction, and pray for us.

Neh. 10:39

Here the people agreed not to neglect the Temple, where God lived among them. Today, we have a temple to care for, too—our body. “Don't you realize that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, who lives in you and was given to you by God? You do not belong to yourself” (1 Corinthians 6:19). We should take care of our bodies and treat them with respect because God the Holy Spirit lives within them. To mistreat our bodies is to mistreat God's own dwelling place.

Neh. 12:27

As God's people, we have the privilege and reason to celebrate. All of the worship leaders were called upon to come to Jerusalem to dedicate the rebuilt wall. This was to be the most joyous occasion in Israel in over half a century! We should take time to joyfully celebrate what God has done in us and to dedicate ourselves to his service.

Neh. 13:1-3, 23-30

Through Israel, God intended to bring salvation to the world. In order to do this, it was necessary for the Israelites to remain pure. They were not to mix with the godless population around them, and certain peoples were not to be allowed at the Temple. However, some of the people had intermarried. Nehemiah had to remove the pagan people so that Israel would not be led astray by them. Our spiritual growth is either strengthened or weakened by our relationships. We need to guard ourselves against relationships that draw us away from God's plans for us.

Neh. 13:4-9

Open union with God's enemies is never an acceptable course of action. In this hideous case, one of the Temple administrators provided a room within the Temple for Tobiah, one of Nehemiah's chief opponents. At this strategic location in the very heart of Jerusalem, Tobiah could have undermined God's authority and his place in the Israelites' lives. We must be careful not to allow people into our lives who would lead us away from God.

Neh. 13:14, 31

Nehemiah was a great builder. He reconstructed the wall of Jerusalem and helped the people to rebuild their broken lives. There is no question that God honored this good and faithful servant! And God will honor our attempts to rebuild, too.

Esth. 1:16-22

The advisers evaluated the situation regarding Vashti's disobedience and, realizing the far-reaching effects that such an act could have, suggested that quick and final action be taken at once. Anxious to please his allies, the king had made an unwise request of Vashti and now had to live with the consequences. We need to carefully evaluate the requests we make of others, realizing that we may be compromising their rights or desires.

Esth. 2:15-20

Esther wisely listened to Hegai (a man who knew the king well), taking his advice on how she might please the king. Hence, she succeeded in becoming the king's wife (2:17). She sacrificed her own desires to follow her uncle Mordecai's wishes. Making a major life decision because someone else wants us to is very difficult; we don't want to give up control of our lives. The question we must ask in such situations is whether or not what they ask of us agrees with God's will. Mordecai's wishes were in keeping with God's will, so Esther did well to agree with them.

Esth. 2:21-23

When Mordecai learned of the guards' plan to kill Xerxes, he reported their plot to Queen Esther (2:22). And though he had done something worthy of great honor, Mordecai received no recognition at the time (see 6:1-11). Sometimes the good decisions we make are only rewarded by our own sense of integrity. Knowing that we made a right decision should be enough for us to continue on the right path.

Esth. 3:1-6

When Haman heard that Mordecai refused to bow before him, he became furious. Haman wanted revenge for Mordecai's insubordination, so he sought the destruction of all the Jews. His desire to destroy the whole nation may be due to his family's (the Agagites) feud with Mordecai's tribe (the Benjamites; see 1 Samuel 15 for the story of King Saul and King Agag). If that was the case, this story illustrates how a legacy of hatred can affect a person's judgment. Haman took drastic measures to settle a conflict that had begun over five hundred years before. Do we have unsettled disagreements with others? If so, we need to forgive them and keep our children from inheriting our conflicts.

Esth. 3:8-15

Without mentioning the Jews by name, Haman convinced the king to allow him to destroy them because they followed different customs and disobeyed the king's laws (3:8). Irresponsibly, without investigating such a serious matter, the king gave Haman complete authority to implement his plan. We should always check into the requests of others, especially when the requests have major implications.

Esth. 4:1-8

Mordecai and the Jews throughout the empire sensed the hopelessness of their situation and put on mourning clothes

(4:1-3). When Esther learned that Mordecai was weeping, she dispatched a servant to determine the reasons for Mordecai's anguish (4:5-6). Then, in a straightforward manner, Mordecai disclosed the gravity of the situation (4:7-8). Accepting the reality of our situation is key to reaching out for God's help. Had Mordecai denied the truth of Haman's edict, he and the Jews would have faced certain death.

Esth. 4:9-17

At first Esther wanted to deny the reality of the threat posed by Haman's edict. She focused on her fear that she might be killed for approaching the king uninvited. In doing so, she failed to see the long-term consequences that might result if she refused to act. Esther finally consented to help her people by approaching King Xerxes, not knowing if he would accept her or have her killed. Her statement "If I must die, I must die" (4:16) reveals her faith in God and her selflessness. We, too, need to trust in God to deliver us whenever we face danger. We also need to look to others for their support and prayer. Like Esther, we need people praying for us if we hope to succeed.

Esth. 5:9-14

Haman, totally oblivious to Queen Esther's plan, was overjoyed at being so highly honored by her (5:9, 12). Yet even under such auspicious circumstances, Haman could not fully enjoy himself because he wanted still more. More than anything else, he wanted Mordecai to bow down to him (5:9, 13). In fact, Haman became obsessed with having this one man bow to him. We shouldn't allow what we don't have to overshadow what we do have. Our desire to have everything might cost us the riches we already have.

Esth. 6:1-6

Even though some time had gone by, the king felt a responsibility to acknowledge his gratitude to Mordecai for saving his life. Expressing gratitude is important; it shows others that we appreciate their help and also that we are not fooling ourselves by thinking our progress was accomplished on our own.

Esth. 6:6-12

Thinking the king was going to honor him, Haman recommended a public display of honor. Haman must have been livid when he was ordered to honor Mordecai according to the plan he himself had outlined. Perhaps Haman's hatred of Mordecai was sparked because Haman had a difficult time honoring others. Showing respect to others would have been a blow to his ego. We should make sure our self-worth does not depend on what others think about us. Once we realize our self-worth is based on our acceptance by God, we can stop competing with others and like them for who they are.

Esth. 7:1-6

Esther presented her petition to the king, seeking his help in saving her and her people from the edict ordering their death. After explaining this life-threatening situation, she wisely waited to see how the king would respond. Noting his rage, she boldly proceeded to denounce Haman as the enemy of her people. Wisely evaluating situations before jumping in further is often necessary. Waiting for the proper timing is much easier than trying to repair damage done by being impetuous.

Esth. 8:1-6

Esther received Haman's property, and Mordecai became prime minister, but still the Jewish people were in danger. Once again Esther approached Xerxes, this time asking for a reversal of Haman's decree. Like Esther, we shouldn't stop seeking God when our lives are out of danger. We should do what we can to help others seek God and escape the disastrous effects of sin.

Esth. 9:5-15

The Jews were finally able to defend themselves from their enemies. Notice that the Jews exhibited self-control by not plundering their enemies' goods even though they had the right to do so (see 8:11). This was a wise move: The Jews could not be accused of rationalizing their slaughter as a cover for becoming rich. We need not always embrace every advantage that the law allows. We would be wise to sacrifice some of our rights to make a statement about our motives.

Esth. 9:16-19

Upon completing their task, the Jews throughout the empire spontaneously and joyfully celebrated their success. There is nothing wrong with celebrating a great victory, whether it is emotional, spiritual, or physical. Not only is celebration fun, but it also helps us recharge our batteries for the battles ahead.

Esth. 9:20-28

Mordecai made this celebration an annual event (9:20-21) to commemorate the deliverance of the Jews. He named this day Purim. It is often helpful for us to establish special days to commemorate the important victories in our lives. Such days then will serve as reminders of how God is constantly working to help us.

Esth. 10:1-3

Mordecai became known as a great prime minister, no doubt because of his fairness and godliness. Although the book ends with the Jews enjoying much success, it never once mentions the name of God (in the original Hebrew). Yet God's handiwork—his timing, his deliverance, and his encouragement—can be seen throughout. God truly works behind the scenes for the good of his people.

Job 1:1-5

Job's heart and life are revealed to us during this brief introduction. We are told (and then shown) that Job loved God and desired to lead his children to do the same. This fact will help us to understand the rest of the narrative properly. Job's innocence is established at the beginning of the book so we won't question it as he is judged by his friends.

Job 1:8-12

God knew the heart of his servant Job and of Satan the Accuser. The stage was set as God volunteered Job to be the one who would prove Satan wrong. How could God have used Job in this way? It seems somewhat cruel. Perhaps the answer lies in the way we understand suffering. We usually see suffering as an almost crippling tragedy. But suffering can be a pathway to maturity (see 42:1-5; Romans 5:3-5; James 1:2-4). God would use Job's suffering to bring even greater blessings and strength in the end. We can be sure that God is working his good in our lives, even in the midst of our pain.

Job 1:13-19

In what seems to be only a few hours' time, everything Job had held significant was stripped away. The pain must have seemed intolerable; the grief, beyond solace. Even though Job mourned his losses, however, his love for God was not dependent on his possessions. Do we ever get caught in that trap, loving God for what he gives us—our homes, cars, jobs, or wealth? If those were taken away, how would we feel? Our love for God must be based on the fact that God loves us so much that he sent his Son, Jesus, to die for us while we were still sinners (Romans 5:8). This is something that can never be taken away.

Job 1:20-22

We may never know how we'll respond to tragedy until we face it. Job chose to worship God, even in his grief. From Job's response we learn why God labeled him a man of integrity who "fears God and stays away from evil" (1:8). Job chose to praise God even after great loss. When we suffer a loss, praising God for his sovereignty and generosity in allowing us to have had the possessions or loved ones for a period of time is often the last thing we feel like doing—but it is the proper response to God.

Job 2:1-3

It is important to realize that Satan has no authority apart from God's consent. When we undergo trials, we should realize that God is in control and will help us through them. He wants us to grow in our faith and glorify his name, no matter what difficulties we may be called upon to face.

Job 2:4-6

Satan made a keen observation about human character. We are willing to give up all that we have to save our life, but when that life is confronted by physical illness, we curse God. It is difficult to maintain the proper perspective when we are physically afflicted. As we suffer physical pain, however, we should continue to praise God, for he is worthy to receive it, regardless of how we feel.

Job 2:9-10

It is one thing to lose our comforts; it is quite another to lose the support of a spouse. In times of great loss, we desperately need the support of our loved ones. We need our spouse's vote of confidence when no one else is there. The only mention of Job's wife comes at the start of his affliction. She was bitter and unable to share in his pain. As a spouse experiences tough times, we need to be there to offer support.

Job 2:11-13

Three friends saw Job's pain from a distance and were overwhelmed. Then they gave him the best gift they had to offer—they wept and shared in his grief. When others are suffering, we may feel that we have to say something comforting, sympathetic, or advisory. But what they may really need is for us just to be with them and share their pain.

Job 3:1-19

Even though Job had known amazing success and happiness, he couldn't remember what it had been like. An element common to suffering is a loss of perspective. No matter how hard we try to maintain our point of view, it is difficult to see yesterday's celebration in the midst of today's devastation. But we can hold fast to the hope that one day God will give us reason to celebrate once again.

Job 3:20-23

Like most sufferers, Job asked why? Unfortunately, the answer to that question is often reserved for eternity. We must learn to trust God and stay faithful to him even if we never receive an explanation for our suffering. Sometimes we will never know why things happen the way they do. We can be sure, though, that God is with us in the pain.

Job 4:7-11

We know that people reap what they sow, but we cannot offer this verse as a universal reason for suffering. Suffering is not always a tool of judgment. It can be used to strengthen our faith. Just as gold must be melted to get the impurities out, so we must go through trials to purify our faith.

Job 4:7-21

It can be very frustrating when someone always claims to know what is happening, why it is happening, and how we should respond. Job wasn't outside God's favor. He wasn't disobedient and unwilling to follow God. Job was a sufferer, and he needed his friends to trust what they knew about him. Job needed people to share his pain and help him grieve. We don't have to come up with all the answers to be able to comfort our friends. We just have to lovingly support them as they face difficult times.

Job 5:1-7

Eliphaz acted like God's prophet sent to straighten out Job's life. He claimed to know more about Job than even Job knew!

Not all of Eliphaz's words were false, but he spoke about things that he didn't fully understand. It is always easier to analyze than to empathize, because to feel empathy means to put ourselves in the sufferer's position. This can be quite frightening—especially if our friend is suffering from something that could happen to us.

Job 5:8-16

As we seek to comfort others, we must be very careful before saying, "If I were you . . ." No matter what we have experienced in the past, we should not assume that we automatically know what to do. It is difficult to be certain how we would respond if placed in another's situation.

Job 5:17

Eliphaz assumed that Job was rejecting God's discipline. Though Job was not being disciplined by God here, Eliphaz was correct in saying that we should welcome God's correction. God wants only the best for us, and sometimes he does discipline us in order to get us to redirect our course back in line with his will. But we shouldn't assume that every experience of suffering in our lives is an instance of God's correction.

Job 5:18-26

Eliphaz's testimony about God was not incorrect, but it was insensitive. Job was not doubting God's sovereignty or faithfulness; he was simply mourning his loss. He had, after all, suddenly lost his children as well as his wealth and health. We, like Job, need to grieve for a period of time. Grief and mourning are part of life and necessary if we are to move on.

Job 5:27

Eliphaz made the mistake of trying to play the role of the Holy Spirit in Job's life. As we seek to comfort our friends, we should not be as eager to tell them what to do as we are to sit quietly with them, as Job's friends did at the start. They came across as more sympathetic when their mouths were shut.

Job 6:1-7

Suffering has a way of stripping us of the protective shields we create to hide behind. As we openly display our pain, we can no longer pretend that things are all right. Job was grieving deeply in these verses. He felt wounded by God and had no reason to pretend that his pain was not significant. When we can no longer hide our pain, we can talk about it. We can get our emotions out in the open where we can deal with them.

Job 6:8-13

Job received some comfort from the fact that he hadn't disobeyed God. Even while he was in intense pain, we find that he was concerned about his relationship with God. The opposite is often true with us: We suffer and no longer care about God or his laws. Our discouragement touches our spiritual life rather quickly, and the more pain we feel, the quicker we give up on God. But we see from Job that when we suffer, we should focus our thoughts on God, our only hope for salvation.

Job 6:14-21

Friends are very important. When we are hurting, we depend on them to listen, to weep, to support, to just be with us. If ever Job needed his friends, it was now. Yet Job found his friends as undependable as a seasonal brook. He was deeply disappointed in their failure to support him in his pain. They were long on advice but short on compassion. When our friends try to comfort us, we should tell them how they can help us better. If we are called upon to comfort others, we need to be sensitive to their needs.

Job 6:29-30

Job here stated that if he had sinned, he would have admitted it. He wanted to know just what he had done to deserve punishment. Job honestly reflected on his spiritual condition and couldn't find anything wrong. We, too, need to honestly reflect on our spiritual condition. If there is sin in our lives, we need to confess it. If we have wronged someone, we need to make restitution. Denying the facts will not help our spiritual growth.

Job 7:1-5

Whether we suffer from physical pain, the loss of a spouse, a disappointing career, divorce, loneliness, depression, an estranged loved one, or any other kind of trouble, nights are a difficult time. At least in the daylight hours our work or other activities can take our minds off our situation. When night falls and we are alone, the reality of our pain stares us in the face with no distractions. It is then we can talk to God about our pain, and he will listen and comfort us. We are never alone—we can always talk to God through prayer.

Job 7:11-21

Job here turned to petition God. He recognized that God was the only one who could give him relief from his troubles (7:21). Whether or not the pain we feel is a result of our own sins, God is there to comfort us. His timing may not be what we would consider ideal, but God's perspective and timing are always best. We can trust in God to rescue us, but in his time, not ours.

Job 8:1-7

"You're getting what you deserve." This is perhaps the most unkind remark we might ever make to a sufferer. In some cases it may be true. Foolish choices do often lead to painful consequences. But if we always got what we deserved, all of us would soon be destroyed. And at times, our suffering is not a consequence of sin at all. Bildad showed his ignorance of God's ways when he tried to connect Job's loss to some hidden sin. We need to be careful not to judge a person who is suffering a setback, for we may not have the whole story. Only God truly knows and understands all the circumstances.

Job 8:8-22

Bildad was correct about some of his theology, but he erred in the application of his knowledge. God saw Job as blameless and upright (see 1:8; 2:3), not as unfaithful or disobedient.

Job's suffering was not the result of a wayward life. We must be very careful before we claim to know the purpose of another person's pain. Our first concern should be to offer comfort and support.

Job 9:1-20

Job knew more than he understood. He knew about God's sovereignty and mercy and that no man is blameless apart from God's gracious forgiveness. When we feel that God isn't being fair, we should remember that if he were, we would never be able to enter his presence. When God is "unfair," it is always on the side of mercy.

Job 9:32-35

Job lamented the absence of a mediator to stand between himself and God. We do have such a mediator—Jesus Christ. We can take our case directly to God because Jesus' death and resurrection gave us access to God's presence.

Job 10:1-17

Job took a respite from measuring his pain and began to direct his thoughts toward God. This subtle change would become a catalyst for his growth though he was not yet able to sense any relief. So often in our pain we talk about God when we really need to release our feelings to God. He does not despise our grief; he welcomes the honest cries of our hearts.

Job 10:18-22

Before leaving this world, Jesus assured the disciples that they and we have a place with him in eternity (see John 14:1-4). He gave them a picture of hope that they could hold on to in their impending grief. When we suffer, sometimes hope seems far away. Job couldn't imagine a future of light when he felt so enveloped in darkness. But we can—we have Jesus' promise.

Job 11:7-12

Zophar knew something about God, but his knowledge was limited. God is indeed sovereign, and no one can oppose him and hope to win. But Job wasn't opposing God; he was trying to make sense of his suffering. Just as God allowed Job to meditate on his suffering, he will allow us time to understand why some things are happening to us. We may never find a clear answer, but our faith in God will grow if we learn from our trials and trust God in them rather than complain at each new trial.

Job 11:13-20

As we devote our hearts to God, we will experience a deepening fellowship with him. But this fellowship with God never eliminates all our suffering. Pain is part of life, whether we are close to God or rebellious against him. Zophar was mistaken because his theology could not allow the possibility that Job could suffer and still be righteous.

Job 12:1-6

We see Job become wiser and wiser because of his pain. He understood well the worldview of his companions. Theirs was a very comfortable theology. If we are good, God blesses with wealth and comfort. If we are bad, God punishes with poverty and suffering. But as we see here, their assumptions were far from the truth. Job knew that he was innocent of wrongdoing, yet he still suffered greatly. His sufferings gave him the perspective he needed for a better understanding of God and the way he works in our world. Unlike his friends, he knew that suffering was not always a punishment for sin. We should use the difficult times in our lives to lead us to a deeper understanding of God.

Job 12:7-25

Job explored the sovereign nature of God. He recognized that God is powerful; humans are not. Herein lies one of the most difficult lessons for all of us to learn— God is in ultimate control. Humility does not come easily to us, who place great value on power and independence. But the truth is that we are dependent upon God even for our very existence.

Job 13:1-12

Job was clearly angry with his accusers. He saw them as obstacles to his own conversation with God. Like Job's friends, we often find it easy to speak for God when deciding what someone else should do. We need to recognize that we never have the whole story on any one situation. God rarely appoints us as intercessors or spokespersons for him. We must be sure that we do not presume to speak for God if he has not spoken to us.

Job 13:14-19

Job continued to grow bolder about his case and decided to do something about his circumstances. God is never afraid of our strong feelings. He welcomes the honest expression of our emotions as we seek to draw closer to him. When suffering comes upon us, we can sit and wallow in our misery, or we can come before God with our thoughts and feelings.

Job 14:1-12

We are very blessed to live after the time of Jesus Christ. We have seen grace demonstrated firsthand, and we have seen the power of resurrection in the risen Christ. Job understood much, but he couldn't quite grasp the idea of eternal life. Our days in the flesh are both numbered and final, and this disturbed Job. Our hope in a future life with Christ should make our troubles here on earth more bearable. We can know with certainty that our sufferings here are not permanent.

Job 14:4

Job's insight here reflects the very heart of God's message of grace. Who can make something pure out of something inherently impure? No one—at least no one on earth. Only our gracious God can do this, and he has done so through the death and resurrection of Jesus. Through him we are made holy and pure.

Job 14:13-19

All of us face times when we simply want to hide from distress and defeat, and Job was no exception. He pleaded with God for the chance to hide until his troubles were gone. We need to realize that God wasn't punishing Job or taking pleasure in his anguish. He was allowing Job to pass through a fiery trial. God knows the end result of our suffering and despair—a faith that is far more precious than mere gold (see 1 Peter 1:6-7). We must look past the difficult times and hope for the positive effects God desires to work in our lives. This should encourage us as we face difficult times.

Job 15:1-16

Eliphaz didn't like Job's attitude. He mistook Job's words of grief for words of pride—foolish words. Be careful not to minimize the importance of expressed grief. Grieving is necessary in order to move from despair to hope and to get on with life. We would do well to steer clear of the judgmental attitudes exhibited by Job's friends.

Job 15:17-35

Eliphaz thought he had the explanation for Job's misery: Suffering was reserved for the ungodly. Job was a wicked man, charging at God with a shield of his own making. Why would Eliphaz speak so to Job? What made him think Job was wicked? We may be tempted to adopt Eliphaz's theory as long as things are going well for us. But when things get tough and there is no clear cause for our suffering, his theory will no longer be a comfort. Hopefully we are not as callous about the pain of others as Eliphaz was. If we are, we will probably bring more harm than help to our friends.

Job 16:1-5

Most of us have known “miserable comforters”: those who give advice, those who offer solutions, those who lecture us concerning our failures and mistakes. They generally mean well, but they know little about comfort. Paul tells us that the comfort we offer should grow out of the wealth of comfort we have received from God (2 Corinthians 1:3-7). We should take note of the ways we have been comforted by God; this will help us as we seek to comfort the people we love.

Job 16:18–17:2

How frightening death can be to those who are unaware of God’s glorious hope. Job knew God. He even knew that God was his advocate and friend. But he does not seem to be certain that God’s people will spend eternity in heaven. While it is all right to be concerned for our lives, we need never despair, for eternity is the home that awaits us.

Job 18:1-21

We can all see Job’s frustration as he longed for just a little comfort from his friends. Bildad wanted to know why Job offered speeches and why he regarded the words of his friends as stupid. The answer is fairly simple: Job’s friends didn’t know what they were talking about. We should never burden our suffering friends with unnecessary guilt. God is their ultimate judge. We should be a support to our friends in need.

Job 19:1-22

Job’s frustration reached a breaking point in these verses. His friends had repeatedly accused him of sin but had yet to prove any of it. Job knew in his heart that he was not being punished for some hidden, willful sin. He just wanted some comfort and understanding. Sufferers long to be understood. Most of the time they need comfort, not judgment. We need to keep this in mind as we seek to help our friends who are grieving losses in their lives.

Job 19:23-27

Job's growth should encourage us as we struggle with our own pain. As we grieve over losses in this world, we learn to see the reality of eternity. Where once Job saw death as unrelenting darkness (see 10:20-22), here he gave testimony to a living Redeemer. His heart yearned for what he knew to be light and life. The Redeemer in whom Job took comfort is the one we now know as Jesus Christ. He is waiting to redeem us, just as he did Job. All we have to do is believe in him, and he will rescue us from eternal darkness.

Job 19:28-29

If we live by judgment and condemnation, Job reminds us that we will die by the same. It is critical that we recognize grace. It is by grace that we are saved, and it is by grace that we live in this world. We need to remember that we will be judged by the standard with which we judge others (Matthew 7:1-5; James 2:12-13).

Job 21:1-21

Job refuted Zophar's arguments by saying that the wicked often succeed, have large families, accumulate great wealth, and live long lives. He noted that God skips them when he “distribute[s] sorrows to them in anger.” To a large extent, Job was right. Often the wicked do seem to prosper while the godly suffer. This should remind us that we do not obey and worship God because of what he can do for us, but rather because of who he is—he is worthy of our worship. At the same time, we can take comfort in the fact that one day the wicked will be judged, and those who follow God will be blessed (see Luke 16:19-31).

Job 21:22-26

Job examined the futility of this world’s treasures firsthand. His discovery was simple: Those who have known great prosperity meet the same end as those who have known poverty. All will die, all bodies will return to the dust, and the treasures we store up in this world will meet the same fate. Earthly conditions don’t matter all that much from an eternal perspective. We should store our treasures in heaven, not on earth (see Matthew 6:19-21).

Job 22:1-10

Eliphaz made up a list of sins he was sure Job had committed at one time or another. The problem was that all his accusations were unfounded. He did not know Job or the things he had done. We must be careful about how we react to the problems or sins of others. We must not accuse others of things we are uninformed about.

Job 23:1-17

Throughout his trials, Job was always honest about what he was thinking and feeling. God is not afraid of our feelings, and strong emotions are a natural part of life. We should not label them good or bad. It is how we choose to express them and deal with them that God is concerned about. Honest assessment of our feelings is important as we seek spiritual growth.

Job 24:1-25

Why aren't the faithful rewarded or even protected? Why don't exploiters meet a speedy punishment? Where is God when we cry for help? As we face a momentous loss, we are often compelled to rediscover the foundations of our faith. Job probed the whole realm of God's justice, judgment, and timing, and he came to a humble conclusion: God's ways are just. We are often confused by his timing, but his ways are ultimately just.

Job 24:22-25

Our need for security affects our decisions, attitudes, and actions every day. Each of us has a working definition of security, and we fear anything that threatens it. Job's entire foundation in this world had been shaken, and yet he learned an important lesson: Real security doesn't lie in what this world has to offer; it lies in the consistency, the justice, the faithfulness, and the overwhelming power and love of God.

Job 28:28

"The fear of the Lord is true wisdom; to forsake evil is real understanding.” This is God’s message to us—that wisdom is found only in God and his ways. But how do we know what God expects of us? God has given us his truth in the Bible. We are responsible to study it and discover what he expects of us. We should ask God to show us his truth, and then take the time to listen (see James 1:6). As God reveals his truth to us, he will give us the strength and encouragement we need to follow his plan for life.

Job 29:1-3

Job remembered the days when he was prosperous and God seemed to be blessing him. Those were days when Job felt secure. As hard as it is for us to believe, God continues to take care of us when we suffer. Even when the suffering is brought on by our own actions, he is there, waiting for us to call on him for deliverance.

Job 29:18-19

Our lives now may be very different from what we had hoped they would be. We may not have fulfilled our youthful dreams, but we don’t have to give up hope. Accepting the reality of our lives as they are, not as we wish them to be, is the first step toward surrendering our lives to God. Then he can begin the process of spiritual renewal that can completely transform us into what he wants us to be.

Job 30:20

As his suffering went on, Job began to feel certain that God wasn’t listening. Yet Job hadn’t given him the chance to answer. Often we, like Job, talk about God and even talk to God, but we don't stop long enough to let him talk to us. God speaks to us through his Word, the Bible, and through our times of prayer and meditation. We need to sit still and wait for God to speak to our hearts.

Job 31:35-36

Job wished that God would show him his failure. He was tired and wished desperately for some kind of resolution to his suffering. He wanted God to explain what was going on. If God was holding him guilty, he was confident that he could stand up to the charges. Though Job was indeed innocent of sin, his attitude here is not acceptable. He arrogantly demands that God answer to him, instead of humbly acknowledging that God is righteous and just, though we don't always understand. God welcomes our honest expressions of frustration, but we must guard ourselves against becoming arrogant.

Job 32:6-20

There will always be people who think they have all the answers. They will give us reasons for our actions and will think that wisdom has been given to them alone. Elihu was not that way. He carefully listened to all the arguments and weighed each person's words before he spoke. We need to follow Elihu's example and carefully weigh our words before we try to tell someone what to do or how to think about something.

Job 37:1-24

God will soon deliver a speech similar to Elihu's. God is the Creator, the Almighty One, but he is not beyond our reach. He has made himself available to us, even when we fall desperately short of his glorious ideals.

Job 38:2–39:30

God used a series of questions to illustrate how little Job knew about Creation and God's ways. If Job knew nothing of these mysteries, how could he question God? All Job could do was worship and trust God. We, too, wonder why we suffer. We wonder why bad things happen to us and to those we love. But we, like Job, are finite and cannot understand the ways of the infinite God. All we can do is praise him and await his deliverance.

Job 40:1–41:34

God used the majesty and power of his creation to remind Job that God is the only one who can save. If Job could not even overpower created beings, such as the crocodile, how could Job save himself from the God who created the crocodile? Everything under heaven belongs to God, and that included Job. God never did give Job an explanation for his suffering; God only let Job know that he was sovereign. Likewise, we may be suffering without knowing the source of our pain. We may suffer because of the sins of others or simply because we live in a fallen world. We may never know why we have to go through the pain, but we need to realize that God is ultimately in control. Our faith in him will be rewarded—if not in this life, then in the next.

Job 42:1-6

Job ventured to answer God, and his reply was filled with gratitude. Where Job had once only heard about God, here he actually saw him—the loving, merciful, all-powerful, majestic Creator. This man, who was blameless and full of integrity before his suffering, was now even greater because of that suffering. God is good, and all that he does is ultimately for our good. It is important to remember this as we go through painful times.

Job 42:7-9

How thankful Job's friends must have been that God was going to deal with them, not as they deserved, but graciously. They wrongly accused Job of sin. But Job prayed, and God forgave them. When we are disobedient to God and hurtful to others, we need to repent of our sin and seek forgiveness.

Job 42:10-17

Even if Job's fortunes had not been restored and he had continued in his pain, God would still be in control of the universe. The same is true for us. Whether our pain has been caused by our own sins or sins of the people around us, God is in control of our lives, and he is watching over us.

Ps. 1:1-6

One key to spiritual growth is turning to God and turning away from the kind of people who draw us into temptation. And there is no better source for wisdom and direction than the Word of God. When we fail to study and apply God's Word, we tend to drift through life or follow those who do not follow God. If we are not careful to guide our lives by God's Word, we will be tossed around by every new fad or philosophy that comes our way.

Ps. 2:1-6

If God is in charge of the world, why do we continually try to do things our own way? Here we are told that fighting God's plan is a foolish thing to do. Many turn from God because they don't want to be his slaves. But if we reject God's rule over us, we will invariably become slaves to someone or something else. The foolish man, in rejecting God's righteous rule, soon falls into a prison of sin and destructive habits. God shows us here how useless it is to challenge him. The only way we can be in tune with God's plan and receive his help is to surrender to him and accept his loving rule over our lives.

Ps. 3:1-4

David was faced with enemies who mocked that there was no hope for him. He didn't believe them. Instead he called out to God for help. We may encounter those who say there is no hope for us. We must not listen to them; rather, we should follow David's example and call out to God for help.

Ps. 3:5-8

God comforted David so much that he could sleep like a baby in the face of his troubles. What is more, David's worries and anxieties vanished when he focused his thoughts fully on God. Thus David could view life as if all of his problems had been eliminated. By placing his problems in God's hands, David had taken the most important step toward solving them. When we surrender our lives to God, we, too, can rest easy, knowing that he is in control.

Ps. 4:1-3

David rejoiced about God's powerful protection. In times of distress our merciful God is the perfect haven of rest. He is listening, and he hears our cries for help. God wants us to put our trust in him. We insult him when we trust in our own resources, or anything else, to deliver us from our problems. When we surrender our lives to God, we become his own chosen ones, whom he promises to hear when we call out to him.

Ps. 4:6-8

Many of the people around us cannot see God at work in our lives. They see only our past failures. But as God transforms our lives, we become living testimonies of his power. True joy comes from God—a joy that is greater than all the gladness the world can produce. Nothing will bring us more peaceful nights of sleep than the knowledge that God is with us.

Ps. 5:1-7

David understood how foolish it was to look for help from anything or anyone else but God. One by one he brought his needs daily to God. Wherever we go and whatever we are doing, we can trust God to help us in our moment-by-moment walk of obedience.

Ps. 5:8-12

David requested God's guidance because he knew the Lord would see him through the many troubles he faced. Like David's enemies, many people will tell us the big lie— that sin won't hurt us. Their words sound so good, but these people prove by their own lives of slavery to sin that they are headed for destruction. In the midst of these snares of the world, however, we can always find protection by trusting in God.

Ps. 6:1-5

There are times when life brings anguish, and times when we bring anguish into our own lives because of our sin or foolishness. At times like these we need to pour out our hearts to God, confessing our sins, pouring out our sorrows and even our complaints. We can call on God's mercy and know that he will hear the honest cries of our hearts. He will rescue us and use our lives to demonstrate his mercy.

Ps. 6:6-10

Even though we may be suffering greatly, we can have confidence that God answers our prayers. God always hears our petitions. We should all be as bold as David, who claimed victory immediately after finishing his prayer. When we seek God and surrender our lives to him, we can pray with assurance and declare victory because God himself will overcome our enemies.

Ps. 7:3-10

David looked to God to defend him against the slanderous judgments of his enemies. If we are doing what we can to avoid temptation, we can count on the Lord to deal with those who oppose us. We ought to hate the things God hates. When we are choosing the right path, God promises to be our defense.

Ps. 7:11-16

God is patient, but there is a limit to how long he will tolerate those who continue to rebel against him. When we choose to live in ways that stand counter to God's plan, we will quickly discover that our problems only grow worse and worse. The plans we make to achieve personal success at the expense of others will destroy us in the end. We will only fall prey to our own schemes (see 9:15).

Ps. 8:3-9

It is awesome to realize that the God who created the universe in all its awesome splendor created us and considers us the crown of all creation. Knowing the greatness of our God should inspire us to seek him. As we see the truth of how God sees us, how he loves us and has called us to be his people, we should be encouraged. We should long to grow closer to God so that he might transform us into all that he created us to be.

Ps. 9:1-6

As we experience God's help and begin to change our lives for the better, we have the responsibility to share our experience of spiritual renewal with others so their lives can be changed too. As we ask God to transform our lives, others will see what God has done for us and will receive the gift of hope. Even our struggles can be a source of encouragement and guidance to others if we surrender to God in the midst of them and let others see how God redirects the course of our lives.

Ps. 9:7-14

David praised God for delivering him from powerful enemies. God is merciful; he is always ready to help those who are oppressed by their enemies. In God's perfect timing, they will find comfort and encouragement if they put their trust in him. Because God never forsakes those who trust him, we should praise him and tell others that he has rescued us.

Ps. 9:15-20

The people who set traps for others will ultimately be trapped themselves. Such people do not succeed in the long run. Those who realize they need God's help and turn to him will receive it. If we think we are in control of our own destiny and the destinies of others, we have a terrible surprise in store. One day God will step in and demonstrate who truly is in control.

Ps. 10:1-11

God sometimes seems far away when the temptation to sin is strong. In truth, he is never far from us. We may think that those who do evil never get trapped, but actually they are headed for trouble; they just don't recognize it yet. They may seem to be doing well, but this is only the way things appear. We need to make sure that the apparent success of others doesn't lead us away from God's plan for our lives.

Ps. 10:13-18

Even when it appears that God is blind to the evil deeds of others, we can be sure that one day he will respond with judgment. Those who drag others into sin will be judged harshly by God (see Luke 17:1-2). At times God works quietly behind the scenes, helping those who admit the reality of their situations to overcome the enemies and problems they face.

Ps. 11:1-3

Security from temptation can be found in God; running elsewhere for help will never do any good. If we turn to some other resource for help, the people and problems that threaten to destroy us will lead us astray when we are most vulnerable. They will take advantage of us when the resource we depend on is unavailable. God is always with us. If we put our trust in him, we will have the means to overcome temptation.

Ps. 12:5-8

God has promised to protect us from those who try to destroy us. People make a grave mistake if they don't understand that God is not like us—his promises are pure. He never deceives, nor does he ever fail to keep his promises. God has offered to surround us with help if we ask for it.

Ps. 13:1-6

There are times in our spiritual journey that seem dry. We may be convinced that God has forgotten us. We may feel completely overwhelmed by our problems and baffled that God has done nothing to help. David began this psalm with feelings like these. But in the end, David remained confident that the Lord would respond to his cry for help, for David knew that the Lord is faithful. We, too, can depend on the Lord's unfailing love toward us, even though we may grow weary and discouraged.

Ps. 14:1-3

Refusal to believe in God ensures ultimate failure. Unless we can accept the fact that there is a God who is concerned about us, there is no hope for us. The psalmist gave us a good term to describe the people who refuse to believe in God—fools. The world is filled with such fools, but we don't have to be like them. We can surrender to God, receive his forgiveness, and follow his ways.

Ps. 15:1-3

As God's people, we have been called to a particular way of life. We are called to a life of honesty and integrity, refusing to lie about ourselves or others. We are also called to build up God's people and to keep from hurting other people. By practicing these things, our lives will reflect the character of the God we serve.

Ps. 15:1-5

David reflected on how God's way of doing things leads to a life of stability and peace. If we want to progress spiritually, we must not give in to sin. No matter how painful it might be, we must confess the sin in our own lives or, in some cases, confront others with their sins. Many times our failures have caused a great deal of pain and loss to the people close to us. We need to be sensitive to the wrongs we have committed as we honestly reflect on our lives and reconcile ourselves once again to those we have hurt.

Ps. 16:1-6

Strength and security come from God, for he is truly able to restore us. If we look to God as the source of our strength and joy, he will never disappoint us. We can also draw strength from others who, like us, are trying to find and do God's will.

Ps. 17:1-5

After reflecting upon his heart, David confidently asserted that he was not harboring any sin within him. Honestly examining our spiritual condition is essential to spiritual renewal. If we refuse to do this, we will encounter numerous obstacles that will stand in the way of our spiritual growth.

Ps. 18:1-5

David wrote this psalm soon after God delivered him from his enemies. God is more than able to deliver us from those who oppose his will, just as he delivered David. He is our source of strength, our rock, and the one on whom we must rely for help.

Ps. 18:6-15

God used very graphic language in these verses to show us how serious he is about helping those who turn to him for help. The psalmist knew that he would be delivered, not because he was strong or deserving of God's help, but because God loved him and was powerful enough to rouse all the forces of nature to help him. If God is on our side, no enemy is too great. We can always experience victory by depending on God's delivering hand.

Ps. 18:16-19

When the psalmist realized his helplessness and surrendered his life to the Lord, God came to his aid. Many of us know this truth as a theological principle, but we must also experience it in our own lives. We are given a clear warning in these verses. Our enemies or temptations always attack us when we are most vulnerable. Honestly reflecting on our spiritual lives will help us see just what our weaknesses are and when temptation will be most likely to attack. Then we can surrender these areas to God and depend on him to help us.

Ps. 18:25-29

David recognized God's desire to bestow mercy on those who are merciful toward others and repentant of their sins. When we are ready to admit to God and to others our wrongs, and when we show mercy to others, God is merciful toward us. We do great harm to ourselves and to others when we are too proud to admit our failures. Such pride keeps us from truly seeking God because we may be afraid to see the truth and have to confess the truth. But God is quick to help us redirect our course when we acknowledge this kind of pride as sin.

Ps. 18:30-36

David praised God for protecting those who looked to God for help. God will protect us if we are willing to admit our weaknesses and depend on him. He will give us the power to do what is right in difficult situations and give us the ability to walk without stumbling, even when the path is slippery.

Ps. 18:43-50

The successes that God gives us can become a strong encouragement to others. We are called upon to share our victories with others. This may be all it takes to give them the courage to go on. They will see God's transforming power in our lives and begin to hope that God can do the same for them. Because of who God is and what he does for us, we should constantly give him thanks and praise for the way he helps us.

Ps. 19:1-6

No one can rightly say that they have never heard about God. His power can be seen throughout our physical world. Even the sun, though it does not use words, declares every day what God has done. All humans benefit from the sun, and, whether they like it or not, they cannot hide from the message it declares to all the world. God is not a figment of our imagination. He is with us right now, and he desires to help us.

Ps. 19:7-11

God's laws guide us in the right way to live. They are not a burden that robs us of the good things of life (see Matthew 11:29-30). Instead, they transform us, causing us to reflect his image all the brighter.

Ps. 19:12-14

David asked God to reveal any hidden sins in his life so that he might see the truth. He was aware of his need to honestly examine his heart, and he asked God to help him. We have a tendency to be blind to our sins. We need God to clarify our thinking—to reveal the sin that is working its deception within us and to keep us from deliberately doing wrong. When our hearts are right with God, our actions will be right also.

Ps. 20:1-3

The psalmist counted on God's presence at all times to protect him, especially when his problems were most intense. If God could help David with all his troubles, he can also protect us.

Ps. 21:1-6

As we honestly reflect on our spiritual condition, we come to realize that our strength comes from God as we seek him through prayer and meditation on his Word. He wants to give each of us a life that has eternal value and meaning. As we experience such blessings, we will begin to understand that true joy is an outgrowth of being in God's presence. This should motivate us to spend time with God, seeking him through prayer and meditation on his Word. We need to draw close to him, not just for what he can do for us, but for who he is.

Ps. 22:1-5

We all have experienced feelings of abandonment. The words in the first verse were repeated by Jesus Christ as he hung on the cross, indicating that even he experienced feelings of isolation from God the Father (see Matthew 27:46; Mark 15:34). When we feel cut off from God, we may be tempted to question his existence or doubt that he is able to rescue us. At such times, we must rely not on feelings but on facts. We must remember who God is and what he has done for his people in the past.

Ps. 22:6-11

When things aren't going well, we may feel like a "worm," just as David did. But God cares for us and will help us. Others may mock us, doubting that God can really save us. We should ignore these people because we know God is there to rescue us. He has helped before, ever since our birth, and he will surely help us now.

Ps. 22:12-21

We have the help of a God who understands our pain. Jesus Christ experienced the most terrible conditions imaginable during his earthly life and sacrificial death on the cross. He was beaten, crucified, and stripped of his dignity. Jesus knows how we feel when we suffer physical and emotional pain. He knows what it feels like to be betrayed and rejected by those he loved. He is with us and will help us when we are suffering.

Ps. 23:1-6

The Lord is our shepherd, and he knows what we need better than we do. God wants us to have what is best for us. As long as we trust in him as our shepherd, he will lead us to places of safety. He knows how to direct us away from places where we will stumble. Even when we have fallen, he can still rescue us.

Ps. 24:1-2

Some of us may feel that there is no power great enough to deliver us from the terrible circumstances we have fallen into. In these verses, however, we are shown a God who has enough power to control the entire universe. And we know from his Word that God has provided a way for our sins to be paid and for us to be delivered from sin's grip.

Ps. 25:1-7

When we place our faith in God, we can trust him to care for us and to help us overcome the things in our lives that would destroy us. We need to ask him to forgive our past sins and to show us how to live according to his will.

Ps. 27:1-6

David praised God for the help and hope he provided. We have nothing to fear in this life if we put our complete trust in God as our guide, deliverer, and protector. If we continually seek God, we can be assured that when problems come, he will watch over us, make our way secure, and draw us even closer to himself.

Ps. 27:11-14

Because temptations are pressing in around us, we need more than ever to learn to depend on God to guide us. Apart from him we have no power against the things that seek to destroy us. We must determine, one day at a time, to follow God, patiently and confidently waiting for him to protect and lead us.

Ps. 28:1-5

We won't find the answers to life's problems among those who practice evil. Such people are headed for judgment in the end. If we don't avoid the people and situations of our past failures, we will almost always get trapped by the same old mistakes.

Ps. 28:6-9

God can empower us to stand against the pressures that seem to drive us back into sinful habits. Knowing that God is on our side should be a source of great joy and encouragement. Even when we feel we can't go on, God is always there to lift us up and support us.

Ps. 29:1-9

In this psalm, we are reminded of God's great power over nature. Yet even though his power is greater than any words can describe, he knows and loves each one of us. He is able to conquer any struggles we face, and his personal concern for us should inspire us to surrender to him.

Ps. 30:1-5

What joy and gratitude we feel when God picks us up and does not allow our problems to defeat or destroy us! We must go through some long, dark nights struggling with temptation before we experience the joy of victory. There are times we must wait on the Lord. But when we do finally overcome, the joy of success will only be that much sweeter.

Ps. 30:6-9

Sometimes we may be in the most danger when everything in our lives is going well. We tend to get overconfident and think nothing can happen to us. But pride and overconfidence usually come before a fall. We must always remember that we can't make it alone.

Ps. 30:10-12

David concluded his request for deliverance with words of praise to God. Staying close to God, seeking him through prayer, meditating on his Word, and worshiping him are key spiritual disciplines that help us preserve spiritual gains. God wants us to grow spiritually and to live lives filled with purpose and joy. When God does help us, we should not hesitate to praise him, singing praises to the Lord. Praising God out loud is an excellent way to tell others about God's work in our lives. This will not only encourage others to seek God, it will also give us added strength to persevere in our own spiritual growth.

Ps. 31:1-5

David's words exhibit his dependence on God in a time of stress. God is our strong refuge, our rock of safety—the one we should turn to when we feel overwhelmed by temptation and danger. Because we know he is such a strong refuge for us, we can surrender our lives to him each day with confidence.

Ps. 31:14-18

The writer of this psalm shared his confidence that God alone could deliver him from his troubles. He also realized that without God's help he would suffer great humiliation. God is the only one able to solve our problems. He is willing to help us overcome the people and situations that once dragged us down. We need to make sure he is at the center of our lives.

Ps. 32:1-4

Making restitution for our past failures and reconciling our relationships is an important part of our spiritual growth. We see in this psalm that we suffer unnecessary guilt by refusing to confess our sin. As David declared, we can know great joy when we receive forgiveness for our sins.

Ps. 32:5-9

Like David, we need to confess our sins before God and receive forgiveness. When we do so, we also set a good example for others who are having a hard time admitting their sin to God. We also set our hearts free from the destructive grip of guilt and restore our relationship with God. Then we can learn to live in obedience to the Lord's will and respond willingly to his instruction.

Ps. 34:1-7

When we experience deliverance through God's power, it should be natural for us to praise him and share the good news with others. If we care about other people who suffer as we did, we would be selfish not to tell how we found help. Boasting about our God and the help he has given us is one kind of boasting that is good to do. We will find that this kind of godly boasting will not only encourage others, but it will also strengthen our faith in God.

Ps. 34:8-14

If we have gone through life trusting in our own judgment, we may find it hard to surrender to God and his plan for us. But if we refuse to seek God's help and direction, we may never know just how good he can be to us. He has the power and the wisdom we need to have victory in our struggles with sin and temptation.

Ps. 35:17-28

In this psalm, David expressed feelings of desperation; it seemed to him that God had forgotten him. At times we feel the same way, but when relief comes, we should, like David, encourage others who are having the same desperate feelings. We need to cry out to God for his wisdom and power to help us do right, knowing that he hears us when we pray.

Ps. 37:1-7

Do not worry about or be jealous of those who seem to be getting away with doing wrong things. Their day in the sun is short; their moment of glory will soon be over. We need to do things that have lasting value—faithfully serving our God and helping the people around us. God wants us to develop a close relationship with him and determine to serve him in everything we do. Then, in God’s perfect timing, all will see that God’s way is right.

Ps. 38:1-8

God’s judgment against our sinful habits may seem very harsh, but he intends it for our ultimate good. Our sin does have consequences, and God allows the painful results to remind us that the suffering will only get worse unless we turn from our sin and surrender to him. Only he can help us overcome our sinful habits and reestablish our relationships. We would be wise to learn from our suffering rather than be destroyed by it.

Ps. 38:9-16

The writer of this psalm lamented his sinful state. Then he turned to the only one who was listening—indeed, the only one able to help—God. The longer we remain in our sin, the more our heart pounds in fear, our energy ebbs away, and our ability to see ourselves becomes distorted. Even David’s closest friends and family members steered clear of him. In such times, we need to turn to God for help. He is able and willing to help us when we ask him to do so.

Ps. 39:8-13

As we suffer God's punishment in our lives, there is no point in trying to escape it. Rather than trying to rationalize our sins, we need to confess them. God is ready and willing to forgive anyone who comes to him with a humble heart. In confessing our sins and failures to God, we move toward spiritual renewal.

Ps. 40:1-5

God's timing is always worth waiting for. If we look to him for help, he will rescue us from destruction and despair and from the things that hold us down. He will help us move forward with confidence and joy. If we are to experience God's best for our lives (which far exceeds all we can imagine), we need to rely on him alone and avoid any entanglements with those who will lead us away from God and his plan for us.

Ps. 40:9-10

After experiencing God's deliverance, David spoke about how he shared the good news with others. Others who are struggling need some good news, and we have some to share. God is righteous, faithful, and able to deliver others from their bondage, just as he has delivered us. As we share this good news with others, we will discover that not only will they be encouraged, we will be strengthened as well.

Ps. 40:11-17

Spiritual renewal is not a once-and-for-all experience. The psalmist apparently experienced deliverance of a sort (40:1), but then a few verses later he expressed frustration at his continued troubles (40:12). Every time he felt trapped, he called out to God for help. This is an important lesson for us: God will respond as many times as we call out to him. We, however, should never use this as an excuse to stumble time and time again. We need to do what we can to avoid the people and situations that we know will lead to trouble.

Ps. 41:1-3

It is easy to become blind to the needs of others if we only focus on our own needs and feelings. We must reach out to help others in need. As we do, we will experience God's help when we are emotionally down or physically sick or when we face difficult situations.

Ps. 41:4-9

There may be people in our lives who hope we will fail. We may feel pressure from such people during times when our relationship with God is weak. We need to keep our eyes focused on God; he will never let us down.

Ps. 42:1-3

The psalmist paints a beautiful picture of the person who aches to be close to God. We need to realize that only God can satisfy our real needs. Other things may temporarily appease us, but in the end we lose our contentment with them. If we seek God sincerely, he will help us to change our desires. We can learn to make him the object of our heart's deepest longing.

Ps. 42:4-11

The writer of this psalm honestly shared his feelings of depression over the suffering he was experiencing. Then he declared his faith in God and recognized God's power to deliver. He struggled back and forth between despair and faith, and he was always honest about what he was feeling. We will all experience times of deep discouragement; they are to be expected. But God wants us to remember that even as floods of trouble sweep over us, we should keep trusting in him. We should feel free to express our feelings to God, and he will answer us.

Ps. 43:1-5

People may sometimes treat us unfairly. During such times we must remember to look to God for strength and encouragement. As we surrender our lives to him, we will find the help we need. Then we, too, will burst into praise for our Savior and our God.

Ps. 44:1-7

There are always valuable lessons to be learned from our spiritual predecessors. Those who have progressed farther spiritually can share how God has transformed their lives. The victory God has given others should encourage us, but we must also put into practice the principles they share.

Ps. 46:1-6

God is more than able to protect us no matter what troubles assail us. If we try to resist temptation in our own strength, we have good reason to fear. But if God is with us, we have no reason to be afraid. God's rivers of mercy and strength refresh us when we are weak and thirsty. No power can draw us out of the circle of his protection once we take refuge in him.

Ps. 46:7-11

The Lord Almighty is here among us. If we put our lives in his hands, we can rest confident that he will protect us. He knows our weaknesses and can strengthen us, helping us to overcome the attacks we face each day. It is true that our enemies are strong, but God is far more powerful than anything that might assail us.

Ps. 47:1-9

Victories great and small should be celebrated with others. The psalmist made it a goal to encourage others, reminding them about how good and powerful God is and inviting them to join him in praising God.

Ps. 50:1-6

Judgment is coming to those who refuse to recognize God's authority. God is loving, but he will also deal with those who have chosen to rebel against him. We need to reflect honestly on our lives and ask God to remove any sinful or rebellious ways in us and to forgive us for the wrongs we have committed.

Ps. 50:16-23

God will not tolerate hypocrites who claim to believe in God's Word while blatantly disobeying the instructions found there. God sees what goes on and, while it appears his silence means he doesn't care, one day he will present his case against such people. Instead of practicing hypocrisy, we ought to worship God with thanksgiving and follow his ways.

Ps. 51:5-9

If we fail to admit and confess our sin, it will continue to burden us with destructive guilt. We need to learn to confess and repent of our sin. Then we need to seek God's wisdom as to how we can make amends with the people we have wronged. Seeking forgiveness is essential for spiritual growth, and we can be sure that God will forgive us when we humbly come to him.

Ps. 51:10-13

This psalm of repentance was written by David after he committed adultery with Bathsheba and then arranged for her husband's death (2 Samuel 11-12). Why did God forgive David and offer him restoration? David was humble and repentant about his sin. He admitted it and asked for God's help and forgiveness. If we confess our sin and humbly seek God's forgiveness, there is hope for us, no matter how great our failures in the past.

Ps. 51:16-19

David realized that no number of sacrifices would cover his sin if he wasn't sorry for what he had done. He knew that God would grant forgiveness to him if he honestly admitted his failures. We don't have to earn forgiveness from God. He graciously grants it when we repent and confess our sins. God desires true, heartfelt repentance rather than mere gestures or rituals. He is looking for us to take responsibility for our sins and to desire forgiveness and restoration. There is always hope for us if we are willing to confront our sins and seek God's forgiveness. God is looking for people with humble hearts, not perfect records.

Ps. 53:1-6

All humanity is inclined toward evil; not one of us is good apart from the transforming power of God. But God can restore us, and he will do so when we repent and ask his forgiveness.

Ps. 54:1-7

We will almost certainly face opposition from people who don't understand our spiritual pursuits or who feel threatened by them. The words of this psalm should be our prayer for deliverance at such times. God is our protector and sustainer, who will cause our enemies to fall into their own traps. Our response to God's deliverance from those who are against us should be worship and thanksgiving.

Ps. 55:16-19

At times, God may be the only friend we have. David was confident that God would rescue and deliver him from his problems. He also depended on God to keep him safe from others who desired his destruction. With God as our friend and helper, there is hope for spiritual renewal no matter what circumstances we have to face.

Ps. 56:1-7

David trusted God to take care of him during a time of great danger. When we are troubled by tempting or dangerous circumstances, we need to turn our lives and our wills over to God. We need to trust his promises. He is able to strengthen us and bring us through such trials.

Ps. 56:8-13

We can learn a helpful lesson from the psalmist here—we should keep our thoughts focused on God and trust him. We will find, as the psalmist did, that God will strengthen us even during the times when our struggle is most difficult. We, however, must fulfill our responsibilities of being obedient to God's revealed will. His plan is always best for us in the long run.

Ps. 57:1-3

We can find comfort in turning to God in times of trouble, for we know that he will surround us with his protection until the storm is past. God cares about us; understanding and acting upon this truth is essential to our spiritual growth.

Ps. 57:7-11

Here the psalmist demonstrates an important principle: After experiencing God's help, we need to share it with others. In fact, this should be the natural response of our grateful hearts. This will not only encourage others, but it will also help in our own spiritual growth.

Ps. 59:1-4

There are times when we will be surrounded by enemies. At those times we must seek God and surrender to his protection. Whenever we face those who oppose us, whether or not we have done them wrong, the best thing we can do is call out to God. He is able to help us; he is our place of refuge.

Ps. 60:1-5

When God shows his anger because of our sin, we feel both abandoned and overwhelmed. In these times, we need to seek forgiveness and restoration in our relationship with God. We are able to do this through Christ, for his perfect sacrifice has taken away our sins.

Ps. 60:6-12

David wrote this psalm during a time of war and affirmed that his help came from God alone. We can turn to God for deliverance because he has promised to help us. God reminds us that we still belong to him, no matter how great our failures in the past. He gives us victory if we call upon him to fight our battles.

Ps. 61:1-8

Wherever we are, whatever the circumstances that we face, we can turn to God for help. He is always watching over us, and we can ask him for help with confidence because he has repeatedly delivered his people. He is our loving protector, who blesses us and gives us meaningful lives, helping us fulfill our vows to live for him day by day.

Ps. 62:1-8

When we face problems that we cannot overcome alone, the wisest thing to do is call upon God to defend us. We will never totally escape our problems and temptations, but God is with us at all times. He is more than capable of overcoming our most powerful adversaries.

Ps. 63:1-5

The more difficult life is and the more severe the temptations we face, the more we realize how much we need God. When we are at our weakest, God's power takes on added significance for us. We begin to understand how precious his compassionate care toward us really is. This should lead us to praise him for his goodness toward us.

Ps. 64:7-10

God knows exactly where our enemies are, and thus he is able to help us thwart their attack. As we call upon God to help us, others will be awed at what he does for us. And as we share the good news of God's marvelous deeds, our victory will fill others with hope and celebration, too.

Ps. 65:5-13

God is more than able to help us because he is the same God who made the majestic mountains of this world. If he can control the rainfall and the waters of the earth, we can be sure he can take care of us.

Ps. 66:1-7

When God demonstrates his power and his care for us, we need to share this with others. We are not alone in our trouble. Some of our struggling friends face the same problems we do. Our thanks to God for his deliverance can become a source of hope and inspiration.

Ps. 67:1-7

God tells us to share his love and good news with others. This should not be a chore to avoid. It should be a natural expression of our joy at being delivered from forces too powerful for us to handle alone. Without God's help we could never resist the temptations that could destroy our lives. But with his help we can live a life of freedom and joy. Let us celebrate and spread the news of God's powerful deliverance!

Ps. 68:1-6

There is no security for those who act in opposition to God. But God watches over those who call upon the Lord. He himself is a father to us, a loving deliverer who sets us free from the traps into which we have fallen.

Ps. 68:24-31

When God delivers us from trials, praise should naturally flow from our lips. As we thank God for transforming our lives, others will be encouraged to admit their need for God and begin seeking him.

Ps. 69:1-4, 13

As he wrote this psalm, David felt as if his problems were closing in on him. It seemed that no one was around to take his side. We may know this feeling. In times like these, we should do what David did—cry out to God for help, submit to his will, and entrust our lives to his care.

Ps. 69:9-12

David's visible repentance and desire to change his life brought him intense ridicule. He became a laughingstock among those who were opposed to God. Even the town drunks ridiculed him. As we confess our failures and surrender our lives to God, we may experience similar scorn. During such trials we should remember that God's judgment matters most, and he highly honors such repentance.

Ps. 70:1-5

This prayer by the psalmist is short and to the point. He cried out for help in an emergency. It is possible to pray at any time, and it is especially appropriate when faced with a sudden concern. For many of us, prayer is the last solution we think of in times of trouble. We try any number of human solutions before looking to God for help. We would be wise to keep prayer always on the tip of our tongue.

Ps. 71:1-8

The psalmist often described God as his refuge or protecting rock—a place of safety in times of difficulty and trial. The psalmist gave God heartfelt praise for the shelter he provides. Let us learn from the psalmist and give God praise for being our rock and our refuge.

Ps. 71:9-12

We all face difficult times. As we struggle with the difficulties of life, our strength often drains to its lowest possible level. During these times of weakness we must look to God for strength. He is able to overcome even the most devastating problems.

Ps. 72:12-14

God acts on behalf of those who have no power to free themselves from their problems. He also helps those who suffer great burdens and have no other source of help. He has great love and compassion for those who are needy. With God's help, there is always hope. He has the power to overcome any of the problems we face.

Ps. 73:13-20

The psalmist had begun to wonder whether following God's plan was worth it. It seemed to him that evil people were happy and prosperous. It didn't seem to make sense. In these verses, however, the psalmist came to his senses. When all is said and done, God's ways will prevail. We would be wise to follow his plan no matter how difficult it may seem to us at present.

Ps. 73:21-24

The psalmist had begun to think that God was unjust, and he had a hard time believing that God was loving and good. In these verses, however, he realized how foolish he had been.

God was waiting to restore his relationship with the doubting psalmist. If we cannot believe that God is good, we will be afraid to surrender our lives to him. Like the psalmist, we need to realize that God does love us and that his plan for us is for the best.

Ps. 74:12-23

God has proven himself over and over as a God who is able to deliver us. We therefore can call on him and be confident that he is able to overcome all the problems we face. He will be faithful, watching over us even as we walk through the darkest valleys in this life.

Ps. 75:1-5

Pride is a powerful enemy. It keeps us from turning to God and makes us think we control our fate. One day God will bring judgment against the proud and arrogant. We were created by God to fit into his plan for the created universe. We must always be careful that we recognize our dependence upon him.

Ps. 75:6-10

The psalmist understood that it was God who lifts up one person and humbles another. His promise to punish the wicked is given first to warn people away from their evil and then to assure those who suffer at the hands of wicked people that God hasn't forgotten them.

Ps. 76:1-12

The writer of this psalm recognized that God was able to overcome the most powerful opposition we might face. He is even able to use evil deeds to bring about his own plans for good. God's power is far greater than we can ever imagine. He is able to overcome even our greatest problems.

Ps. 77:1-4

As he wrote these verses, the psalmist was feeling anguish so deep he didn't feel like praying. The same thing often happens to us. When we are discouraged, we need to be persistent in our prayer, for God is more than able to help us.

Ps. 78:9-12

God's people, although well equipped to defeat their enemies in the Promised Land, failed to carry out God's commands fully. When they should have boldly pressed forward, they ran from the conflict like cowards. This failure was undoubtedly prompted by the fact that they did not consider the full significance of God's past acts of power on behalf of his people. When we fail to count on God's power, either out of unbelief or because of pride, we are bound to fail. Instead, we should confidently trust in God's strength to overcome our struggles.

Ps. 78:17-33

God's anger grew greater against his rebellious people because they continually complained and refused to trust him to deliver them from their wilderness experience. We should pray that this won't happen to us.

Ps. 78:34-39

God knows that we are human and prone to disobedience, yet he is compassionate toward us, forgiving our sins and often turning away his judgment, just as he did to his people in the wilderness. His goodness should encourage us and cause us to surrender our lives to him continually.

Ps. 78:59-64

Sin has devastating consequences. God loves us, but continued disobedience will eventually bring judgment. If we are wise, we will understand what has happened, admit our sin, and commit our lives again to God.

Ps. 79:5-13

There are times when we will feel persecuted, times we need God to come to our defense. We need to be able to recognize these times, seeing the truth of our situation and admitting our need for God's help. God is ready to come to our aid when we call on him.

Ps. 80:14-19

When we are beaten down, we need to plead for God's mercy and ask him to restore us. Even though we feel overwhelmed by our suffering, we should remember that God can bring us through any trial.

Ps. 81:6-10

With great power, God takes away their burdens and delivers his people when they rely on him. God warns us over and over not to allow any person or thing to take his place in our lives. Trusting any resource or power other than God is foolishness. He is far more powerful than any other possible means of deliverance. Only he can satisfy our deepest needs; all we need to do is look to him for help.

Ps. 82:1-4

God executes judgment among his people and holds them accountable. Those who deal unfairly with the innocent and destitute will have to answer for what they have done. As Christians we should stand up for the cause of the innocent and seek out justice for them.

Ps. 83:1-8

Encountering problems should motivate us to call out to God for help. All the forces of evil seem to conspire against us as we face temptation. God doesn't want us to fail; he is there to help us. But we need to become aware of the things that weaken and defeat us. By avoiding them, we will find temptation easier to deal with.

Ps. 83:13-18

Nothing can stand against God. He created everything that exists, and he alone is sovereign over all the world. When we are trying to live for him, our enemies are his enemies, and we can count on him to deal with them as such.

Ps. 84:8-12

Spending just a little while in the presence of God is better than spending a lifetime apart from him. The security, peace, and love that God offers are greater than anything we could receive from other people.

Ps. 85:1-3

What a wonderful blessing—God has forgiven our sins! We have all fallen short of God's standard and deserve punishment. But God has been gracious to us by offering forgiveness through his Son, Jesus Christ. Let us thank God for this gift and praise him for withdrawing his anger from us.

Ps. 86:1-5

Even though we are following God, we often are still faced with grave difficulties. Sometimes the answers don't come quickly, and though we pray long and diligently, nothing happens immediately. We may become impatient and begin to wonder whether God will ever act. In the end, however, God will respond with goodness, forgiveness, and compassion to all who call on him.

Ps. 86:11-13

We learn of God's will as we seek to know him through prayer and the study of his Word. The more we know about God, the more we know what he expects of us. And as we get to know God better, we will discover that he not only gives us direction, but he also gives us the strength and encouragement we need to walk down the path he chooses for us.

Ps. 87:1-7

In God's eyes we are like Jerusalem, the city for which he had special love and concern. In the Old Testament, Jerusalem was known as God's dwelling place on earth and the seat of his rule. Since the coming of Jesus Christ, God comes to dwell in our hearts; he loves us and longs to direct our decisions and actions. It is a privilege to be called God's beloved and to be considered citizens of his kingdom. It means he cares for us and wants us to enjoy living in his presence.

Ps. 88:1-5

Everyone will feel hopeless and overwhelmed by troubles at some time. It is comforting to know that God is listening to our cries. No situation is hopeless for those who call out to God.

Ps. 88:6-12

In these verses, the psalmist wrote that God had abandoned him to his problems. It is important to remember that God allows us to stumble and fall, giving us the opportunity to learn personally about the consequences of sin. But it is also important to remember that God does not cause us to fall. Natural consequences should be expected if we sin. If we are suffering for our failures, we should take the opportunity to learn from the past, redirect our course, and surrender again to God.

Ps. 90:13-17

Only God can give us the power to be what we ought to be, yet God won't force changes on us until we want to change. The way we begin is through prayer. We can ask God to make us willing to change and then to give us the strength to follow through with action.

Ps. 91:1-4

When we see God as our refuge, our protector, we will be eager to seek him and surrender our lives to his care. How comforting to know that when we cry out, God protects us as a mother bird protects her young. Our powerful defender will never fail us if we turn to him for shelter and comfort.

Ps. 91:10-16

God watches over us, his chosen ones. Sometimes his protection will come in the form of angels who care for us and keep us safe (see Matthew 4:6). Other times God may use more natural means. But his help will come. As we cry out to him, he will be with us in our troubles and rescue us.

Ps. 92:1-4

We should praise God for all that he has done for us. Part of our offering should be a declaration of God's marvelous compassion and his unceasing goodness to us. He truly is the one who brings abiding joy to our lives. As we experience his faithfulness, praise and thanks should be our natural response, and others will be drawn to him as well.

Ps. 94:8-10

The voice of the tempter says, "No one will know or care if you commit this one sin." Here we are reminded that God is neither deaf nor blind. Remembering that God knows what we are doing and that he cares about us should encourage us to stand against the temptations we face.

Ps. 94:16-23

We can count on God to take a stand for us against our enemies. When we stumble into temptation or trials, he is there to keep us from falling. Because he is our defender, he does not allow sin to destroy us beyond hope. Knowing that God is so involved in our lives should encourage us to live for him.

Ps. 97:10-12

God is always quick to help those who hate evil and want to please him. God has placed a very close link between our happiness and our holiness. If we want real joy, we need to surrender our lives to God.

Ps. 98:1-3

God revealed his power to the whole world by the way he rescued the people of Israel. We are able to win seemingly impossible battles, just as the Israelites did, because God is powerful and active in our lives. Having found victory, we can share with others our story of God's deliverance. This will give them the hope and wisdom they need to experience God's help in their own lives.

Ps. 99:1-9

God is both loving and holy. His love causes him to show mercy toward us, but his holiness means that we can't please him if we continue in sin. We must not presume upon God's loving and forgiving nature, for he also loves justice. Continuing in sin will result in terrible consequences.

Ps. 100:1-5

We always have reasons to rejoice: We live in God's favor, under his continual care, and we experience his love each day. Such a realization should fill us with gratitude and praise each time we come before him in prayer. God never stops showering us with his compassion; he always keeps his promises to help us when we call on him.

Ps. 102:1-7

When we are beaten down by life's trials, we can call upon God to help us. In such times we may feel as if our very lives are withering like grass under the scorching sun. Like the psalmist, our agony may become so great that we have no desire even to eat. When there is no other solution to be found, God is still able to deliver us. We need to admit our lack of power in the situation and trust God to help us through the pain.

Ps. 102:17-22

God responds to people who are downtrodden and in distress. Sometimes we may feel that God is too busy or distant, but he is intimately concerned for us. He wants us to have a joyful and meaningful existence. When we seek God and surrender to him, he will reach out to us. Then our only natural response to him will be one of joyful praise; we should want to tell others about what God has done for us.

Ps. 103:8-12

David praised God for his great love and kindness. We have all failed, and our mistakes have hurt other people and damaged or destroyed our relationships. Sometimes others have a hard time forgiving us, even when we seek to make restitution. God, on the other hand, is waiting to forgive us. All we have to do is admit our sin and surrender our lives to him. We should be encouraged by this wonderful truth.

Ps. 103:13-18

In the same manner that a loving father cares about his children, God has compassion on all who call on him. God's love never ceases, and we can be assured that he will be faithful to all his promises to us.

Ps. 104:1-24

God created the world to function according to his good plan. God also created us to live joyful and healthy lives, but to do so we must obey his instructions. It only makes sense that when we go our own way, we will suffer painful consequences. If we seek to live according to God's plan revealed in the Bible, we will discover the way to live in peace and harmony with God and with others around us.

Ps. 104:19-24

The writer of this psalm praised God for his amazing control over the created world. God uses the sun to regulate the days and the moon to mark the months. Through these heavenly bodies God also defines the seasons of the year and the movement of the tides. Such power and control over the world should reassure us that we are under the protection of someone who is more than able to take care of us.

Ps. 104:25-35

God is sovereign over all life. Every living thing depends on him for food and life. We need to realize that if we remove ourselves from God's presence, from his control and care, we are without hope, just as the natural world would be without hope if God should withdraw himself from it.

Ps. 105:5-15

God always keeps his word. When he makes a promise, he fulfills it. God promised Abraham that his descendants would inherit the land of Canaan. Generations after Abraham's death, the Israelites entered Canaan with Joshua. Sometimes God's promises take time to come about. We may grow impatient or be tempted to give up on God. But the fact that we don't yet see results does not mean God isn't working.

Ps. 105:39-45

God is able to care for his people. He responds to our prayers—even our complaints—and meets all our needs. When we surrender our lives to God, we can be sure we are in good hands.

Ps. 106:6-9

The psalmist reflects on the failures of past and present generations in Israel. As he does so, he notes that God was still good to his people, often delivering them from their troubles. As we look back over our lives, we also need to honestly assess our mistakes, taking responsibility for them and seeking forgiveness from those we have hurt. And just as God revealed his goodness by helping the Israelites redirect their course, he will forgive us and redeem our lives as well.

Ps. 107:10-16

When we reject God and his plan, we live in spiritual darkness and suffer the consequences of disobedience. Yet, as the psalmist notes, we should not despair, for God can deliver us from our bondage to sin. If we repent of our sins and seek God's forgiveness, he will redeem us.

Ps. 107:23-32

Sometimes we feel we are in a small ship plowing through stormy seas and about to go under. The world around us can seem dark and hopeless. The longer the storm rages, the more we fear and lose all hope of rescue. But God can turn our stormy lives into calm and peaceful seas; he can restore our joy in the midst of trouble.

Ps. 108:1-6

We should let the joy of our salvation spill out, releasing our praise to God and sharing our message of hope to others in need. Our word of testimony may lead numerous others to the joy we are experiencing as we draw closer to God.

Ps. 108:7-13

There is no resource for true spiritual renewal other than the strength offered by our gracious God. It is futile to trust anyone else for our victory since God alone can give us the power to overcome our sins. Ultimately he is the one who does the conquering for us. All we need to do is see the truth of our desperate situation, confess our need for help, and surrender our lives to his care. Then he will show us how to redirect the course of our lives as he redeems us.

Ps. 109:1-5

We all know what it feels like to be condemned by others—sometimes unjustly. At times like these we need to seek relief from God. He will fill our hearts with his love and help us to forgive those who are speaking out against us. We can rest in him and do our best to reconcile with the people who are hurting us.

Ps. 109:16-20

David spoke to God about the undeserved attacks he was forced to endure. All of us have suffered injustice; we all know the feelings that accompany innocent suffering. When we are hurt without just cause, we may be tempted to lash out in revenge. This will never resolve our pain or hurt. We need to let go of our anger; otherwise it will only lead to more suffering. We can trust God to work his justice according to his timetable.

Ps. 109:21-31

It takes great humility to surrender our lives to God. As God's children, we need not pretend to be strong and self-sufficient.

When we are weak, God is still strong. Rather than try to hide our weakness, we should seek God and admit how weak we truly are. God will rescue us whenever we call on him. If we allow our pride to keep us from calling out to God when we are weak, we are in great danger.

Ps. 111:1-8

Through these words the psalmist illustrates that God's work in our lives has a twofold purpose—to accomplish our deliverance from bondage and to demonstrate God's power to others who need his help. Sharing the Good News will not only help others; it will also strengthen us spiritually.

Ps. 111:9-10

We must never forget the ransom price God paid that we might have access to him. God offered his only Son as a sacrifice so that we, unworthy as we are, can be restored to a godly and joyful life. God wants us to come to him even more than we do! That's why we can safely surrender our lives into his hands.

Ps. 112:1-5

When we choose to surrender our lives to God and commit ourselves to doing his will, we enter into the joy this passage is talking about. When times get tough for us and we are unsure about what to do, God reveals his path to us and gives us reason to rejoice.

Ps. 112:6-10

Making good changes in our lives won't make everyone happy. Some will wonder why we no longer relate to them as we did in the past. Some may even criticize us or think we are snobbish. But God is always with us, and with his help we will find strength to persevere in our new life.

Ps. 114:1-6

There is no end to the miracles God can perform on behalf of those who seek refuge in him. To bring courage to his readers, the psalmist lists some of God's amazing acts of deliverance in Israel's history. As we face difficulties, we can recall events of God's deliverance—in biblical history or in our own lives. This will give us the hope we need to persevere and help us surrender our lives to God without reservation. God is truly an awesome God. He is worthy of our respect, obedience, and praise.

Ps. 115:1-8

Sometimes we look for help in places where it will never be found. If we forget to ask God for help, all of these other resources are useless—they are only human inventions. God alone knows what we need and has the power to fill our lives with meaning and joy.

Ps. 116:10-19

We could never repay God for what he has done to help us. But we can at least show our gratitude by fulfilling our promises to him and by praising him for restoring our lives.

Ps. 118:22-25

God's ways are not the same as our ways. What people may cast aside as unfit for use, God uses to do awe-inspiring work. This can be true for us, too. We may feel that we are beyond repair. We may think that we will never be used by God for anything significant. God often uses the most unlikely people to work his greatest miracles, showing the world that he is at work. As willing vessels of God's power, we can be transformed to make an impact on others that goes far beyond our wildest dreams.

Ps. 119:9-16

As we learn about God through his Word, we learn of his ways, so it seems only logical that we should do all we can to follow it. This is a significant part of seeking out God's will for us. In the Bible, God has left clear guidelines for how he expects us to live. He has also promised that he will help us to carry out his will if only we will ask him. Studying, pondering, and applying God's Word should become a joyful experience that will implant God's truth firmly in our hearts and minds.

Ps. 119:57-64

We are called to seek out God's will for our lives. The Bible should be the first place we look to discover it. Once we have been given direction, we must not be merely hearers of his Word. We also need to be doers who take appropriate action once God's will is known (see James 1:22-25); otherwise, we are no better off than we were before.

Ps. 119:71-72

We should be thankful when God disciplines us for our sin. Painful as it may be, it drives us back to his truth, which is far more valuable than all the riches of this world. God wants only what is best for us. We would be wise to learn from God's discipline rather than to fight it. It is given for our betterment, not our destruction.

Ps. 119:73-77

As we obey God's revealed will, people will begin to see the changes in our lives and praise God. All of God's work—even his severe discipline—is done because of his goodness and faithfulness. God wants us to live joyful lives. Our responsibility is to seek out God's will and follow it. Then, as God transforms us, we will be a living testimony of God's power.

Ps. 119:124-128

God gives us sure guidance for our lives. Following God's plan will not be easy, but we can count on his help. Notice how the psalmist asked God to help him follow God's ways. We should do the same. When we are under pressure, we may be tempted to follow our own path. Instead we should turn to God, asking him to help us do what is right. God wants us to grow and is willing to provide not only the plan but also the encouragement we need to do so.

Ps. 119:153-160

As we surrender our lives to God, he is willing to restore and renew us. We can be sure that God's compassion for us will never cease. We can count on him to encourage us when life becomes difficult or painful. As we seek out God's will in his Word, we will discover these wonderful truths.

Ps. 121:1-8

God watches over us, placing us under his umbrella of protection. He guards us against the dangers that threaten to destroy our lives. Simply put, God exercises great care over us day and night.

Ps. 124:1-8

Without God, there is no hope in the midst of life's battles. If he is not fighting our battles with us, we will be overwhelmed by the spiritual forces arrayed against us. We should respond to God's gracious help by praising him for what he has done for us.

Ps. 126:1-6

This psalm was written in response to the return of Jewish exiles from captivity. During this time, they admitted their sins and returned to God. This can be our story too. Regardless of how far we have strayed, God can bring us back and redeem us. And as we experience God's restoration, our tears will turn to joy, and we can sing our own songs of praise. Change never comes overnight, but God promises to continually transform us to reflect his image.

Ps. 127:1

As we seek spiritual renewal, we need to make sure that God directs the process. Without him, we have no hope for success. The forces that tear down our lives are too strong for us to handle alone. Yet God is able to protect us, and he will direct us each step of the way. Failure to keep God at the center of our lives will only lead to disappointment and deeper suffering.

Ps. 130:1-8

We should be thankful that God has forgiven our sins. Now, despite the many ways we have turned from him, he responds to our cries, and we can depend on him to deliver us. In light of this, we ought to worship him with thankful hearts.

Ps. 133:1-3

Reconciling our human relationships is an important part of our spiritual growth. There is nothing quite like human fellowship and friendship, and God wants to bless us through other people. The friendships most helpful to our spiritual growth will be with people who are trying to live according to God's plan.

Ps. 135:1-12

Knowing that God has chosen us as his own should give us the confidence to call on him. All through the Old Testament we see evidence of God's working to save his people. If God is powerful and caring enough to do all these miracles, he can help us when we call on him. No problem is too great for him to solve.

Ps. 136:16-26

At times, moving through life can be like a lonely walk through a wilderness. But God is able to lead us out of the wilderness if we are willing to surrender our lives to him. He will never abandon us, because “his faithful love endures forever.”

Ps. 138:6-8

God responds favorably to humility; he sets himself against the proud, who think they have no need of him. When we remain humble and seek his face, he is quick to renew our strength and to help us against our enemies. He will never fail us, because he is good.

Ps. 139:6-12

God is everywhere. We could never run away from him even if we tried. Such knowledge should keep us from entering into sin and encourage us to follow him, knowing he is there to help us. Just as he is not limited by space, neither is he limited by time. He works with us day and night to strengthen and encourage us.

Ps. 139:13-18

These verses reveal an exciting fact: Each of us is an amazing creation—wonderfully made! More than that, God is thinking about us at all times! Anytime we see ourselves as worthless, we are not seeing the truth. We need to begin to see ourselves as God sees us. When we see the truth that we are wonderfully made by God himself, we will be encouraged to surrender our lives to him so that he can transform us into the people he created us to be.

Ps. 140:1-5

We need God's protection against those who might cause our downfall. Some people like to stir up trouble and may try to lead us astray. We need God to keep us from being caught in their hidden snares. We will never totally escape the siren call of sin in this life. We are never entirely out of the danger zone as long as we live in these human bodies. For these reasons, we must commit ourselves to stay close to God, the only one who can keep us safe. We should also be accountable to others who are committed to obeying God's Word and to helping us do likewise.

Ps. 141:1-10

When we desire to go our own way, we need to call upon God for help. God has assured us that he will help us find a way out if we ask him (see 1 Corinthians 10:13). We should also encourage our friends to strengthen us when we feel weak. During times of stress, we need to ask God to protect us from the snares that surround us.

Ps. 142:1-7

Suffering should drive us to God, not to despair. Because God cares about us, we can release our feelings about the trials we experience to him. God can help us escape from our bondage and surround us with people who can encourage and strengthen us.

Ps. 143:5-12

Even though we are pursuing spiritual growth, there will be times when we get discouraged. When we do, it is important to recall the times in the past when God helped us; this is part of seeing the truth. We also need to remind ourselves of God's promises for the future; this is also part of seeing the truth. When we view our present distress in light of God's past faithfulness and promises for the future, this encourages us to redirect the course of our lives toward the life God has for us.

Ps. 144:3-8

One mystery we will never understand in this life is why God would ever concern himself with us. Why would he show such great mercy to us? Why does he go out of his way to rescue us? Though we do not understand all the whys, we can praise him for all these things. Thank God for being merciful and loving and for delivering us from sin.

Ps. 145:1-7

Praise is one of our spiritual weapons. As we praise God for his deliverance, our minds are fixed on the one who can deliver us. Anything that keeps our minds focused on God is helpful to our spiritual growth. Our praise of God's work in our lives can also be an encouragement to others.

Ps. 145:8-13

God showers us with his gifts and does not give us the judgment we deserve. Instead, he shows us great compassion. Someday all creation will recognize this and will praise him. We are part of the host that will be a testimony to his great power, especially his work of deliverance in our own lives.

Ps. 146:5-9

God remains faithful forever. God made all things and cares about all his creation. He cares for the downtrodden, feeds the hungry, and liberates the captives. We may think no one else cares about us, but we can be assured that God does; he watches over those who have no one else to care for them.

Ps. 147:2-11

God can restore what has been destroyed. There is always hope in God because he created everything and watches over his creation. He is able to provide for all our needs and is never overwhelmed by anything.

Ps. 147:12-20

God is our defender and our peacemaker, the one who meets all of our needs. Since he is the Creator and Sustainer of all nature, we should have no doubt about his ability to care for us once we surrender our lives to him. He is worthy of our trust.

Ps. 150:1-6

Some of the best ways to praise God are by how we live, by how we share the Good News with others, and by continually surrendering to his will for us. All of us are recipients of God's loving forgiveness and restoration. Every living creature—each of us—has ample reason to praise our wonderful and gracious God. "Praise the LORD!"

Prov. 1:2-7

The purpose for writing down these proverbs was to teach people foundational principles about how to live a good life and how to deal with the various problems they would encounter in life. The first step to attaining this kind of wisdom is the hardest: trusting and showing reverence for God. This means admitting that we need help and then allowing God to guide us (see 9:10; 14:26-27; 15:16, 33; 19:23).

Prov. 1:20-23

Wisdom is personified here, calling out to all who follow. There is no real secret to obtaining wisdom; all we have to do is ask God for it (James 1:5). Unlike experience, which we never get until after we need it, God's wisdom is available to us as soon as we are willing to listen to him and obey his plan for our lives.

Prov. 1:29-33

As we see in this proverb, many people choose to live life as they please. They give in to their sinful impulses without thinking about God's will for them. It is foolish to allow ourselves to fall prey to temptations. This will lead us away from God, the only one who can really satisfy our deepest needs. The path to secure freedom and peace is narrow and requires listening to God's wisdom and exercising self-control.

Prov. 2:1-9

Wisdom is like a hidden treasure that is found only by those who search for it. God will grant us wisdom and good sense.

He will also protect us and instruct us on how to make good decisions. We may not have made great decisions in the past, and now we may be suffering the consequences of those decisions. But when we put our trust in God, he will show us the decisions we need to make in keeping with his will.

Prov. 2:20-22

There is a good path that leads to a full life, the path God marks out in his Word. As we allow God to redirect the course of our lives, he will lead us on the right path. If we refuse to follow God's path, we miss out on all the good things God has for us. We need to follow those who follow God and stay away from those who are evil. Their path leads to destruction.

Prov. 3:5-6

What a promise! God will direct us and crown our efforts with success if we put our trust in him rather than try to do it on our own. Putting God first means turning our lives and wills over to him. Surrendering to his lordship is humbling, but he will bless us as a result.

Prov. 3:11-12

When God reproves us, he is not doing so because he likes to see people suffer. He is correcting us because he loves us and doesn't want us to go any further in our sin. God loves us and has our best interests in mind when he corrects us.

Prov. 4:11-19

Everyone can be influenced by their environment. That is why we are warned here to stay away from those who do wicked deeds. If we spend too much time with people who have few moral boundaries, we will begin to think and act as they do. However, by spending time with godly people, we will find the encouragement we need to stay on the right path. Then we will be able to enjoy the life God intends for us.

Prov. 4:23-27

The warning to guard our hearts is also a warning to not give in to the temptation of sinful pleasures of all kinds. Indulging in sin seems pleasurable at first, but in the end its promise is empty and bitter. Sin may satisfy short-term desires, but its consequences are long term, impeding our spiritual growth.

Prov. 5:1-23

Sexual temptation is often very hard to resist, even if we are aware of the dangers and consequences. Throughout the book of Proverbs there are warnings against promiscuity (see 2:16-19; 6:25-35; 7:6-27; 9:13-18; 22:14; 23:26-28). Infidelity goes against God's laws. In addition, it can destroy our family life and our physical health and result in pregnancy. If we are given to sexual sin, we must run from any situations where we might be tempted. Also, we should seek help from other believers.

Prov. 9:7-8

When someone tries to help us and correct us, we have two choices. We can either listen and learn, as the wise do, or we can get angry and rebel, as the mockers do. To mock and hate those who are concerned for us is to deny that we have a problem. The wise are honest enough to admit there is a problem and that they need help. Mockers will reject good advice and be overtaken by their sins, while the wise will learn from it and prosper.

Prov. 10:4-5

According to these verses, there is little hope for people who are not willing to work hard. Spiritual growth requires devotion to God and perseverance. But we will discover that effort alone is not sufficient. We need the faith to reach out and seize the opportunities that God brings our way. God shows his grace and goodness to us by providing chances for us to exercise our faith. He will also provide us with his spiritual support, wisdom, and encouragement as we seek to obey his will.

Prov. 10:6

In this and in many of the following proverbs, Solomon contrasts good and evil people by the way they live and the consequences they suffer. The basic principle is repeated again and again: Moral living is good for us.

Prov. 10:25

When we are encountering difficulties in life, it is a real challenge to be content to weather the storm and to learn what God is teaching us through it. For people of faith, such trials are an opportunity for personal growth (see 24:10).

Prov. 11:1-3

These proverbs underscore the importance of being honest. We need to be honest—with ourselves and with others. We need to honestly admit our sins when we see them. We need to be honest as we reflect on the condition of our spiritual lives in light of God's Word.

Prov. 11:24-25

One of the things we can give away is encouragement. When we share our victories, and even our failures, others will be strengthened for the battles ahead. As we share our experience of spiritual renewal with others, they will gain insights and encouragement.

Prov. 12:15

Changing sinful patterns of behavior may require the help of people we trust and respect (see 12:26; 15:22; 19:20). We cannot live life successfully all by ourselves. Growing toward spiritual and emotional maturity is a process that requires the help of trustworthy people who can guide us with care and hold us accountable as we try to make changes.

Prov. 12:16

It is foolish for us to lose our temper when we are insulted. We demonstrate maturity by staying self-controlled and expressing our anger without sinning.

Prov. 12:25

This verse reminds us of the value of encouragement. When people are feeling troubled or burdened, we can let them know we are there for them and that we love them.

Prov. 13:6

It should not surprise us that evil deeds destroy people. Painful effects are often a direct consequence of a sinful cause. Drug or alcohol abuse will destroy the body; lying will ruin a person's reputation; gambling will put one in the poorhouse. To avoid the inevitable results of sinful behavior, we need to obediently follow God.

Prov. 13:9

Leaving a sinful past and entering God's kingdom is like walking out of the darkness and into the light. Those of us who enter the light see our need for help and the reality of a loving God who wants to help us. When we come into the light of God's kingdom, we can no longer hide our deeds in the darkness. The light of God's truth will cause us to see the truth. Then we can honestly deal with the sins the light has exposed.

Prov. 13:11

This verse emphasizes the importance of hard work. And just as it can produce material riches, it also can produce spiritual riches. There are spiritual disciplines that strengthen our spiritual lives. Physical discipline and exercise strengthen our bodies and preserve our physical lives. Likewise, spiritual disciplines such as prayer and meditation on God's Word serve to strengthen us and help us grow.

Prov. 13:16

As we see in this verse, it is wise to process our thoughts and feelings before we act (see also 14:8). Acting purely on impulse can get us into trouble. We may give in to impulses that make us feel good at the moment but that undermine our long-term health and well-being.

Prov. 13:20

Since we become like the company we keep, it is important to have friends we respect who have also surrendered their lives to God. It is helpful to see others modeling the things that will help us to preserve spiritual gains.

Prov. 14:2

If we are truly seeking after God, we will want to obey and honor him. Like children who want to please their parents, we should want to be obedient out of a desire to please God, our heavenly Father.

Prov. 14:15

Trusting God to direct us with the advice of others is an important aspect of our spiritual growth. Solomon, however, gave a wise note of caution in this matter: Don't blindly trust others (see 20:6). A healthy trust in others is developed gradually and carefully, and any advice that is contrary to the truth revealed in the Bible should be disregarded, no matter who gives it.

Prov. 14:26-27

God will give us security, strength, and life as we fear him. If we haven't given our lives to him yet, now is the time to do so. Any hope of spiritual renewal depends on our relationship with him.

Prov. 15:31-32

If we really want to learn and grow, we must be willing to be held accountable by receiving constructive criticism from others (see 10:8; 13:18; 15:5; 25:12). It is hard for many of us to receive reproof because even when it is shared in love, it hurts. Our tendency may be to ignore correction to avoid being hurt by such criticism. We would be wise to ask for feedback from people we respect. That way we will learn from our mistakes and grow in maturity.

Prov. 16:33

There is no such thing as luck. All that happens in our lives, even the seemingly random toss of a coin, is under the watchful eye and guiding hand of our sovereign God. It is a challenge to our faith to trust that God is truly in control and that he cares about all the details of our lives. But we must remember that “we know that God causes everything to work together for the good of those who love God and are called according to his purpose for them” (Romans 8:28).

Prov. 17:17

A true friend will stick beside us during the hard times. Building such relationships will help us in our spiritual growth. We all need to be able to express our needs and concerns to someone who will care and encourage us in our path toward change.

Prov. 18:12

When we are filled with pride, we cannot see our weaknesses. If we cannot admit our faults, they will never be corrected, and we will suffer the consequences. On the other hand, humility allows us to surrender to God, opening the way for him to correct us and redirect the course of our lives.

Prov. 20:9

None of us are without sin, but we can receive forgiveness as we confess our sins to God and repent of them. Since we are inclined to sin, constant soul-searching will help us rid ourselves of sinful thoughts and behaviors.

Prov. 20:22

Seeking revenge against a person who has hurt us will never satisfy our anger; it will only add fuel to the fire. The cycle of retribution often lasts for a long time. Sometimes it continues for years after both parties have forgotten the origin of the conflict. To overcome our anger, we need to start the process of forgiveness right away. We may need to confront those who have offended us and seek resolution. If reconciliation is not possible, then it is best to give the matter to God and his ultimate justice. Either way, we need to put the matter behind us and move on with life.

Prov. 20:25

Counting the cost involves seriously examining what the promise requires of us and then being willing to fulfill the promise. If we don't want to change but realize that we need to, we should ask God to make us willing to change.

Prov. 22:6

A parent's ultimate goal is to train his or her child to lead a godly life. If children learn to respect authority, love others, and obey God while they are young, there is a good chance they will stay on that path when they are older.

Prov. 22:17-19

Here Solomon repeated one of his favorite themes in Proverbs: It is wise to put our trust in God. He alone is the source of perfect love and truth. It is only by surrendering to him that we can experience true love and discover how our lives should be lived.

Prov. 23:4-5

Perhaps the most common—and most subtle—sin in our culture today is greed, or materialism. Many people weary themselves trying to get more and more money so that they can buy more things and do more things. There is nothing wrong with money itself; it's the endless pursuit of our own pleasure that God condemns. True joy comes from serving God and others with the things God has given us.

Prov. 23:17-18

We often look with envy at people who indulge themselves in sinful pleasures. Such people do whatever they choose without regard for how their actions affect others (see 24:1, 19-20). In the short term they have an easy and pleasurable life while those who live righteously have it harder initially. But in the eternal perspective, those who follow God will receive the greater blessings, and those who live only for themselves will face judgment.

Prov. 23:26-35

Three thousand years haven't changed the fact that alcohol and sex are two of the most alluring and destructive enticements. They promise pleasure and escape from our troubles, but in the end they release a poison of shame and embarrassment. The only real solution to our troubles is Jesus Christ. When we surrender our lives to him and turn from our sins, we are freed to lead godly and fulfilling lives. The temptations will still be here, but now we have God working with us to help us resist them. He will help us to grow and mature in our spiritual walk.

Prov. 25:20

People who are troubled need empathy, not just carefree attempts to make their sadness go away. By showing that we understand and care about their feelings, we comfort them and give them strength.

Prov. 26:11

We almost invariably repeat the patterns of the past; our old problems revisit us again and again. It is easy to slip back into familiar sinful patterns; that is why we need to be diligent to preserve our spiritual gains.

Prov. 27:10

Friends are an important resource for our spiritual growth. We need people to whom we can be accountable and to whom we can turn in times of need. We need them to be honest with us and have our best interests at heart. And just as we want our friends to stick by us in times of crisis, we should also support our friends when they need our help.

Prov. 27:20

The ambition referred to here is that of lust or greed. This includes things like sexual gratification, materialism, and greed for power or prestige. Although gratifying these desires can be pleasurable, it is not fulfilling in the long run. The more we seek God to fulfill our real needs, the more we will be truly satisfied.

Prov. 28:13

This verse contains wisdom essential to our spiritual growth and transformation. We must honestly assess our mistakes, confess our wrongs to one another and to God, and strive to avoid such mistakes in the future.

Prov. 29:15, 17

Children cannot grow up to be responsible adults if they are never disciplined, corrected, and held accountable for their actions. Children who are not held accountable fail to learn from the negative consequences of sin, so they continue to develop sinful patterns of behavior. Discipline is an essential part of a child's spiritual development.

Prov. 29:23

Pride always sets us up for a fall. Pride tells us, "I'm strong; I don't need anyone's help." It blinds us to our weaknesses and leads us away from seeking the people and help we need. Humility says, "I do need improvement; could you help me?" Those of us who maintain a humble perspective, realizing that we are weak and vulnerable, will look for the help and support we need for successful spiritual growth.

Prov. 30:5

The words of God, including these principles in Proverbs, are true and offer protection to those who live by them. Living by God's truth demands that we honestly admit our need for God's wisdom and that we seek to live by it. This will not be easy, and it probably won't be popular. But walking in God's light will place us under God's direction and care.

Prov. 30:11-12

It is easier to blame others for our problems than it is to admit them. Some of our problems do have roots in the failures of others. Our parents may have failed to love and discipline us as they should have. But these problems have been compounded by bad decisions that we have made. Our sufferings are usually caused by a combination of factors, including the sins of others and sins of our own. We cannot change the failures of others, and blame does nothing to speed our spiritual growth.

We can, however, change our own attitudes and actions that have perpetuated the suffering. Maturity comes as we take responsibility for our problems by forgiving those who have wronged us and by seeking forgiveness for our own sins.

Prov. 31:10-31

Some women compare themselves to the wife in this chapter and feel inadequate. Actually, the woman of Proverbs 31 represents a description of the ideal wife. No wife ever has or ever will completely measure up to all these standards. A wife should not fall into the perfectionist's trap of striving to measure up to these ideal standards. This will inevitably lead to frustration and despair. Instead, a woman should accept herself for who she is and commit to a process of asking God to transform her more and more into his likeness. As she grows to be more like him, she will naturally exhibit many of the characteristics of this "ideal wife."

Eccl. 1:2

Throughout Ecclesiastes, the Teacher makes several absolute statements about the seeming meaninglessness of life and its various activities. But he is not necessarily opposed to these activities; he is simply decrying the futility of making them the ultimate goal and end of our existence. For example, work is not wholly worthless (2:17-24); elsewhere in Ecclesiastes the Teacher encourages us to enjoy our work (3:9-11, 22). But work is meaningless if we try to use it to make sense out of life. Only God can give true meaning to all our activities “under the sun.”

Eccl. 1:3-11

The Teacher began his search for meaning in life by looking at the world of nature. He concluded from nature that life is a wearying grind, filled with seemingly endless repetition. Though life may often seem like this, we know that God is indeed sovereign and that he is working out his will among those who follow him (Romans 8:28). This should give us a new, hopeful perspective that looks beyond the bounds of our natural world and enables us to cope with the difficulties of daily life.

Eccl. 1:12-16

The Teacher continued his search for meaning by trying to acquire understanding and wisdom. Instead of finding meaning, however, he only discovered the limits of knowledge and the pain that wisdom brings. This is because we are becoming more in touch with the realities of our fallen world. It is by trusting God and obeying his will for us that we find meaningful direction and joy in life.

Eccl. 2:1-3

The Teacher tried the pleasure escapes of laughter and alcohol. Had drugs been available in his day as they are now, he may also have included them on his list. But these things ultimately couldn't satisfy his search for meaning. Seeking to escape our painful existence through the pursuit of pleasure will not ultimately satisfy. Only God can give us the strength and purpose for a meaningful life. We need to trust him and patiently follow his plan revealed in the Bible.

Eccl. 2:1-11

The Teacher shows how living for personal success will ultimately cause us to come up empty. Notice how the first person pronouns—I, me, my—dominate this section. The Teacher was committed to self-interest as a means of making sense of life. The ultimate failure of this approach to discovering meaning is an important lesson for us to learn. We need to realize that living for the self is ultimately self-destructive. Until we learn this lesson, we will find it difficult to reach out to help others and make sense of our lives.

Eccl. 2:17-23

The Teacher's frustration here is a lesson for those whose approach to work is out of balance. Work is valuable, even necessary, to our well-being (Genesis 2:15; Ecclesiastes 2:24), yet an imbalanced commitment to work will cause problems in our personal and spiritual lives. The Teacher gives us a number of reasons why looking to work for ultimate meaning is a fruitless endeavor: (1) We don't know who will succeed us in our work (2:18-19); (2) the one who inherits our work will not have the same passion for it as we did (2:21); and (3) an imbalanced commitment to work carries a higher emotional and physical cost than its benefits do (2:22-23).

Ecc. 2:24-26

The alternative to the overcommitment to work is the enjoyment of life as God's good gift. This includes enjoying our work while not allowing it to become the key to meaning in our lives. This is the first of the Teacher's admonitions to take life less seriously and enjoy it more. Life is too short to waste it on the treadmill of ever-increasing professional accomplishments. We need to take the time to enjoy the gifts that God gives us.

Ecc. 3:1-8

To analyze each of these "times" individually would most likely miss the Teacher's point. These are figures of speech that present two opposite extremes that cover the entire spectrum between them. There is a time for everything because God has set the times. When we follow God's plan and timing for our own lives, we assist the process of spiritual growth.

Ecc. 3:11

We are told here that God has placed eternity in our hearts. This probably refers to our innate human desire for ultimate meaning in life. Yet in this life, our perspective and understanding are limited. We can't always understand why things happen as they do. It is like looking at the underside of an Oriental rug. Most of what we see are knots and loose ends. We can only faintly make out the rug's pattern. But we must not allow the things we can't understand to drag us down. God tells us enough in the Bible to direct us to a life filled with joy and meaning.

Ecc. 3:12-15

Here the Teacher proposes a practical alternative to his frustrating search for ultimate meaning in life. He calls for responsible enjoyment of life as God's good gift. The Teacher wants to enjoy life more and spend less time and energy trying to make sense of it all. Notice that 3:14 sets parameters around the enjoyment of life. Everything we do must be done with the recognition that God is in charge. We must act in ways that demonstrate our respect for him. This will prevent our enjoyment of life from becoming selfish hedonism.

Ecc. 4:7-8

These verses make it clear that if we allow work to dominate our lives, we are headed for trouble. This imbalanced commitment to work will cut us off from the significant relationships necessary to enjoy life.

Ecc. 4:9-12

Supportive friendships are absolutely necessary for our spiritual growth. When we fall down, we need help getting up again. We must learn to trust others, to reach out to others, and to admit our need for support. This will give us added strength, wisdom, and protection in our spiritual journey.

Eccl. 4:13-16

Climbing the ladder of success will not bring ultimate fulfillment in life either. Success is always temporary. Someone will inherit our work, and ultimately we will be forgotten. Our relationships with God and other people are of far greater importance, for they will lead to true success and a joyful life.

Eccl. 5:4-7

We are reminded in these verses of how important our commitments are. When we make a commitment to God or to another person, we need to take it very seriously. If we fail to keep our commitments, we will hurt the people close to us and cause them to mistrust us. God takes the commitments we make very seriously, and we should too.

Eccl. 5:10-17

The Teacher notes here that for those who love money, enough is never enough. This is one reason why wealth is not the key to meaning in life. Here we are given additional reasons to avoid a passionate search for wealth: (1) The more money we have, the more money we spend, saving nothing (5:11); (2) the greater our empire, the more we will worry about it (5:12); (3) we can't take any of it with us when we die (5:13-17). God never intended for us to live for our possessions. We need to make our relationships with God and others the primary concerns in our lives.

Eccl. 5:18-20

Here we are given an alternative to materialism. We are to celebrate the beauty of God's gift of life and its simple pleasures. If we are content with what we have, we need very little material wealth to really enjoy life. The Teacher shows how important contentment is by stating that the person who is not content is worse off than a stillborn child (6:3-6). Though the Teacher probably exaggerated to make his point, his message is clear. The celebration and enjoyment of life are extremely important. We need to take the time to enjoy life's simple pleasures to gain strength for the battles we face.

Eccl. 6:12

Sometimes our situation in life seems hopeless. No matter where we turn, everything seems painful and ultimately meaningless. "Who can tell what will happen on this earth after we are gone?" We can't, but God certainly can. He gives us hope for the future. We need to begin by placing our lives in God's hands.

Eccl. 7:1

The style of Ecclesiastes makes a radical shift here, as does the emphasis of the Teacher. The message is presented by using proverbs—short pithy statements of wisdom. He gives us wisdom for coping with everyday life in our fallen world.

Eccl. 7:13-14

God is in control of our world. He created it and the laws that govern it. It only makes sense that we should follow his plan. Doing things his way will lead us to live in harmony with God, with other people, and with the world we live in. We will never understand everything about our world or why things happen. There are some things in life that will never make sense. But God is in control. By trusting in him and obeying his Word, we can live productive and joyful lives. Living at odds with God's plan will only hurt us in the end.

Eccl. 7:15-17

The Teacher does not suggest that we compromise our commitment to righteousness. We all know how destructive sin can be. This was probably the Teacher's way of suggesting that we avoid extremes in all areas of our lives. But it also serves as a literal warning against being "so heavenly minded that we are no earthly good." We must always be careful to keep in touch with the concerns and needs of those around us.

Eccl. 8:14

The Teacher noticed something that just didn't make sense. Some good people suffer, and some wicked people prosper. Here we are advised not to trouble our minds with problems we cannot solve. We never have the whole picture. Only God can understand the reasons behind everything, and we need to trust him.

Eccl. 9:13-18

Even though wisdom in itself cannot give meaning to our lives, it is still clearly to be preferred over foolishness. This reinforces the view that wisdom is not meaningless in an absolute sense, but it is limited for the purpose of putting the pieces of the puzzle of life together.

Eccl. 11:5-6

For the last time in the book, the Teacher reminds us of the limits of our understanding. In light of this, he counsels diligence, since we do not know the outcome of our labor. We will never understand all the events of our lives. But God has given us instructions to follow. We need to be diligent as we obey the will of our faithful and loving God.

Eccl. 12:1

Our relationship with God is foundational for coping with life in a fallen world. We are to remember God in our youth before we grow old and no longer have the ambition to carry out his will.

Eccl. 12:13-14

These final verses remind us of the importance of our relationship with God as we live in a fallen world. Life is filled with ambiguity; there are many things that we will never understand. But God sees the big picture; he knows what will happen in the future. If we follow his plan—obeying his commandments with his help—we will discover joy amidst the ambiguity.

Song 1:6

Because of our appearance, we may feel unacceptable. But God wants us to know that no matter how ugly or unacceptable we feel, he loves us and accepts us. We need to learn to trust him and obey his loving plan for our lives. Then we will also grow to respect ourselves.

Song 1:9-17

This is the first of many sections of mutual praise and admiration between the bride and groom. There was no hint of criticism or sarcasm, two common elements in any deteriorating relationship. Notice especially the creative ways in which they compliment each other. Our relationships are extremely important to our spiritual growth. We might learn a few lessons here that will help us to maintain the relationships that God has given us.

Song 2:7

Though she delighted in simply being with her groom, the bride desired sexual restraint until the proper time—until marriage. It is easy to see how difficult this restraint was for her, which is why she implored her friends for their help in keeping her desire under control until the wedding night. The assumption of the book is that sex should occur only within the parameters of marriage.

Song 3:6-11

As was customary in ancient Israel, the groom would come to the home of the bride in an elaborate procession. After the ceremony and wedding feast, the newly married couple would then go to the groom's home to consummate the marriage. They were not to live with his parents, as was typical of other cultures of the ancient Near East. Genesis 2:24 insists that both bride and groom leave their respective families and form a new household.

Song 4:1-7

In perhaps the most sensual part of the book, Solomon described his bride from a lover's perspective. Though she may not have been considered attractive by the general public, or even by herself (see 1:6), he saw her as exquisitely beautiful. In the same way, no matter how broken and sinful our lives are, God sees past our flaws. Jesus Christ paid for all our failures and mistakes by dying for us. Because of this, God can look on us as this lover looks on his bride.

Song 4:12-15

The bride is compared to a garden, a spring, and a fountain, which have been inaccessible to Solomon until now. The sexual enjoyment of the couple is compared to choice fruits that have come out of her garden. Many of us may suffer from the pain of being violated by others. We may feel that our sexuality has been spoiled. But God, who created our sexuality, is capable of restoring it. Notice that each of the symbols used here—the garden, the spring, and the fountain—are symbols of recurring freshness. Even after a dormant season, they soon return to their original condition. With God's help, our sexuality can also be restored.

Song 5:1

Solomon delighted in his sexual relationship with his bride. He realized that people were created for sexual enjoyment—and celebrated that truth. We often are given the impression that God considers the sexual relationship a necessary evil. This is far from the truth. God gave it as a gift to be enjoyed within marriage. It is easy to see how sex can begin to seem very ugly when practiced outside the proper bounds. If we have suffered in this way, we need to look to God for healing and restoration. He will help us to rebuild the boundaries we need for a healthy and enjoyable sexual relationship.

Song 5:9-16

The young women of Jerusalem forced the young bride to remind herself of all that she loved about her husband. Her description began with his physical attributes; it concluded with her calling him both her lover and her friend (5:16). Even though the descriptions in the book emphasize the physical relationship, they had apparently also cultivated a solid friendship.

Song 7:1-9

Solomon's praise of his bride continues. As the couple matured in their love, the passion did not diminish. This is not to say that relationships should go on at a fever pitch constantly. Clearly there are times of indifference and rejection. But this indicates that passionate love can last as a marriage matures. All relationships go through periods of ebb and flow. Maintaining our relationships is vital to spiritual growth.

Song 7:10-13

The couple returned to the countryside, to the Shulammitte woman's home village, to renew their love. They celebrated their renewal in the same place that they met, in the vineyards (7:12). This would have reminded them of the tender moments they shared when they first fell in love, almost as if they knew they were recreating some of those moments as they were together. The example of Solomon and his bride should inspire us to do what we can to put some sparkle back into our own marriage relationship.

Song 8:6-7

This eloquent statement describing committed love shows the renewed fervor of a love that endures and resolves conflict. The seal, or signet ring, was symbolic of Solomon's commitment to his bride. The jealousy mentioned in 8:6 is a positive emotion; it speaks of the accountability shared between Solomon and his bride. Their commitment was so strong that there would be serious consequences for anyone who threatened it. Given his vast wealth, Solomon could speak from experience about the value of love over riches. True love can never be bought; it must be cultivated. Relationships characterized by commitment, love, and accountability need to be cultivated to help us preserve our spiritual gains.

Song 8:8-12

These verses assume the fact that sexual expression is to be limited to the marriage relationship. The girl's brothers desired to protect their sister from sexual activity prior to her marriage. Sexual activity outside the safety of marriage commitment is always destructive. It may bring pleasure for a while, but it will never lead to a life of stability and fulfillment. We need to build relationships characterized by trust and honesty and keep sexual activity in the proper context—that of marriage.

Isa. 1:2-4

In spite of the fact that the people of Judah had God—the perfect parent—to lead them, they still went wrong. They were responsible for their sins and the consequences that would surely follow. Even though some of our problems are inherited from our parents, we are ultimately held accountable for our actions. Taking responsibility for our problems is an essential part of our spiritual renewal and growth.

Isa. 1:5-6

Because the people of Judah refused to see the truth and admit the seriousness of their problems, they continued to suffer unnecessarily. When we refuse to see the truth about our failures and do not admit our need of God's cleansing and forgiveness, we often suffer in ways we don't have to. These are some of the destructive consequences of trying to manage our own lives. God wants us to know that we can safely start to deal with truth and safely admit our failures in his presence. All we have to do is trust him to bring us healing and forgiveness.

Isa. 1:9-20

Although the people of Judah were very religious, they were accused of being as evil as the people of Sodom and Gomorrah. They gave sacrifices to pay for their sins, but they felt no remorse. They needed to see the truth about their spiritual condition, acknowledge the depth of their sin, and turn to God for cleansing and renewal. Religious activity is no substitute for a genuine life with God. It is only when we honestly confess our sins and ask God to help us that he will make us “as white as snow.”

Isa. 2:1-5

At the end of history, the entire human race will finally acknowledge that God is supreme. Judah was called to live in light of that future reality. We, too, are called to give up our sins and other distractions that draw our attention from God. We need to seek out, and then live according to God’s will for us. As we do this, we will not only be able to restore our present lives, we will also be able to share in God’s eternal kingdom.

Isa. 2:6-22

Isaiah declared that when God sets up his kingdom, the people who have put their trust in anything other than God will be humbled and will hide in fear. By putting our trust in God, not in any human program or plan, we will have no reason to be ashamed or afraid when he fully reveals his awesome power. Any human plan or item that we may choose to trust will one day be destroyed. Therefore, we would be foolish to depend on things like money, power, or anything else that excludes God and his power.

Isa. 3:1-8

God was going to crush the people of Judah to show them that life is unmanageable without God. The people had refused to listen to God’s warnings, so something drastic was needed to open their eyes to their true condition. If we ignore the warnings God sends us, he may need to send a more pressing trial to get us to see the truth and get back on the right track. God wants us to have a joyful and meaningful life. We need to pay attention to his warnings before it is too late.

Isa. 3:9-26

The sins of Sodom and Gomorrah were infamous; God had utterly destroyed those cities for their sin (see Genesis 19). Being compared to wicked Sodom should have made the Israelites realize how evil they had become, but they weren't even ashamed of the comparison. They weren't denying their sins; they delighted in them. Humility and a contrite spirit are signs that we are in a right relationship with God. We are in serious spiritual danger any time we fail to be concerned when we are living in opposition to God's revealed moral will.

Isa. 4:2-4

God wants his people to be characterized by self-respect, honor, and righteousness. Getting there, however, sometimes includes a scorching purification process. Facing up to and dealing with the reality of our inadequacies, sins, and disobedience to God is not easy or painless, but the end God has prepared for us is worth the price of the process.

Isa. 4:5-6

Isaiah used the imagery of the cloud of smoke and fire to remind the people of Judah of God's protection in the desert wanderings (see Exodus 13:21-14:31). God is still there to protect us and rescue us, even though we can't see the pillar of cloud and fire. The Holy Spirit will care for us and guide us throughout our lives if we continue to seek him.

Isa. 5:1-7

God provides us with all we need for a fruitful life, but when we reject him and abandon his way, our lives become unfruitful and troubled. If we will seek God and surrender our lives to him, he can cultivate a new way of life that will become both fulfilling and fruitful.

Isa. 5:20-23

When we reject God, our perception of reality becomes distorted. We cannot see the truth if we reject the one who is truth. To see things in the proper light again, we need to read the Bible—God’s Word to us—and talk to God through prayer. As we become familiar with God and his Word, we will discover his will for us and receive a clearer understanding of God’s truth.

Isa. 5:24-30

God used Assyria to invade Israel as judgment for her sins. God had given the people of Israel his laws and the promise of life if they would obey. But they refused to obey God, looking instead to the nations of the world to protect them. Their rejection of God and his laws led to God’s judgment and Israel’s confrontation with the Assyrian army. God has given us his Word to follow. He offers all the protection we need from our enemies. However, if we stubbornly refuse to obey God’s will, he may allow outside enemies to drive us back to him.

Isa. 6:1-8

Isaiah's recognition of his own uncleanness did not disqualify him from a relationship with God and a life of service to him. In contrast, it set the stage for his cleansing and commissioning into service. When we hide our sins and failures, God will not use us in his service. When we admit them, God can cleanse, restore, and use us.

Isa. 6:8

God is not looking for people who are perfect or who pretend to be perfect. He is looking for people who can say with Isaiah, "Here I am. Send me." If we are willing to surrender our past failures to God, he will not allow them to stand in the way of our future.

Isa. 6:9-13

Being fruitful does not necessarily mean we have to be a great success in human terms. We need not feel a compulsion to overachieve or look good to others; Isaiah certainly did not. We should aim to be faithful to God's calling, not to measure up to the world's standards.

Isa. 7:17-25

Confronted with the challenge of invasion from the coalition of Israel and Syria, Ahaz rejected Isaiah's call to trust God and tried to solve the problem his own way: He called on Assyria for protection. Later Assyria turned on Judah and did much damage to God's nation and people. The things we use to help us cope with our problems can take over our lives and destroy us. It is never too late to call on the one we should have turned to in the first place—God.

Isa. 8:6-8

To the leaders of Judah, asking Assyria for protection seemed like a good solution, but the long-term consequences proved to be disastrous. The Assyrian armies eventually attacked Judah and destroyed the land. Had the leaders heeded God's warning, they could have avoided the attacks from their former ally. Similarly, if our spiritual renewal is grounded in anything other than God and his instructions for our lives, we may wind up in even greater peril than before.

Isa. 8:11-15

Isaiah was being pressured to go along with a plan of human origin; God had nothing to do with it. To reject the king's plan, however, amounted to treason, and the king's advisers probably stressed this to Isaiah to get him to go along with the plan. We, too, will face pressure to follow ungodly plans, often leading us back into our old ways. When our "friends" try to coerce us to follow their ways, we shouldn't fear their rejection when we don't go along with them. God says that if we fear him, we need not fear anything else—not friends, coworkers, or family.

Isa. 9:6

God is the one to whom we can turn for deep healing and restoration. He is the Wonderful Counselor, who can help us sort through our inner mess and guide us into truth and reality. He is the Mighty God, who can supply us with the power we need to follow his path for life. He is the Everlasting Father, who can love us more deeply than any earthly father can. He is the Prince of Peace, who can fill our minds with peace and our lives with wholeness.

Isa. 9:7

God brings justice and peace to the world and to troubled people. Though injustice seems to prevail and we may suffer from abuses that are not our fault, we can be assured that justice will be served—if not in this lifetime, then in the next. We can have God's peace if we trust in him and give him all our worries, cares, hopes, and ambitions. We need to ask God to help us find true peace as we face the everyday problems of life.

Isa. 10:1-19

Comfort can be found in knowing that (1) God can sovereignly use evil people to work good within his larger plan (10:5-11, here Assyria is God's instrument in disciplining Judah), and (2) God will someday punish all who do evil (10:12-19, Assyria). It is a comfort to know that those who do evil will be held accountable by God (so we can release our hatred). When we surrender them to God, even the evil actions of others can be used by him for our ultimate good.

Isa. 11:1-10

We may feel deep insecurity and hurt over misunderstandings and injustices we have suffered at the hands of others. Our hope is in God, who will come again and rule the world in justice and truth. He will straighten out all the inequities of the past. When his kingdom is established, we will have nothing to fear: “Nothing will hurt or destroy in all [God’s] holy mountain” (11:9).

Isa. 11:11-16

God’s power to restore disintegrated families is great. The family of Israel had fallen. Many had been scattered among the nations in the dispersion. The nations of Israel and Judah were locked in destructive patterns of jealousy. Out of this mess, God promised to bring restoration and unity. He can do the same for us, too. If our family is divided, for whatever reason, God can unify it. This restoration starts with open communication and complete trust in God.

Isa. 12:1-6

Once we surrender our lives to God, we can rejoice in his salvation. God was angry with us, but now he comforts, heals, and strengthens us. And we will want to share with others the joy and the story of how God has helped us, making “known his praise around the world” (12:5).

Isa. 13:1–23:18

In these chapters dealing with God’s judgment against unbelieving nations, two lessons stand out. First, evildoers will come under God’s judgment. If we have been seriously hurt by certain people, we can release them to God. We need not hold on to our pain, seeking revenge, because we know that God will deal with them. Second, those who reject God and think they can handle their lives alone will one day discover that they cannot. We need to make sure we have surrendered our lives to God so we can be saved now and for all eternity.

Isa. 13:1–14:2

Babylon would come under God's judgment. God's anger at the sin of unrepentant people is clearly displayed. God is not, however, like an angry, abusive parent whose anger does not accurately correspond to a child's behavior. Toward unrepentant unbelievers, God shows judgment. But to those who believe in him and ask his forgiveness, God shows compassion (14:1).

Isa. 14:12-20

Pride was the root of the problem with Babylon and its king. We, too, must beware of this deadly sin. Healthy self-esteem is proper, but the sin of pride makes us think we are better than others, even God. Sometimes our pride is an unhealthy attempt to cover up deep insecurities that can be dealt with only by the love and grace of God.

Isa. 14:26-27

We would be foolish to ignore God and his moral laws and hope that life will go well anyway. The Assyrians thought just that, but they were denying reality. God is sovereign over the whole earth and will uphold his moral laws and purposes whether we believe it or not. Since this is the reality of the matter, we need to follow God and his laws. Even if we have ignored God all our lives, it is not too late to seek him now and start following his plan.

Isa. 15:2-3

The Moabites lamented their suffering, but they never acknowledged their sins and asked God to forgive them. We may face a similar danger. Unless we admit our problems and sins to God and others, we may never get beyond feeling sorry for ourselves. Bemoaning the suffering brought on by our sins is helpful only if it leads us to redirect our lives according to God's will and plan.

Isa. 16:3-5

Moab's request for help from Judah could well be applied to our own communities and their dealings with hurting people. Have we opened our doors to those who are troubled and hurting so they can find refuge, counsel, and help in an environment of love and grace? As God's people who are governed by the rule of Christ, we have much to offer our hurting world.

Isa. 16:12

Judgment would come in order to humble Moab and force her to deal with the truth of her sin. Instead of turning to God, she would turn to idols that had no power to help. Moab is like the person who needs God's help but refuses it. Help is there if we will only accept it. Instead of turning to God, we may turn to our work, perfectionism, substance abuse, or any number of pursuits. These “solutions,” however, will only add to our problems if they are attempts to help ourselves apart from God.

Isa. 17:3-7

It would take almost complete destruction for Israel to respect God and follow him. If we are wise, we won't wait until our lives are devastated before turning to God for help. The sooner we admit that we are in need of God's powerful help, the sooner we can ask God to rescue us.

Isa. 18:7

The enemy nation of Ethiopia would one day come to Jerusalem to worship God. This reminds us that God can do the unexpected and seemingly impossible. What things in our lives look impossible? Whatever the situation, God can bring healing. “Is anything too hard for the LORD?” (Genesis 18:14).

Isa. 19:11-15

The wisdom of the Egyptians turned out to be foolish. The wise men counted on their own logic and were deceived. True wisdom comes from God alone. Our plans will succeed only if we ask God for assistance and rely on him to show us the proper way to go.

Isa. 21:5

The Babylonians continued to blind themselves to the truth. Their destruction was imminent, but they still refused to face reality. They were feasting when they should have been preparing for battle. As a result, they fell to the Medes and Persians without a fight (see Daniel 5). Like the Babylonians, we won't know when disaster is about to strike. We could be reveling in our sinful pleasures when a major catastrophe hits us. But if we surrender our lives to God, we may avoid some of the destructive consequences that ultimately follow the pursuit of any sinful pleasure.

Isa. 22:1-11

Judah was threatened with destruction. The people responded by taking inventory of their situation and weaponry, but they still overlooked one thing—God. They still believed they could hold off the enemy on their own. We often do the same thing today. We look within ourselves for the resources to handle the difficult situations we face. We forget to turn to the only resource who can truly help—God. We should always look to God first in times of need.

Isa. 22:12-14

Ignoring our problems doesn't make them go away. Rather, the opposite is true—they get worse because we have put off dealing with them. Whenever we turn to anything or anyone as a substitute for God's help, we have actually added another problem to the list. But instead of giving up hope, as Judah did, we should turn to God and seek his help. If we trust the promises he has given us in the Bible, there is no reason to give up—God is faithful!

Isa. 23:1-12

God pronounced judgment on the prosperous merchant city of Tyre for her pride. The pride we are talking about here is not what we call positive self-esteem (“I was proud of my son’s winning home run”). It is the arrogance demonstrated by Tyre, which said, in effect, “I don’t need God. I can prosper by my own efforts.” We need to constantly watch out for pride and make sure we have not replaced our dependence on God with unrealistic confidence in ourselves.

Isa. 23:13-18

At the end of 70 years Tyre would rebuild and return to her old ways of seducing the nations to materialism and idolatry. Without genuine renewal, we, too, go back to the old destructive patterns in our lives. Our aim needs to be more than just freedom from whatever held us captive in the past. We need a whole new life, with God as the foundation. As Jesus said, when we follow him we are like a person who builds a house on solid rock. Even though the storms of life constantly assail us, we will stand firm (see Matthew 7:24-27).

Isa. 24:4-7

Our sins affect not only us; they affect our family, our friends, our nation, even the earth itself. It is sobering to realize that what we do has such a great impact. Our whole country suffers when individual people turn from God and his ways. Our spiritual renewal is important, but not just to us and to those close to us. It is important for the health of our larger communities, our nation, and our world. If each individual on earth were to choose God’s way, just imagine the transformation we would experience!

Isa. 24:17-20

The people here refused to see the truth of their sin, and Isaiah said that they would get what they deserved. We, too, “get what’s coming to us” when we ignore the warning signs and continue in sin. To refuse to see the truth of our sinful behavior and confess this to God is to invite disaster. When we are honest with ourselves, we can see that what we are doing is wrong and then take steps to redirect our course.

Isa. 25:1-5

God will comfort those who trust in him and punish those who ignore him. This is a great comfort to those of us who have established a relationship with God. No matter what we have done to mess up our lives in the past, we can rely on God to strengthen us and keep us from sin. If we haven’t yet asked God to take control of our lives, there is still time. No one is too far gone to receive God’s mercy.

Isa. 26:3

When our minds are absorbed with sinful distractions or pain from the past, our inner lives are filled with anxiety and turmoil. But when we learn to turn from our sins or let go of a painful past, God can change our perspectives, helping us to fix our minds on him. With God as our focus, the turmoil around us will fade, and we will be flooded with his peace.

Isa. 27:1

Leviathan was a mythical sea monster that was opposed to God. Its mention here is symbolic; God will destroy his enemies, especially Satan, God's chief rival. God can overcome all the forces of darkness that threaten our spiritual lives and growth. And eventually, at Christ's return, Satan and evil will be vanquished forever.

Isa. 27:2-3

God said he would take care of his people just as a farmer takes care of his vineyard. He would provide nourishment and keep enemies away. That is as true for us today as it was for the Israelites. God will protect us if we surrender to his power. Once we admit our sins to him, he will help us escape the destructive pull of our sinful nature.

Isa. 28:1-6

The rewards of sinful pleasure are like a crown of flowers whose beauty quickly fades. The high we experience doesn't last and leaves us wanting. In contrast, God is an unfading crown of glory to those who obey his commands. He is able to fill our lives completely and grant us pleasures that will last throughout eternity.

Isa. 28:7-13

Judah's leaders belittled Isaiah's message by saying it was infantile (28:9-10) and, by doing so, rejected God's saving rest for them. We, too, may belittle God's way, considering it to be too simple, elementary, or old-fashioned. The simplicity of God's message does not negate its truth. As we obey his simple truth, we are protected from the consequences of disobedience.

Isa. 28:14-22

The rulers of Jerusalem refused to see the truth. They thought they could stand against the almost certain destruction that Assyria would bring. In reality, though, they were about to fall to the overwhelming scourge of God's judgment through Assyria. Likewise, we commit a fatal error when we are confronted by God's corrections and yet refuse to see the truth and admit that there is any trouble we cannot handle. We cannot overpower God, and it is foolish to try. When King David sinned and faced judgment, he said, "Let us fall into the hands of the LORD, for his mercy is great. Do not let me fall into human hands" (2 Samuel 24:14). God will show us mercy if we truly repent and turn from our sins.

Isa. 29:5-8

God is able to rescue us from certain death. He miraculously saved Jerusalem from its besiegers when all hope was lost. And he will miraculously save us when we ask him to. If God can save an entire nation from destruction and save the whole world from the consequences of sin, he certainly can rescue us from the troubles we face.

Isa. 29:15-16

We can hide nothing from God; he knows about everything we've done, are doing, and will do. When we try to hide something from God, often we succeed only in hiding it from ourselves. It is necessary to honestly examine our lives and then admit our weaknesses to God, ourselves, and others. We tell ourselves and others so that we can get help to overcome the problem areas. We tell God, not to inform him (he already knows), but to hand our lives over to him. Once we do this, we will have the help of the almighty God.

Isa. 30:1-5

In the quest for national protection, Judah sought help from Egypt, not from God. God here warned Judah's leaders that their plan would only bring defeat, because Egypt wouldn't be able to save them. God alone had the power to deliver them. When we put our trust in people or in anything that excludes God, we will fail. To attempt anything apart from God will only lead to increased suffering.

Isa. 30:6-11

When we are sinning, we usually try to avoid what God has to say. Deep inside we know what God thinks and how it hurts him to see us behave this way. But if we admit that to ourselves, then we become convicted, feeling guilty about our actions and recognizing that we need to change. Instead of wanting to hear God's words, we want to hear people say that we are doing all right, that we have no problems. To continue in this state of self-imposed spiritual deafness will eventually lead to ruin. There can come a point when it is too late for us to admit the truth of God's Word. It is important to accept the truth from God because a little pain now is better than much pain later.

Isa. 30:12-17

We can be like Judah, frantically turning to every source of help except God to find instant relief from our problems. Or we can admit our need for God and return to him, trusting him for deliverance. Scripture makes clear which choice will lead to spiritual renewal and which will lead to ruin. Which will we choose?

Isa. 30:18

God will bless us, but God's ways take time. We may need to wait! Trying to hurry the process only leads to disaster. "Blessed are those who wait for [God's] help."

Isa. 31:1-5

Judah turned to Egypt instead of to God for help, and destruction followed. Egypt can be a symbol for us of all those things we turn to for relief from our inner pain: work, illicit sex, alcohol, drugs, food, unhealthy relationships, and the like. These appear to be able to help us, just as the mighty chariots and horses of Egypt appeared to be able to help Israel. But their help is just as illusory; only God can bring us true deliverance.

Isa. 31:6-9

We might think that with such rebellion and stubbornness in Judah, God would have become fed up with them and written them off. Incredibly, God continued to invite them to return to him and find his blessings. What an encouragement this is for us, especially if we have begun to wonder whether God still cares about us after our repeated failures. God wants all of us to turn to him and find salvation.

Isa. 32:1-2

This King who was to come is Jesus—we don't have to wait for him. The future blessings described in these verses are ours now. The Jews were asked to trust in help that was yet to come. We can trust in help that has already come; it is ours for the asking. To claim God's aid, we need to confess Jesus as our Savior, realizing that he died and rose again; request forgiveness for our sins; and surrender our lives to God so he can purify us.

Isa. 33:1

Assyria's foreign policy was based on a double standard—those who broke their promises to Assyria were punished, while Assyria's own broken promises were overlooked. This hypocrisy would be judged by God. God hates broken promises just as much today as he did then. We will be held responsible by God for our promises, so we must be certain to fulfill them.

Isa. 33:24

God will heal the sick and helpless people who turn to him. That is wonderful news for us. We have all committed sins, some of which we used as an escape from our guilt. We don't need sinful distractions to feel better about ourselves. God will heal us, forgiving our sins and blessing us. And once God has forgiven us, we no longer need to feel the guilt, because the sins are gone—God will never remember them again.

Isa. 34:1-17

God's judgment of Edom reminds us that rejecting God brings disaster. It may mean physical destruction (such as the deterioration of our health), emotional destruction, and/or eternal destruction at the second coming of Christ. Accepting God and his plan for our lives will ensure that we finish life on the right path, and we will enjoy God's presence throughout eternity.

Isa. 35:3-7

God proclaims a message of hope to all who are discouraged, frightened, and injured. God will save us and heal our weaknesses; that is his promise. Part of this has already been fulfilled (see Jesus' healing ministry throughout the Gospels), and we can ask God for his healing and salvation. The other part of this will be fulfilled at the end of history when Christ returns. Following God means that we are able to ask him to help us in this lifetime and that we are able to share eternal glory with him in the next.

Isa. 35:8-10

This "Highway of Holiness" would provide a way for the people of Israel to return from exile. God also provides us with a passage through the desert of our pain and suffering into his presence. And the road is without danger because God is traveling with us. We are not alone as we fight against our sinful nature—God is with us, giving us strength to resist temptation.

Isa. 36:1-12

The Assyrians besieged Jerusalem and mocked Judah for thinking they could find deliverance through trusting in God. In a similar way, people may mock us for thinking our hope can come from God. “That’s a religious cop-out,” they say. “Face reality.” The reality is that God loves us, cares about us, and wants what is best for us. The reality is that God is the only one who can effectively transform our lives. To trust in anything else is to deny reality.

Isa. 36:13-22

The king of Assyria appealed to Judah to trust him, instead of God, to care for them. That’s tantamount to asking the three little pigs to trust the big bad wolf and open the door to let him in. In the same way, we are enticed to trust our own sinful nature to bring us satisfaction and protection instead of turning to God for help. Our sinful nature will only lead us to self-destruct. It is imperative that we stop believing the lies our sinful nature tells us and begin trusting God.

Isa. 37:1-4

Hezekiah shows us the right thing to do when faced with overwhelming trouble. He humbled himself before God, prayed about the problem, and sought help from a godly person. Too often we deny the seriousness of our problems and refuse to turn to God or others for help. But spiritual growth is not possible without asking God for help and without the encouragement and instruction of godly friends.

Isa. 37:8-20

The king of Assyria tried to convince Hezekiah to abandon his trust in God by lumping the God of Israel with the false gods of the nations he had already conquered. Hezekiah recognized that those gods were man-made and easy to destroy but that Israel's God was real and able to rescue his people. When we are in trouble, there are many places we may look for help. Only God has the power to rescue us from the troubles we face. We would be wise to look to God and to the people who follow his Word to help us. God created everything that exists. He alone has the power to transform our lives and rescue us.

Isa. 37:33-38

What an impossible situation! Jerusalem was surrounded and besieged by the army of the largest empire on earth. All the Assyrians had to do was starve out Jerusalem, and success was theirs. God is not bound by what seems possible to man. He can bring deliverance to those who trust in him in the most hopeless of situations.

Isa. 38:1-8

Hezekiah's situation seemed hopeless. He even received a word from God that his life was over. We are reminded that no situation is so hopeless that it is beyond God's ability to help. Hezekiah turned to God in prayer, and God spared his life. We are never without hope because our God is merciful. When we admit our weakness and ask him to save us, he is able to respond.

Isa. 38:10-22

Hezekiah saw that his illness was actually good for him because it allowed him to find God's deliverance. Often our suffering works some good because it breaks our selfish lifestyles and brings us to the point where we realize we need God. We should honestly examine our lives to see whether we are living for God or ourselves. If God is not first in our lives, we need to confess this and give God his proper place.

Isa. 39:1-7

Hezekiah foolishly received the Babylonians and showed them the extent of his treasury; he failed to perceive that they would be the next conquerors of Judah. We often fail to discern the things that are our true enemies and "make friends" with unhealthy relationships and activities that end up destroying us. To avoid this pitfall, we need to ask one question about our "alliances": Would God approve of this relationship, activity, habit, or environment?

Isa. 40:1-5

After the judgments of chapters 1-39, God's message to his people is one of comfort and blessing. God never gives up on us, no matter how bad the things we have done. The punishment will end, and God will restore us to a loving relationship with himself. To make a straight path for him means to clear out the obstacles in our lives: sin, pride, hypocrisy, and greed. When those obstacles are gone, we are free to become the people God wants us to be.

Isa. 40:10-17

When we doubt God's power, we need to reread these verses. He is the Creator and will rule with "a powerful arm." He has perfect wisdom and is greater than any person or nation. When we doubt that God can really help us, we need to remember that he is bigger and more powerful than anything on earth. And this God is also compassionate and loving. He will carry his sheep (that's us!) in his arms and "gently lead" us.

Isa. 40:27-31

God knows everything and understands all our pain. There is nothing he doesn't know. But evil things still happen in the world, and our process of spiritual growth will take time and suffer some setbacks. We may get tired of trying to do right and want to give up and go back to old habits. If we endure and keep faith in God, he will renew our strength so that we can continue on.

Isa. 41:11-14

God promises that he will crush our enemies. We won't be able to destroy them on our own, but only with God's help. He will be there for us, holding our hands and helping us all the way. Though we may be despised by others now for how we live, God will redeem us and make us whole again.

Isa. 41:17-20

God calls us to himself to receive wholeness in life, pictured here by the images of water in a dry place and trees growing from barren land. Receiving his fullness, however, requires that we admit we are inadequate and needy, unable to control our lives without him.

Isa. 42:1-4

This servant song describes Jesus the Messiah and his ministry. No description could be more encouraging to us as we seek spiritual renewal. He is gentle; he will not shame us. He will encourage us and bring justice for the wrongs we have suffered. Even as children, many of us endured abuse or wrongdoing that we did not deserve. But we are able to let go of the hatred and bitterness we feel because Christ will deal with the people who hurt us. We need to ask God to help us grieve, forgive, and let go of the past so we can get on with our lives.

Isa. 42:20-23

God here encourages us to do two things: First, we are to do what we know is right; second, we are to learn lessons from our past. Israel's flouting of God's righteous laws led to her ruin. Haven't we been "robbed and plundered, enslaved, imprisoned, and trapped" by our sins? We can become free only when we accept reality and confess our sins to God.

Isa. 43:1-3

God loves us and will be there for us in times of trouble and turmoil. As we "go through rivers of difficulty," we have a choice. We can either trust in our own ability and drown, or trust in God and be rescued. If we are honest, we will realize that God is the only one who can redeem us.

Isa. 43:9-13

There are people around us who can witness to God's power because they have experienced it in their own lives. When we have doubts or feel like giving in to temptation, we need to look for encouragement from those who have experienced God's power in similar times of need. Their lives can give us helpful hints about how we can overcome sin and temptation. They will also show us God's ability to transform a broken life.

Isa. 43:25-28

We may be afraid to come to God because we think he will hold our sins against us. But God promises to blot out our sins when we come to him, forgetting them and cleansing us. Approaching God in humility is the only way to have the shame of our sin removed.

Isa. 44:6-8

God is our Redeemer and the Rock on whom we should build our lives. He has promised to save us from our sins and the sure penalty of them—death. When we have the promise of the all powerful God, why look to any other source?

Isa. 44:9-20

All man-made gods will fail us, whether they are money, success, perfectionism, alcohol, drugs, or false religions with their trinkets, such as crystals and charms. Belief that such things will deliver us is a clue that we are not seeing the truth. We need to examine our lives in light of God's commands to truly see where our trust lies. If it is in anything other than God, we should reevaluate our beliefs and seek him.

Isa. 44:21-28

Through Isaiah, God named Cyrus as the king who would free his people to return from captivity. But Cyrus would not rise to power until 150 years after Isaiah's ministry! Once we have surrendered our lives to God, we can have confidence in his provision for us. He will take care of our needs and lead us to a fulfilling life of trust in him. If God could name the king who would allow Israel to rebuild Jerusalem, 150 years before he came to power, God can do anything.

Isa. 45:1-6

God was able to take a pagan king like Cyrus and use him for his purposes without Cyrus's realizing it. If he can use someone who doesn't even know him, imagine how much more he can do with us who trust in him. There are great possibilities with God. We need to have the faith to follow him.

Isa. 45:9-13

As we see in the Psalms, it is acceptable to pour out our complaints and arguments to God as we try to wrestle through the problems of life. What is rebuked here is the stubborn and chronic unbelief of Israel, who charged God with fumbling his control of history by raising Cyrus to power. Their immediate perception was that God was just helping the enemy. But their limited view of life did not allow them to see God's true purpose. Likewise, we may not understand why God is allowing certain things to happen. But we can trust that God is working according to his perfect plan.

Isa. 46:1-13

God calls us to reality and truth. People turn to many things to fill their inner needs. But anything other than God will fail like an idol that cannot even hold itself on a cart. In contrast, God is the everlasting, sovereign Lord of history who can (and will!) do what he says. Putting our hope in God's hands is the only way to find true fulfillment.

Isa. 47:1-15

Babylon can be compared to those who ruthlessly oppress or mistreat us. Though they think they are getting away with their evil deeds, God has kept track of their sins and is going to punish them. We need not waste our time plotting revenge or secretly hating these people. God will bring about justice; we need to release all desire for vengeance to God, focus on our other concerns, and deal with the damage that has been done. When we release these to God, he can redirect our course and redeem our lives.

Isa. 48:1-11

Once we have committed our lives to God, we belong to him. He is then committed to bringing spiritual blessings to us. Even our stubborn rebellion and spiritual incompetence do not keep God's grace away. Even when we mess things up completely, he will still act for his own sake.

Isa. 48:12-15

Amid the uncertainties and turmoils of life, we can derive comfort from knowing who God is. He is the God of the past, who knows all of the troubles that have brought the pain we experience today. He is the God of the future, who knows what lies ahead and can be trusted with guiding us in the right path. He is the Creator, who has power over all of his creation and sovereignty over all of history. We can surely trust a God this powerful to complete his work of transformation in our lives.

Isa. 48:16-22

God would deliver the people of Judah from Babylon in spite of their unworthiness, but the people of Judah would forfeit peace of mind because of their resistance to God. We, too, can have a relationship with God and be assured of eternal peace, but we may be sacrificing the peace God wants for us if we continue in sin. Our lives can become stable if we are willing to give up our sinful way of life and the turmoil it brings.

Isa. 49:1-7

Many times it will seem as if our godly acts are all for nothing. Our pursuit of God may cause us to lose some old friends or may strain some relationships. There may be times when we struggle with our own temptations and there doesn't seem to be much good coming out of the process. But as we persevere in our faith, we honor God, and he will reward us over the course of time.

Isa. 49:8-12

We see here what God offers to the downtrodden through his Messiah. To those who are in spiritual and emotional bondage and depression, he offers freedom. To those who feel inner emptiness and aimlessness, he offers guidance, care, and fulfillment. To those who feel battered by life, he offers comfort. To those who are ensnared by sin, he offers liberation.

Isa. 49:13-26

The people of Judah felt abandoned by God because of the troubles they were experiencing. We can be assured that even though we might feel abandoned by God because of our own troubles, God will never abandon us. In spite of present appearances, God is working out his plan for us and will bring deliverance.

Isa. 50:1-2

When trouble fills our lives, we may be tempted to think that God has turned on us or is unable to help. But Isaiah made it clear that Judah's problems had been brought on by the people's sins, not God's injustice. Most of our problems, too, are brought on by our own sins or the sins of others. Our trials and suffering are not sent by God to abuse us. We suffer at times because we live in a world corrupted by sin. But we are reminded that the God who controls all nature can certainly care for us if we turn to him in the midst of our troubles.

Isa. 50:4-6

The Messiah is speaking here of his own determination to follow God's call to him in spite of the hardships involved. He serves as a model to us in times when we need courage to follow through with God's will. Sometimes God's plan for us is difficult. It may involve receiving rebuke, suffering shame, or being misunderstood by those who do not like the path we are on. We will face opposition if our spiritual growth causes some people to lose their influence over us. They may feel threatened by our change in lifestyle. We must stand up to them and follow through with God's plan for us.

Isa. 50:7-9

We are encouraged to persevere because God is close to us, defending us from our enemies. Any time we surrender to God, others who have not surrendered to him may become uncomfortable. They may resist us, even try to get us to fall back into old patterns of behavior. If we stand firm in our resolve to follow God, he will see to it that we triumph.

Isa. 51:1-6

When the people of Judah looked to themselves, they could see no hope for deliverance. But when they looked to God, they could see that he was able to bring a whole nation out of one man, Abraham. And God could certainly bring joy, comfort, and deliverance to them. When we look to our own abilities, our hope vanishes. When we look to God, that hope can return. To trust in anything other than God is to plan on failure. True success will come from relying on God alone.

Isa. 51:7-8

When we devote ourselves to obeying God, we may experience scorn and slander from those who do not. Though their rejection will hurt, we need to see the bigger picture. These people, and eventually the entire earth, will pass away, but God's justice, mercy, and salvation will last. So we should concentrate on pleasing God, not people, because God is permanent, while people and their criticism are not.

Isa. 51:12-23

God is the one who is in control of our lives, yet we don't fear him as we should. Instead, we fear people— people who don't really have any authority over us. We are tempted to retreat from God's ways and lapse back into sinful ways just to please others. We should strive to please God because he has the power to bless us for seeking his will or to discipline us for disobeying.

Isa. 52:1-6

We know what it feels like to be a slave to the appetites of our sinful natures. God promises to free us from our enslavement; he wants to remove our "chains of slavery." When we seek God and surrender to him, he will free us from our bondage.

Isa. 52:7-10

God's message of deliverance is so wonderful that it deserves to be shared near and far. "Beautiful" are the feet of those who make the effort to share such news with others. Just as the message of Judah's deliverance from captivity deserved to be shared abroad, our message of salvation and spiritual renewal through Christ deserves to be shared.

Isa. 52:12

As we are on the path to spiritual growth, it is comforting to know that God is with us, bringing us out of our slavery. He goes ahead of us, showing us the way to a productive, normal life. And he protects us from behind, guarding us from attack by the enemy of our souls.

Isa. 52:13–53:12

This marvelous passage describes in detail the atoning death of Jesus the Messiah, God's Suffering Servant. His death for us is the basis of our redemption. Because he died for our sins, we don't have to pay the ultimate penalty for them. We have to endure the consequences of whatever we have done, and we will have to make restitution, but we do not have to pay the penalty for our sins, which is eternal death (see Romans 6:23).

Isa. 53:4-6

Isaiah described the Messiah who would come and suffer on our behalf. Jesus Christ fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy. He came, not because some of us needed to be saved from sin, but because all of us have strayed from God's path and need salvation. Jesus suffered the punishment for the sins we committed, and he can completely understand what it feels like to suffer the pain we suffer. We can confess our anguish and feelings of hatred, shame, and sorrow to Jesus, and he will sympathize with us and send us comfort.

Isa. 53:7-12

It was not easy for Jesus the Messiah to bear such abuse and shame—and it was wholly undeserved! The outcome, however, was a ministry that would change the world. This is the same pattern we can expect. When, in God's will, we suffer for doing what is right, we can be assured that God will use it to minister to others and will vindicate us in due time, either in this life or the next.

Isa. 54:1-8

Israel strayed from God, and God punished them so they would see the error of their ways and return to him. But after a period of punishment, God promised to restore them to himself and bless them. Today we may suffer from pains that should warn us of the dangers we are courting and get us to redirect our course. When we make a decision to seek God, we must follow that with the decision to surrender to him, follow his ways, and turn from our old lifestyle. By doing so, we are asking God to work in us and give us his blessings.

Isa. 54:10

Here is a promise we can hang on to during those times when everything seems to be falling apart and nobody, not even God, seems to care. Things that appear permanent, such as mountains and hills, will not last as long as God's mercy for his people. God's promise of kindness and peace in the midst of our troubles will stand forever.

Isa. 54:11-17

Here we are given a vision of what lies ahead for those who look to God for forgiveness and deliverance. There will be blessing, fairness, and justice in God's messianic kingdom. This should encourage us as we struggle with sins that may entangle us, the oppression of cruel people, and the injustice that pervades our society. No matter how rough life gets, we have the hope of eternal security and peace with God.

Isa. 55:1-5

God alone can satisfy our souls' hunger and thirst. He calls us to stop seeking our ultimate fulfillment in things that cannot satisfy—work, sex, false religions, material possessions, or any other obsession. We spend our time chasing after “food that does [us] no good” when we should be seeking God and his will, the only real nourishment for our souls.

Isa. 55:6

We need to seek God while we have the opportunity. God is available to us. He wants to be found by us. If we will only call out to God, he will answer us. Seeking God is where true spiritual renewal begins. If we neglect to seek God, we miss out on his presence in our lives and the blessings we enjoy when we live our lives aware of his presence.

Isa. 55:7-9

As long as we can hear God's call to us, it is not too late to follow him. No matter how great our sins, no matter how unlikely it seems that God could forgive us, God offers forgiveness. While people may have given up on us, God hasn't, because God's ways are not our ways. Asking God for forgiveness and guidance is the only requirement for receiving his help. (For examples of "hopeless sinners" who received God's salvation, see Luke 19:1-10; 23:32-43; Acts 9:1-19.)

Isa. 56:1-2

God rescues us free of charge; it is a gift. It is not something we can earn by being "good enough." While our salvation is not based on the good things we do, our deeds are an important demonstration of our faith in God. By following God's instructions for living, we are demonstrating our obedience to and respect for God. And God's laws lead to a rich, full life. Since he created the world and its people, he knows what will work best for us.

Isa. 56:3-8

Both Gentiles and eunuchs were excluded from full participation in the worship ceremonies in Israel, and the Jews generally despised them. But in this passage we see that we are all welcome to join God's family regardless of our heritage or past sins. God loves everyone and wants the whole world to believe in him (see 1 Timothy 2:4). All who believe are welcome in his love.

Isa. 57:1-14

God desires our spiritual growth and transformation, but this does not happen automatically. Here God judges those who turn their backs on him and plunge headlong into sin. These people deliberately reject God and don't care about following his ways. God is not speaking to those who struggle with doing what is right and fail. Making mistakes is common to all of us and should be expected from time to time because we are not perfect. But by asking for forgiveness and for help from God, we can continue toward our goal—even after a fall.

Isa. 57:15

God does not promise blessings only to those who can clean up their lives and be perfect. His blessings are given to all who are humble enough to admit their sins and weaknesses and who repent of their wrongs. If there is willingness on our part, we will find that God's arms are open wide to accept us.

Isa. 57:17-21

God is gracious and blesses us beyond what we deserve. Even though we may have led a sinful lifestyle for years, God's healing is still available. He promises to help us in the spiritual growth process. Those who persist in their sins and refuse to repent, however, will eventually lose their opportunity for peace, in this life and the next.

Isa. 58:1-5

The lives of the people of Judah were full of religious activities, but for most, their religion was just a front. They led sinful lives, devoid of obedience to God and concern for his laws. Not realizing that their own empty religious acts were at fault, they blamed God for not doing anything for them. While we may go through the motions of being religious, are we really trying to serve and honor God? If we don't truly seek God, he will ignore our false religious acts.

Isa. 58:6-12

Spiritual renewal includes performing compassionate acts toward others. If we focus our attention on our own lives and make excuses for ignoring others, we will not progress very far spiritually. God calls us to treat others justly and to show love to them.

Isa. 58:13-14

The Old Testament Sabbath regulation provided a structure within which people would regularly take a rest from the pressures of life and worship God. We are still called to worship God in this way today. Not only does this practice honor God, but it also physically refreshes us.

Isa. 59:1-14

The people of Israel blamed God for failing to deliver them from their troubles. Sometimes we do the same thing. We get mad at God because we think he has failed to follow through on his promises to us. God never fails us, but sometimes we fail God. If it seems that God isn't with us anymore, we should honestly examine our lives to see where we may have sinned, asking God to show us the truth we may not be able to see. Once we isolate the area where we are out of God's will, we can confess our sin, redirect our course, and ask God to help us change.

Isa. 59:13

We often fear dealing honestly with our sins. We are afraid that if we start opening up to the truth, we will be devastated. So we start lying to cover up and hide from the truth. Before long we are fooled by our own lies. Honesty with God, with ourselves, and with others is essential for our spiritual growth. If we refuse to see the truth, we can never confess it, accept responsibility for our lives, and allow God to redirect our course.

Isa. 59:15

It is true that many people oppose those who try to improve themselves. Others may not want us to deal truthfully with our sins because we might cause them to feel guilty about their own. The forces against us and our spiritual growth are great because the world stands contrary to God's plan. We must resist what the world says and live for God, making the Kingdom of God our primary concern.

Isa. 59:16

God doesn't tolerate inaction—not helping those who are suffering is as bad as adding to their misery. God makes it clear that his plan for us includes our helping one another. We need to pray for others and help them when they need our support.

Isa. 59:20-21

Isaiah makes it clear that God desires to indwell us with his Spirit. His desire is to change us and to begin a pattern of spiritual renewal that will be passed on to our children and grandchildren.

Isa. 60:1-3

God's people are called to let their light shine to the nations. God's desire is to transform all of us and then to use us to bring his truth to others. Part of our spiritual growth involves sharing our lives as living proof that transformation is possible with God's help.

Isa. 60:4-22

These verses describe the restoration and exaltation of Israel at the end of history. How unbelievable this description must have seemed to the Jews of Isaiah's day, who were under the threat of Assyrian domination, and to the subsequent generations, who would be held captive in Babylonia. But God can do the seemingly impossible. He could restore them, and he can restore us, too (see Ephesians 3:20-21).

Isa. 60:17

This is a wonderful verse for meditation. God's desire is to exchange all that is worthless in our lives with things of value and to lead us with peace and righteousness. In order to experience this exchange, we need to surrender our lives fully to God.

Isa. 61:1-3

This prophecy of the Messiah's healing ministry was quoted by Jesus as a description of himself (Luke 4:18-19). He is the Anointed One (the Christ), who calls all who are suffering and afflicted to come to him and find comfort, healing, joy, and beauty. There is nothing we can do to earn these gifts from Christ; they are free to all who ask.

Isa. 61:4-7

God promises rebuilding, prosperity, ministry, and honor to the people of Israel in their final restoration at the end of history. Right now God promises these same things, though in different forms, to all of his children, whether Jew or Gentile. He wants to rebuild our broken lives, make us spiritually prosperous, give our lives significance through ministry to others, and fill us with honor through his love and grace.

Isa. 61:8-9

God hates injustice, so he himself is not going to treat us unjustly. When we have been mistreated by others, we become afraid that everyone, even God, will treat us in the same manner. But we are assured that God will treat his people justly and will reward them for their undue suffering.

Isa. 61:10

How much does God want to help us? Here the Messiah is overwhelmed with joy at the fact that God has promised future blessings for his people. God does not give to us begrudgingly, as some people we know may do. He wants to bless us! He is happy when people find salvation in him. He wants everyone to trust him and none to suffer eternal judgment (see 1 Timothy 2:4).

Isa. 62:1-5

God promised a glorious restoration for Jerusalem and her people in the future. She who had been degraded and devastated by conquerors would be lifted up and honored. This is God's desire for us, too. God desires to lift us up, transform our lives, cleanse us, and restore us to spiritual health and honor. He can do this if we believe in him and ask him to save us.

Isa. 62:6-7

The intercessors here were asked to cry out to God, reminding him of his promises to Jerusalem. They were to keep praying until God had fulfilled his word. We should not neglect prayer. It is not just a way to bring us peace of mind; it is also a way to preserve our spiritual gains and bring change in the world.

Isa. 63:1-6

Here God is pictured as a warrior returning victoriously from a battle he has had to fight alone against the enemies of his people. Because of the troubles we encounter and the pain we bear, we sometimes wonder whether God is for us or against us. As we see in these verses, God is definitely for us. He loves us so much that he is willing to fight to deliver us.

Isa. 63:10-14

Isaiah recounted the history of Israel. In spite of God's deliverance from Egypt, Israel rebelled against God, worshiped idols, and then wondered why their lives were such a mess. We may be in danger of doing the same if we think that trusting

God is only a phase. After we have achieved a certain level of healing and maturity, we may stop depending on God and try to take care of things ourselves. If we do, we will only experience disaster. Seeking God and surrendering to him is critical throughout our lives.

Isa. 63:15-16

When we find that we have fallen away from God, we can be encouraged to seek him again. Even if our own parents should disown us because of how far we have fallen, God will never disown us. He will welcome us back to himself and love us (see Luke 15:11-32).

Isa. 63:17-19

We see that turning back to God and renewing that relationship is not a push-button experience that happens instantly. Sometimes we have allowed our hearts to become hardened, and it takes time for them to be softened again. We can begin this process, but God will not necessarily seem immediately near. As we call upon God to help us, however, our relationship with him will blossom in time. God is there; we just have trouble seeing him.

Isa. 64:1-4

In this passage, we see two key elements that are essential: faith and patience. The people of Israel looked at the awesome nature of their glorious, powerful, incomparable God. This increased their faith. Then they patiently waited for him to bring about their deliverance. Such events do not happen instantly or according to our timetable. But if we persevere, God will bring about the results in due time. If we are faithful and trust God, our spiritual gains will be preserved.

Isa. 64:5

Isaiah admitted that he and all his people were sinners, and he asked how they could be saved. Even though Isaiah was God's prophet, he included himself as a sinner before God. He remained humble, continually looking to God to forgive their sins and save them. We, too, should beware of becoming so confident in our spiritual progress that we no longer acknowledge our own sins before God.

Isa. 64:8-12

The Israelites were asking God to act graciously toward them. They had admitted that they had sinned and that their punishment was deserved. Now they asked God to turn away his wrath and forget their sins. If we put our trust in Jesus the Messiah, his blood will cleanse us from all the sin in our lives so that we can spend eternity in God's presence.

Isa. 65:1-2

When we consider our sins and failures, we often think that God must be disgusted with us and want nothing to do with us. We see here, however, that God stands with open arms, ready to receive us in spite of our sins. He welcomes those who have never sought him before, and he longs for those who have strayed to come back to him.

Isa. 65:8-10

In the midst of national judgment, God will deal righteously with each individual, preserving the remnant who seek him. We need not fear that God will treat us unfairly, basing his judgment on our family or friends. God is both just and merciful when he deals with his people.

Isa. 65:11-15

The people of Israel abandoned the true God by dabbling in occult practices. They worshiped pagan gods called Fate and Destiny, hoping to influence their own future. It is ironic that what they were trying to avoid (suffering and judgment) came upon them because they sought help from these gods. God is our only reliable source of help.

Isa. 65:16-25

The new heaven and new earth will be wonderful; there will be no pain, suffering, sorrow, or want. God will answer our prayers while we are still speaking them. There will be peace everywhere, even among the animals. While this level of blessing will not be achieved in this earthly lifetime, we can look forward to it in the next life if we are children of God.

Isa. 66:2

God will respond to us when we follow these key principles: the humility to acknowledge our faults, the willingness to turn from and deal with our wrongs (contrite heart), and the desire to do what is right, no matter how difficult (tremble at God's Word). There is a double blessing when we follow these principles: We are able to overcome our sins, and we are able to share in God's Kingdom.

Isa. 66:3-4

God is not fooled by our religious games. If we "play church" and have no desire to follow God, we will be judged. God's deliverance comes from seeking his will and honoring and trusting him. Our spiritual growth is ensured when we truly depend on God, not just go through the motions of following him.

Isa. 66:7-9

God will fulfill his promises, just as a baby will be born and cannot be stopped. Knowing that God will carry out his promise of spiritual renewal and transformation can give us the courage to continue with the process.

Isa. 66:22-24

Isaiah ends his book with a twofold promise. First, those who follow God will live with him forever; their names "will never disappear." Second, those who oppose God (and his people) will suffer eternal punishment. The choice is clear: We either follow God and experience healing and blessing in this life and the next, or we rebel against God and experience turmoil and pain in this life and the next.

Jer. 1:1-3

Some of Jeremiah's messages were given to warn the Jews of the impending Babylonian captivity; others were given after Judah had already fallen to Babylon. God often tries to warn us of the consequences of our present actions; we would be wise to listen when he does. But we should be grateful that God still reaches out to help us, even after we have failed.

Jer. 1:4-5

God may not want us to be prophets like Jeremiah, but he does have a plan for us. It is our responsibility to cooperate with God now so that we can fulfill his plan for our lives. We need to seek out God's will and then follow it. God will help and encourage us as we do.

Jer. 1:6-8

God asked his prophet to do some difficult things. He does the same for us: He asks us to put our past sins behind us and live according to his will. But in his love, he never sends us into battle alone. He will always be by our side, encouraging us along and showing us the way.

Jer. 1:11-16

God used signs to show Jeremiah that Judah would be judged for her continued idolatry. We also worship idols. Power, wealth, comfort, prestige, and possessions are only a few of the idols we tend to build and protect. When our idols cease to satisfy, God is showing us that something is wrong with the gods we worship. Those who worship the true God will find complete satisfaction. No false god can promise that.

Jer. 1:16

Our idols may look different from the idols of the people of Judah, but they are just as sinful. Their gods were handmade, often statues of clay or precious metals. Ours usually come in the form of money, prestige, or pleasure. Idolatry will destroy our relationship with God and ruin our lives if we do not rid ourselves of it.

Jer. 2:1–3:5

This message was intended for the people of Judah. God spoke about Judah's early days as a parent might reflect on the sweeter days in the life of a troubled child. Judah had abandoned God to create her own idols (see 2:13), and God's heart had been broken. The idols in our lives never bring satisfaction. Careful and honest reflection will reveal the things that we put before God. These need to be confessed and forsaken before we can move forward in our relationship with God and with our spiritual growth.

Jer. 2:2-3

In marriage there is a honeymoon period when we are eager to please our new spouse. God recalled the time when Israel was his eager bride, happy to be faithful to him. We also have a honeymoon period in our relationship with God when we are eager to please him and focus on him. However, a period of disillusionment can set in when the honeymoon is over. By taking time daily to seek God and surrender to him, we can keep our love relationship ever growing. Temptations will lose their power to divert us as we daily surrender our lives to God's control.

Jer. 2:6-8

Jeremiah recalls how the people of Israel soon forgot who had saved them from their bondage in Egypt. As a result, they wandered for years in the wilderness. Without God, we, too, will find ourselves wandering in a terrible wilderness. Drifting into sinful, selfish ways is a certainty without God's help.

Jer. 2:9

God was persistent in his efforts to deliver Israel from the bondage of Egypt and of sin. He never gives up on those he loves; neither will he give up on us. He will continue to seek us out. As we wander from him and try to take back control of our lives, he lovingly pleads for us to return to him. We would be wise to listen to him and respond with loving obedience.

Jer. 2:13

Idolatry involves two grave mistakes: First, we turn away from our powerful God, the only one who can really help us; second, we turn to idols that have no power to help us. When we choose to turn from God, we may turn to something else to deal with pain that only God can heal. We know from experience, however, that these temporary solutions only deepen our pain in the long run. God invites us to put these things away. He wants us to return to his loving care.

Jer. 2:24-25

Here Jeremiah compares Israel with a female donkey at mating time, running to one male donkey after another to satisfy her lusts. Israel was willing to try out any god without even thinking about it—she was out of control! When we reject God's control in our lives, we will find ourselves out of control. We will mindlessly chase after sinful attractions. We need to recognize how helpless we are against the pull of sins that entangle us. Once we surrender to God, he will help us overcome these sinful desires.

Jer. 2:26-27

So often we feel guilty only if we get caught. That is why suffering the consequences of our sins can be so instructive, helping us understand and admit our true condition. Feeling the shame, seeing our lives being wasted—these show us our need for God. What can follow, if we turn to him, is the wonderful joy of knowing there is still hope for us.

Jer. 2:34-35

When we fail to surrender our lives to God, we may commit sins that hurt innocent people. This gives us all the more reason to repent and turn to God, who can redeem us and change us.

Jer. 3:1

To show his grace, God goes beyond what anyone would reasonably expect from another human. No matter how far we wander, no matter how many other false gods we have worshiped, he will take us back if we truly repent. When we stop living life in our own power, God invites us to receive his power. No sin is so awful that God's love won't forgive it.

Jer. 3:6-4:4

Here God is portrayed as feeling intense emotion. He is hurt deeply by the sin of Israel and Judah, just as he is hurt by our sin. God longs for his people to return and receive forgiveness. Sin is painful to all who are touched by its perversion, yet no one grieves over sin's devastating consequences more than God. He wants us to turn to him for deliverance from the grip of sin in our lives; he wants to set us free from the painful consequences we are creating for ourselves with each passing day.

Jer. 3:8

God likens our worship of other gods to prostitution. When we worship money, success, power, or prestige, we are acting like a well-loved wife who runs about, searching for others to satisfy her desire for pleasure instead of remaining faithful to her loving husband. We all know that these false gods can never really satisfy. We would be wise to surrender our lives to the only true God. He will care for us and love us as a faithful and loving husband.

Jer. 3:9-10

The people of Israel were refusing to see the truth and took their sins lightly. We often do the same thing, perhaps because the consequences don't come immediately. Nothing bad happens for a while, and we are lulled into thinking we can get away with our destructive behavior. If the consequences struck us instantly, we would probably take our actions more seriously. We must realize that God does not take our sin lightly. The consequences for sinful behavior will inevitably come, sooner or later.

Jer. 3:12-13

Here is God's plan for change, and his plan has not changed any since that time. He expects us to see the truth, admit our guilt, and confess that we have been following someone or something other than God. We cannot change until we are willing to confess our mistakes. Spiritual renewal begins today the same way it did thousands of years ago.

Jer. 3:19-20

God reminded his people that he had wanted to be like a loving father to them. Few of us understand the depth of God's fatherly love. What a wonderful God who waits patiently for the day when we turn to him and utter the word Father! As his children, we are privileged to enjoy his presence and come before him with our requests.

Jer. 4:1-2

God had always planned that his people would be living proof of his power and goodness. He wanted others to believe in him because of what they saw among his people, Israel. God also wants to use us as a testimony to his loving power. When we surrender our lives to God, our increasing goodness, purity, and honesty will stand out as a testimony of the kind of life that is possible through him. What an honor it is for us to be used by our Creator to touch the lives of others! Our spiritual renewal will bring hope and encouragement to others as they begin to seek God for themselves.

Jer. 4:5–6:30

Perhaps the most difficult part of discipline is allowing those we love to live with the consequences of their mistakes. No parent enjoys the process of discipline, but without it, love is incomplete. God allows the people to suffer the consequences of their sins (see 4:18; 5:3, 19, 31; 6:18-19), yet his heart is heavy. He suffers when we suffer, and the suffering he allows into our lives is designed to lead us to healing and spiritual growth.

Jer. 4:14

It isn't easy to rid our minds of deeply ingrained sinful thought patterns. But as we surrender our lives to God, spend time with him in prayer, and ask him to lead us, he will reveal his will for us and begin to reshape the way we think. Also as we continue to meditate on God's Word, his thoughts will become our own. He will replace our evil thoughts with good and healthy ones. Developing God-honoring thought patterns is an essential part of our spiritual growth.

Jer. 4:30

As they faced imminent destruction, the people of Israel sought to make external changes that they hoped would bring deliverance. We sometimes do the same thing, making whatever changes we can on the outside instead of looking to see what's wrong on the inside. We try to look good to cover the terrible pain we feel. Covering up our failures and pain in this way only hides the truth. Spiritual renewal begins when we display our broken hearts to God and admit our failures. God will help us make changes on the inside. When we are concerned about what we look like to others, we can't deal with the real problems hidden beneath the surface.

Jer. 5:1

It is a great honor to be called just and honest. If one person had been working at being consistently just and honest, the course of Israel's history could have been changed. We can change history today. Our justice and honesty can have a profound impact on the people around us and on the many generations to come. Our failure in these areas, however, will almost always hurt ourselves and others.

Jer. 5:11-13

Jeremiah's audience was refusing to see the truth that sin brings consequences. The prophet warned them, but they refused to listen. We often do the same thing. When confronted with the consequences of our behavior, we foolishly defend our actions. The next time someone confronts us, we need to listen, honestly examining our lives and asking God to change us.

Jer. 5:19

Everyone who rejects God will become a slave to something else. When we rebel against God's control, we become controlled by our sinful natures. The only way to escape from this type of slavery is to give control back to God. He is a kind and loving master, and we can trust him with our lives.

Jer. 5:21-22

A proper reverence for God inspires us to trust God and obey his will for our lives. Disregard for God sets us up for failure as we grapple with life's difficulties by using our own limited resources and understanding.

Jer. 6:16

God promises rest for our souls if we are willing to do things his way. A life spent rejecting God's laws, however, only drains our resources. We end up exhausted and distant from God. The road back to God is always the right road. It allows our souls to experience the peace and rest available only for those who surrender their lives to him.

Jer. 6:26

The mourning and grief from the loss of an only son are too painful to imagine. Yet our grief and sorrow over our misguided lives should be as much a cause for mourning. These are words of warning; we have an opportunity today to make good choices that will lead us away from the destructive consequences of sin.

Jer. 7:8-11

Many of God's chosen people had come to believe that God's presence in the Temple would protect them from enemy attack, regardless of whether or not they obeyed God's laws. But the people of Judah were not excused from obedience; neither are we.

Jer. 7:12

By examining the lives of those who have gone before us, we will see the blessings experienced by those who obeyed God and the terrible consequences suffered by those who rebelled against him. Greed, denial, and pursuit of pleasure have destroyed the lives of thousands of our ancestors. If we are willing to act upon this bit of wisdom, we can make the changes we need to avoid their terrible fate.

Jer. 7:30-34

The depth of Judah's sin was revealed in its practice of child sacrifice, a heinous act that God had clearly forbidden. This is a sin that might turn the stomach of even a hardened sinner. How could God's people have grown so distant from God's plan for them? How are we lured so far from God's plan for us? One sin leads to another. As we continue to fail, we become blind to our sin, and our failures grow ever greater. When we honestly examine our lives, asking God to reveal the truth, we can make the changes needed to root out our problems before they lead us to greater ones.

Jer. 8:4-10:22

This passage is filled with predictions of God's judgment. It seemed as though there was nothing good left to salvage from among the people of Judah. There was no truth in the mouths of God's people. The people would soon suffer terrible punishment. We also may reach a point in life where God allows the consequences of our sins to catch up to us. Instead of waiting until we reach this low point, we should turn from our sins now and seek God's forgiveness.

Jer. 8:7

When we refuse to accept God's direction for living and foolishly seek to find truth and meaning apart from God, we are headed for trouble. Even the animals demonstrate that God's way is best. We would be wise to follow their lead.

Jer. 8:14-15

No matter how hard we struggle in our pursuit of health and peace, it can be found only where God says it will be found. Spiritual renewal can begin only as we seek God and surrender to him, following his intended plan for us.

Jer. 8:18-19

The people of Judah had strayed from God in disobedience and then complained that God had deserted them. We often do the same thing. But if we are far from God, we are the ones who have deserted. Restoration comes as we ask God to take control of our lives and transform us. God is eager to help all those who humbly turn to him.

Jer. 9:4-6

Jeremiah warned his people about the power of others to lead us away from God. We need to remain obedient to the truth and steadfast in our relationship with God so that we can overcome the pull of sin around us.

Jer. 9:7-8

God had come to a critical point in his relationship with the people of Judah. They had ignored his warnings and continued to disobey his will for them. God now had to bring punishment upon them. Notice, however, that their punishment was designed to change them. God would “test them like metal,” melting them down through the Babylonian exile and reshaping his people into a nation that could be used by him. In much the same way, God uses the trials in our lives to refine and test us. We often try to escape such testing, but God uses it to remind us of how much we need him.

Jer. 10:2-3

A horoscope is just a bad substitute for a relationship with God; it is a way of seeking for truth apart from him. Instead of looking at the stars to find God’s will, we should look to the Creator of the stars and to the Bible—his Word to us.

Jer. 10:23-25

The prophet acknowledged his inability to map out his life and recognized his lack of power. This is the first step toward spiritual renewal. Sadly, the people of Judah didn’t share Jeremiah’s sentiments, so punishment was the only solution for their refusal to obey God. It was painful for Jeremiah to watch as they lived out the consequences of their own sin.

Jer. 11:1-17

God gave his people the terms for their restoration: He asked for their obedience. We can see from this passage that God already knew that they would refuse to repent. They had enjoyed their ancestors' sins and preferred idols to the true God. We may consider God's price too high and the reward too delayed for giving up the pleasure of our sin. When this is our attitude, we will reap a harvest of suffering when the time is ripe. Keeping a long-term perspective helps us to choose God's way.

Jer. 11:5

God is waiting to do wonderful things for those who simply trust and obey him. When we reject God's plan, we will reap the consequences of our rebellion and sin. Turning away from God will always end in disappointment in the long run. God promises that wonderful things will be ours when we decide to obey him.

Jer. 12:1-17

It is no wonder that Jeremiah struggled deeply with his calling. He was living in the midst of Judah's sin; he could see the godless lifestyle of Judah's people, and he knew God's concern about their sin. So he asked the question we often ask: Why do the wicked prosper? God responded by revealing that the wicked never prosper for long. We should not allow ourselves to be bothered by their apparent success. If we do, we are the ones who will stumble (see Psalm 73). As difficult as it is to be patient, God's truth and righteousness do prevail—always.

Jer. 12:13

Often our actions produce a crop of shame, but God can turn our shameful experiences into meaningful lessons if we surrender to him. Our challenge is to take our failure and shame to God and ask him to forgive us and change our hearts. Then, with renewed humility and faith, we can make significant progress in our spiritual growth.

Jer. 13:1-11

God used an object lesson to prepare Jeremiah for the devastation he would soon see. In this illustration God compared himself to Jeremiah. He also compared his people to Jeremiah's new linen loincloth. Jeremiah was told to bury it and, after a period of time, dig it up again. When Jeremiah retrieved the loincloth, it was rotten. This illustrated how the people of Judah had become spiritually rotten by going their own way in life. Following our selfish inclinations always leads to painful consequences. Following God's will leads to health and spiritual renewal.

Jer. 13:15

Pride is one of the greatest barriers to our spiritual growth. When we are finally willing to turn our pride over to Christ, we become willing to comply with God's will for us, and God changes us.

Jer. 13:23

We often try to change by making resolutions to do what we know to be right. But change doesn't happen overnight, and we don't have the power to do it alone. Taking action is a good thing to do, but if we set out to change in our own power, we will be sure to fail. Our actions will produce few lasting changes in our lives. We must begin by admitting that we are unable to change without God's help. This begins the process of allowing God to transform our hearts and lives from the inside out. If we are willing to cooperate, God can and will make permanent changes in our lives.

Jer. 14:1-10

As the people of Judah faced a period of drought, they turned to God in desperation. How quickly we turn to God when something goes wrong in our lives! Where yesterday's happiness found us only vaguely aware of God's power and grace, today's pain finds us begging for his mercy. We would be wiser to remain close to God even when things are going well for us.

Jer. 14:13

We often refuse to see the truth of a difficult situation, somehow hoping that God will protect us. The sooner we accept that sin will lead to painful consequences, the sooner we will seek God and surrender to him. God allows us to experience the consequences of our actions to wake us up and lead us back to himself and the healing he offers.

Jer. 15:3-9

God named Manasseh as the king primarily responsible for Judah's great suffering. Manasseh had died several generations before the ministry of Jeremiah began, yet his sinful lifestyle had infected the entire nation of Judah with sin. The consequences of his behavior were suffered by generations of God's people. Our behavior is important not only for us and our immediate family but also for our descendants and all the people who will come in contact with them. Knowing this truth should help motivate us to follow God's plan for our lives. If we do things God's way, we will pass on peace and joy to future generations.

Jer. 16:1-13

God had worked with his people for centuries, warning them, forgiving them, and healing them; but the people had continued to ignore God and follow their own selfish ways. As a result, God withdrew his blessings from his people. Painful discipline often gets our attention when everything else fails. We should learn from our painful experiences and turn to God; we should never allow punishment to drive us away from him. His discipline is a sign that he loves us and wants to have a close relationship with us.

Jer. 16:8

In this verse, God was telling Jeremiah not to ignore the sinfulness of the people. The prophet was told to confront them by refusing to celebrate with them. It takes a great deal of courage to confront loved ones when they are refusing to admit the sinfulness of their ways. They will certainly question our choices and may even actively pressure us to join them. Sometimes we can help the people we love by gently showing them that they are in need of repentance. Often, though, a more direct approach may become necessary. Jesus was hardly gentle when he threw the money changers out of the Temple! If the situation calls for it, direct confrontation may be the best approach to take.

Jer. 16:14-15

Tucked away in a long passage of judgment, we find words that reveal God's forgiving heart. The sins of Judah would lead to punishment in exile, but God's plans for his people didn't stop there. Through their suffering, God's people were forced to recognize their sin and look to God for deliverance. God then redeemed his people from exile and led them back to the Promised Land. No matter how badly we have sinned and how terrible the consequences we have suffered, God desires to work good in our lives. If we admit our failures and turn to him for help, he will be faithful to restore us.

Jer. 16:16-17:13

Here we see that we can fool others with our actions, but we can never fool God. Judgment came to Judah not simply because the actions of the people were grievous, but also because their hearts were unrepentant. God searches our innermost parts and knows our hearts. He cares about who we are, not just about what we do. For this reason, our spiritual renewal does not begin with a heroic act on our part. It begins with a humble and repentant heart.

Jer. 17:14

The cry to God for help is a cry for spiritual renewal. When we acknowledge that only God can save us and heal us, we can begin a new life. Hope doesn't come from within; we don't have the power to produce it. Only God can give us hope and then provide the help we need.

Jer. 17:19-27

We often lose sight of what God intended by the laws he gave us. The people of Judah had forsaken the Sabbath day, not realizing that the day had been set aside for their benefit. God's laws were not given simply to inconvenience us. God loves us, and his laws were given because of his love. That is why following God's plan is the only way to experience fulfillment and freedom in this life.

Jer. 18:11-17

God gave the people of Judah the warning they needed to turn from their sin or face judgment, but they would not respond. They preferred their own sinful ways to God's ways. God's ways are simple; his paths are straight; his burden is light. But we, at times, become stubborn, proud, and arrogant, choosing to do things our own way—a way that leads ultimately to despair and pain.

Jer. 18:12-15

The people of Judah were aware of their sin and even admitted it openly, yet in their pride they refused to change. The only recourse left to God was the destruction of his holy nation and the exile of his people. His love led him to punish his people in hope that they would finally respond with repentance. We are most hopeless when we know we have a problem and admit it to others yet still continue on the path toward destruction. Admission without change is meaningless. The more we know about ourselves, the greater our responsibility to change what we know needs changing.

Jer. 19:1-15

It is hard to imagine God's people sacrificing their own children on an altar. For those who had turned away from the true God, turning to Baal and other false gods was the expected step. Then making hideous sacrifices was the next step. One mistake almost always leads to another. When we turn to any resource other than the true God, all kinds of problems and sins creep into our lives.

Jer. 20:7-18

The beauty of the prophet's relationship with God lies in the freedom of the exchange. Jeremiah was free to question and to lament, and he was free to praise God for his faithfulness even when hope seemed far away. God longs for such a freedom of exchange with each of us. He longs for open and honest communication.

Jer. 20:14-18

In our moments of greatest despair, we wish we were dead and regret we were ever born. Knowing that God cares for us, however, can help give us hope. Despite our feelings of loss and despair, the reality is that God does love us. He is with us even when we cannot feel his presence.

Jer. 21:1-14

There comes a time when it is too late to avoid the painful consequences of our actions. As Nebuchadnezzar bore down on Jerusalem, King Zedekiah wanted the persecuted prophet to petition God for help. God responded by telling his people that it was too late. Since they had failed to respond to God's numerous warnings through his prophets, they would have to endure incredible devastation. We would be wise to listen to the warnings we receive, before it's too late.

Jer. 22:1-30

All of us are responsible for our own actions, but leaders and teachers are held to even greater degrees of responsibility. In this chapter, Jeremiah confronted the leaders of Judah about their sins. He called the kings to rule as David had ruled, but they refused. Instead, they encouraged their people to turn to idols. As a result, the entire nation suffered destruction. We are all leaders in some context. What do we teach our children, employees, or students by our words and actions? What we do and say does affect others, whether we like it or not.

Jer. 22:21

When the people of Judah were prospering, they didn't think they needed God and refused to listen to his warnings. When life is going well, we may assume that we don't need God's help. This self-sufficiency and pride will lead to a downfall. As we experience success, sometimes we begin to grow confident in our own abilities and forget that we are dependent on God. We need God to help us—even when things are going well!

Jer. 23:1-4

Shepherds who were supposed to care for God's people had scattered and forsaken them. Since Judah's leaders had only led God's people astray, God himself promised to guide his people back to pasture and vowed to place them in the care of shepherds who would love and tend them. Jesus is our Good Shepherd, loving us and tending us as his flock (see John 10:1-18). If we are willing to seek out and follow his will for our lives, there is hope for us, no matter how far we may have strayed.

Jer. 23:5-8

The people of Judah faced a future filled with suffering, but Jeremiah gave them hope that after the destruction there would be a time of rebuilding. Even in the darkest times, when judgment seems most severe, God reminds us that a better day is coming. How sweet these promises must have sounded to the weary prophet! As we face suffering in our own lives, we can know that God desires to restore us and give us a hopeful future.

Jer. 23:9-40

Throughout the Bible there are warnings to watch out for false prophets and false teachers. Here we find the false prophets of Judah claiming that the people had nothing to fear. They said that God's presence with them in the Temple was a guarantee of their protection. This sounded pious, but these prophets failed to recognize the seriousness of the people's sin. Their words only supported the people's spiritual blindness. It is never easy to see the truth of our own failures and the pain caused by our sins. But God calls us to face our sins honestly and to receive the forgiveness and restoration that only he can give.

Jer. 23:21-22

The people of Judah still hoped they would escape destruction, and the false prophets supported their hope with false predictions of deliverance. This allowed the people to continue in their sin with no thought to the consequences. Jeremiah, however, called the people to face reality and warned them of the inevitable consequences of their sin. This, of course, upset the people, who rejected his message. Unlike the people of Judah, we must be willing to accept the truth about our sinful behavior and ask God to change us.

Jer. 23:23-24

Although we may hide our behavior from others, we can never hide from God. Yet despite the fact that he knows all about us, he still loves us and wants to grant us healing and grace. Knowing that God is aware of all our thoughts and actions should also help us stand against temptation. We all know that it is easier to fall when we think no one is watching.

Jer. 24:1-10

Jeremiah was given another illustration to help us understand the fate of the Jews taken into captivity. The exiles who followed God would be like good figs, full of nourishment. They would be well treated in exile and would be allowed to return to their homeland. King Zedekiah and those who had led the people falsely would be like bad figs, tasteless and fit only for destruction. God made it clear that the Exile was intended to bring healing to his shattered and sin-scarred people. In the same way, God can use our sufferings to draw us closer to himself and thereby bring spiritual renewal.

Jer. 25:1-14

How impatient we become when the consequences of our failures last for days or weeks, much less years. The Israelites were in exile for 70 years! Many of them finally learned to honor God in the midst of captivity. Since their return from Babylonian captivity, the Jews have never been known to fall into the sin of physical idolatry. It is important to face the consequences of our behavior. One way we can honor God is to accept his discipline and build upon the lessons learned from the sorrow.

Jer. 25:15-38

Sometimes when we are doing our best to serve God, we notice that God allows people to prosper who care nothing about him or his ways. In these verses, we are reminded that God will make all things right in his time. All people and all nations are subject to God, and he rewards those who sincerely seek him (see Hebrews 11:6).

Jer. 26:1-24

It can be difficult to serve God when others mock, question, or tempt us to doubt. The rulers of Judah tried nearly everything to silence Jeremiah, and finally they threatened him with physical death. Though threats can discourage, sometimes they only fuel the fire of our commitment (see Philippians 1:12-14). As we experience God's work in our lives, we need to share the Good News. Some people may laugh at us; others may oppose us. But we should not allow this to stop us. God's deliverance needs to be made known to everyone.

Jer. 26:12-15

Because of Jeremiah's faith, he was able to speak boldly for God even when his life was threatened. Sometimes when we face opposition, we, like Peter, deny that we know God. Anyone can claim to have faith when everything is going well. The depth of our faith is measured when we are under pressure. We should never allow the opinions of others to keep us from sharing what we know about God and his power to deliver us from the bondage of sin.

Jer. 27:1-15

Sometimes God uses the unrighteous to achieve his righteous ends. Nebuchadnezzar was not the kind of king God would normally honor, yet God would use him to discipline his wayward people and lead them to repentance. God had the good of his people in mind, and he saw that his will for them was carried out. When we suffer at the hands of people who care nothing for God, we should know that God is with us through our trials. And if we are listening, we may learn some important things about ourselves and our loving God in the process.

Jer. 27:16-22

The people of Judah chose to listen to the pleasant messages of the false prophets, but this only blinded them to their sins and their inevitable consequences. All of us are impressionable, and even more so when we are going through difficult times. It is important that we build our lives on a foundation of truth rather than on convenient or pleasant messages. God calls us to do some things that are not pleasant, but challenging. He requires that we take an honest look at our lives, admit our sins, and humbly seek forgiveness.

Jer. 29:11

What comfort this verse offers! In our moments of despair, we must remember that God has a plan for his people and we can be sure that it is filled with blessing. We can be sure that our spiritual growth is an important part of God's will for us. Realizing this gives us hope for the future.

Jer. 30:1-24

The people of Judah longed for God's judgment to end just as every child eagerly awaits the end of discipline. Before his wrath was fully upon them, God told his people that they would be renewed and restored. Such a promise unveils the unfailing love God has for his people. His punishment is real, but it is motivated by a desire for healing and true restoration. If we repent and follow God's will for our lives, he will use our chastisement as part of his plan to redeem us.

Jer. 31:1-40

Here God paints a joyful picture of renewal, with all the details of repentance, sorrow, forgiveness, laughter, restoration, and hope. Once again God's people would follow his plan for them, and he would receive their worship and praise. We can experience this kind of restoration too. We start the process by admitting our need for God's healing in our lives. God desires to rebuild his relationship with us no matter how far we may have strayed from him.

Jer. 32:1-5

Even though Jeremiah's prophecies were coming to pass, King Zedekiah still ignored Jeremiah's message. He and his people suffered for their refusal to see the truth. We can also be very good at hiding from the truth. We unconsciously work out schemes to hide our sins and problems from others. We may even hide the truth from ourselves. But we cannot be freed from our sin until we admit that we are sinful. Once we repent and receive God's forgiveness, then we can seek God and follow his plan for our lives.

Jer. 32:6-15

Jeremiah was instructed to buy land even though the Babylonians would soon conquer Judah and the laws of ownership would no longer apply. God used Jeremiah's actions to show that there was still hope. Despite the losses they would soon experience, God's people would once again be returned to the Promised Land. Jeremiah's investment in real estate would someday be of value. We may be facing the devastating consequences of our sins and see little hope for the future. But just as Jeremiah invested in Israel's future, God has invested in our future through the atoning death of Jesus Christ. God greatly values our lives and will work to restore us when we seek him.

Jer. 32:26-39

God wanted his people to accept responsibility for their sins, bad choices, and failures; their suffering in exile would force them to do this. But their story would not end with destruction and exile. God promised that he would deliver his people from captivity, restore them to their homeland, and reconcile them to himself. These promises must have sounded impossible to a people facing the devastation of warfare, famine, and disease. God introduced these verses with a question to answer his people's doubt: "Is anything too hard for me?" As we face problems that are beyond our power to control, we can still cling to the hope that nothing is too hard for God!

Jer. 33:1-26

When everything in life seems as if it's heading for disaster, there is one thing we can count on: God is faithful, and he will see us through. No matter how gray our lives may be, no matter how dark our future may seem, our loving and faithful God can restore our hope and redirect our course.

Jer. 34:1-7

The errant Zedekiah would not die by the sword even though his deeds had caused suffering to many. Instead of death, God promised grace to Zedekiah. In the same way, we deserve punishment for our sinfulness, but God has offered us grace instead. No matter what we have done in the past, there is still hope. If we honestly admit our sins and turn to God, he will be gracious to us.

Jer. 34:8-22

Zedekiah accepted God's grace to him and, in turn, extended grace to others. He called his people to free all their Hebrew slaves, one of God's requirements in the law. While the people initially responded well to Zedekiah's request, they soon went back to their old ways of disobedience. As a result, all the gains they had made toward healing were soon lost. Likewise, spiritual renewal is never a onetime act; it is a long-term process. If we fail to persevere in our spiritual gains, we may lose ground. When God calls us to change, he calls us to change permanently.

Jer. 35:1-19

This chapter contains a fascinating story about a family that faithfully obeyed the direction of its ancestors, choosing to submit to God's plan. God held up this family as an example for the people of Judah. He longed for his people to obey his will, just as the Recabites adhered to the direction of their leaders. Trusting God and obeying his will for our lives is always the best decision.

Jer. 36:1-32

King Jehoiakim refused to listen to Jeremiah's predictions of coming destruction. He preferred the comforting lies of the false prophets to the terrifying truth of God's prophet. He tried to deny his sins and their consequences by ignoring them. Likewise for us, refusing to see our problems can never solve them; it only compounds them. When we are willing to see the truth, admit our sins, and allow God to redirect the course of our lives, we will find hope.

Jer. 38:14-28

Jeremiah gave Zedekiah clear direction from God, but the king was too afraid to follow the prophet's advice. We often fall into the same trap. God gives us clear direction in his Word, but we fail to act on what we know. Sometimes we are afraid of what others will think, or we are afraid of what God is asking; other times we simply don't want to comply, or we just feel too tired to act. Seeking out God's will for us is only part of the task. We must act on our knowledge before it will become effective in our lives.

Jer. 39:1-18

Tragic scenes of murder and destruction filled Jerusalem as Jeremiah's prophecy became a reality. Even when we are expecting the consequences of our sin, the resulting pain is no less difficult to bear. God doesn't enjoy our pain; he longs for us to learn from the devastation and turn to him.

Jer. 40:1-12

For the first time since Jeremiah's prophetic work began, we see peace and harmony in the lives of God's people. The reason was simple. They were following God's directive to serve Nebuchadnezzar. They were obeying God. The same holds true today: The best way is always God's way.

Jer. 40:13-43:13

When turmoil again threatened the security of the people, they chose to take matters back into their own hands. Sometimes the lessons we think we have learned must be learned all over again. When things begin to go well for us, we may forget our need for God and go back to doing things our way. This tendency will lead to a downfall. When we forget God and try to go it alone, there is little hope for spiritual progress.

Jer. 44:1-30

Jeremiah encouraged the remnant in Egypt to heed lessons learned from Judah's recent fall and to turn away from their idolatry. But sadly, their love for God was conditional. Unless God rewarded them in the ways they expected, they would not obey him. God is worthy of our love and obedience whether or not he gives us what we want.

Jer. 46:1-51:64

Words of judgment were pronounced on the nations who had mistreated God's chosen people. Without exception, Egypt, Philistia, Moab, Ammon, Edom, Damascus, Kedar, Hazor, Elam, and Babylon would all experience God's judgment for their wicked and ungodly practices. The wicked never prosper for long, though it may appear that they do for a time. We can rely on God's righteousness to prevail. He disciplines us as a parent does a child, and that discipline is always just and designed for our good.

Jer. 52:1-34

As Jerusalem fell, the people could avoid the destructive consequences of their sin no longer. And memories of Jerusalem's broken walls would bring their past failures back to haunt them again and again. What a burden to carry into exile! As we face the consequences of our past sin and rebellion against God, we may have to face the devastation brought about by our poor choices and selfish actions. At such times, we can turn to God and still have hope for restoration. God loves us as no one else can. He desires a relationship with us more than we can know. The pain of our sin is grievous to us and to God, but God always desires our restoration and wants to give us a chance to begin again.

Lam. 1:1-11

The sins of Judah's people led to their destruction and exile. The once prosperous nation was now only a memory. Its capital city, Jerusalem, lay in ruins. The magnificent Temple built by Solomon had been leveled. The people felt abandoned by their God. The prophet Jeremiah mourned the terrible losses, recognizing that the people's sins had brought them about. Our sin also yields devastating consequences if we allow it to continue unchecked. If we are suffering terrible losses in our lives, we should assess whether or not our sin is at the heart of them. Spiritual renewal requires that we repent of our sin and seek forgiveness from God.

Lam. 1:18-22

After suffering through Jerusalem's devastation and exile, many of the Jews were forced to recognize that they had sinned. Before Jerusalem's destruction, many believed that God would protect Jerusalem and the Temple regardless of how they lived. The destruction of Jerusalem forced them to face reality. They had sinned, and their sins had terrible consequences. Accepting responsibility for our failures is an essential part of the spiritual growth process.

Lam. 2:1-18

God's anger is described in detail in these verses, as are the devastating consequences of that anger. It should be noted that God is always slow to anger and quick to forgive. The Israelites had been warned by God's prophets for centuries before their enemies finally destroyed Jerusalem. We need to remember that God's anger is motivated by his love; it is his last resort as he seeks to get our attention. His purpose is not to destroy but to bring repentance and restoration.

Lam. 2:19-22

Jeremiah called the people to admit their helplessness and turn to God for deliverance. Some of us can relate to the terrible losses the Jews had experienced. And many of us can point to failures in our lives that brought suffering upon us. All of us, no matter what our problems, can recognize how helpless we are and then turn to God for help. As we do this, we set the process of spiritual growth in motion.

Lam. 3:1-20

The prophet's words took a personal turn in this chapter. He was heartbroken and weary, discouraged, and completely undone. He felt alone and helpless and very much afflicted by God. Jeremiah was probably sharing something of his experience as God's prophet among a people who refused to listen. Notice that he spoke frankly with God; he didn't hide his despair or anger. Expressing his feelings was an important part of his healing and restoration (3:21). Sometimes we hide our feelings from God, fearing that he will condemn us for them. God is never offended by our honest anger. Unless we recognize what is truly in our hearts, we cannot deal with it and move on.

Lam. 3:21-26

After Jeremiah shared his pain with God, he reflected upon God's faithfulness. What could possibly save him from his terrible anguish? Nothing, except the compassion of a gracious and loving God. God's love is unfailing, his purposes clear, his righteousness unquestionable. When we come to God with our pain, we can be certain that he is listening. And God, in his mercy and grace, will give us the help we need to overcome our struggles.

Lam. 3:27-39

God disciplines us because he loves us. When we are following a dangerous path, we need to be stopped. Sometimes the only way God can get our attention is by allowing us to suffer the consequences of our sin. Though we may get angry at God for his discipline, it is an opportunity for change. We should honestly examine our lives, asking God to help us see our sins. Then we can repent of them, receive God's forgiveness, and seek to live according to his plan. As we face the pain of discipline, we would be wise to ask Jeremiah's question: "Then why should we, mere humans, complain when we are punished for our sins?" (3:39).

Lam. 4:1-22

In this chapter, Jeremiah took a moment to reflect on the ravaged city of Jerusalem. His memory turned to a time when Jerusalem knew splendor and majesty. Now, even the children were begging for bread. There was a time when no one would have believed that Jerusalem would be destroyed, but the Holy City was now in ruins. We may think that our lives are safe if we give lip service to God. However, if we are controlled by our sins rather than by God, we are in danger. We need to take steps toward spiritual renewal while there is still time.

Lam. 5:1-18

The prophet asked God to remember the sufferings of his people. He took great care to list the sufferings that they had endured. Notice how bold Jeremiah was in his relationship with God. When we feel upset about the situations we face, we often remain silent or complain under our breath. In doing so, we allow our relationship with God to grow distant. Jeremiah went directly to God with his complaints, allowing his relationship with God to be strengthened in the process. God does hear, and he does care. We need to share our feelings and struggles with him.

Lam. 5:19-22

Jeremiah made a final, impassioned plea to God to remember and restore his broken people. And God did restore Israel after the years of Babylonian captivity. Under the leadership of men like Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, God led his people home to rebuild Jerusalem and the Temple. And God still restores his people. Regardless of the intensity of our pain, he is able to bring deep and abiding comfort.

Ezek. 1:1-3

Ezekiel was among the people of Judah exiled to Babylon about ten years prior to Jerusalem's destruction. The people had lost their homeland and their property. Yet in the early chapters of the book (1:1-24:27), the people still clung to a slim measure of hope. Jerusalem and its Temple still stood; complete destruction had not yet fallen. Because of this, many of the people continued in their spiritual blindness, believing that God would not allow their homeland to be destroyed. They refused to admit their sins and the sins of their ancestors. So in the early chapters, the prophet confronted the exiles with their sins and predicted Jerusalem's destruction. Ezekiel's early ministry was one of confrontation.

Ezek. 1:1-3

Having been trained as a priest, Ezekiel would have naturally associated God's presence with the Temple in Jerusalem. But he and his companions had been uprooted from their land—and specifically from their Temple. Many wondered whether or not they would be able to experience God's presence in Babylonia. Through Ezekiel's visions, it became clear that God is not limited by geography. He even revealed himself in godless Babylon! God can reach out to us no matter where we are or what we have done. If we are willing to surrender our lives to him, there is always hope for restoration.

Ezek. 1:4-28

Here we see a magnificent vision! The glory of God was revealed to God's people in captivity. Many of them doubted whether God was even able to be there in a foreign land. Some believed that when they were defeated by Babylon, their God had been defeated by the gods of Babylon. To counteract their confusion, God revealed his glory to his people in Babylon. He helped them to trust him by revealing himself in this way.

Ezek. 2:1-2

Ezekiel was awestruck by God's glory and found himself facedown on the ground, unable to stand in God's presence. When we realize the depth of our sinfulness and begin to understand God's limitless power and holiness, we may also find ourselves falling down before him. But notice that it was God's Spirit who lifted Ezekiel back to his feet. God acted for the stricken prophet and prepared him to receive his message. We, too, need to throw ourselves on the mercy of God. As we surrender our lives to him, he will lift us up and set us on the right road. When we are unable to help ourselves, God will give us the strength we need to take the next step.

Ezek. 2:3-5

Why did God send a message of judgment to a group of people already in exile? At the time of this message, Jerusalem still stood, and a majority of the people still lived in Israel. Ezekiel was among a small group that had been exiled in 597 B.C., and many of these early exiles believed their captivity would be short. Ezekiel was called to make it clear that the consequences of their sins had not yet fully fallen upon them. Jerusalem was yet to be destroyed. The people would need to admit their sins and turn to God in repentance in order to fulfill God's purpose for their exile. Like the exiles, we may refuse to see the truth long after we have begun to feel the destructive consequences of our actions. Instead, we should admit our sin and ask God to forgive us and change us.

Ezek. 2:6

God warned Ezekiel of the great difficulties he would face as he obeyed God's will for his life. But God also made it clear that he would be with Ezekiel as the prophet trusted and obeyed him. When we seek to follow God's will, we can know that God will be with us. That doesn't mean things will be easy for us. In fact, sometimes things get much worse before they get better. Close friends may reject us or ridicule us. Some people may try to stop us. But we don't have to be afraid. God's promise to Ezekiel should give us courage as we follow God's will.

Ezek. 3:1-3

Ezekiel was commanded to eat the scroll that contained God's Word, an act that enabled him to perform his difficult ministry. He was sustained and directed by the words he received from God. As we face trials, God's sustaining words in the Bible can provide us with the direction and strength we need. As we daily read and meditate on God's truths, we will discover God's power helping us to progress successfully in the spiritual growth process.

Ezek. 3:7-8

For most of us, interpersonal confrontation is never comfortable, yet Ezekiel was warned that his ministry would be filled with it. If God's work was to be accomplished, Ezekiel would have to speak directly to God's people and condemn them for their sins. Our times of confrontation are seldom pleasant, but sometimes they are necessary. We need to remember that what we fail to deal with today often becomes a much bigger problem tomorrow.

Ezek. 3:17-21

What is our responsibility to other individuals? Are we responsible to warn them of impending danger? People who are living sinful lives are often blind to the fact that they are in danger of judgment. Ezekiel was commissioned as a guard to warn his people of approaching danger. We should love others enough to warn them before it is too late.

Ezek. 3:24

Ezekiel had just been commissioned with a gigantic ministry. He was overwhelmed by the scope of it. At this point, the Spirit entered him to empower him for the work he had to do. We need God's help to perform the tasks he gives us as well. As we examine our lives, we should rejoice about the small miracles God has worked for us.

Ezek. 4:1-3

Ezekiel made it clear to the Jewish exiles that their troubles were not over. Many were refusing to see the truth about their sin and hoped they would soon return to Jerusalem and the Temple. Ezekiel told them that their beloved homeland would soon be destroyed. He had to help the people recognize their sin before he could help them resolve it. Seeing the truth of our sinfulness is essential to our spiritual growth. Sometimes facing our problems is unpleasant; it certainly was painful for the exiles from Judah. But as hard as it is to face our sins, we must admit them if we want to overcome them.

Ezek. 4:9-11

Bad news is never welcome, but it often comes anyway. In this little drama, Ezekiel illustrated what it would be like for his people during the coming siege. They needed to realize that though things were already bad, the situation was only going to get worse. As long as the people had any reason for hope, they would never admit their sin and trust God for restoration. It is essential that we recognize our need for God and daily surrender to him.

Ezek. 5:8-10

God's judgment is righteous and cannot be avoided. Its inevitability was announced by Ezekiel in no uncertain terms. If we refuse to repent, we also must face God's judgment for our sin. It is a question, not of if, but of when. Sin has terrible and unavoidable consequences. We cannot live a life of sin and hope to slip past the consequences of our rebellion. God certainly does love us and is willing to restore us if we confess our failures to him and ask his forgiveness. But this does not mean we can do whatever we want to. God is just and will discipline his people when they continue to sin.

Ezek. 5:14-15

God judged the people of Israel for their rebellion in order to show the world what happens to those who disobey him. Rebellion against God always has painful consequences. We would be wise to learn from the pain of others rather than repeat their mistakes. If we don't, we may become one more of God's object lessons to show others what happens to those who rebel against God and his ways.

Ezek. 6:8-10

God rebuked his people for their sins and assured them of coming judgment, but he did not leave them in despair. He gave them hope with the promise that God would spare a remnant who would eventually rebuild the nation. In order to rebuild, it was necessary for God to first tear down. This pattern has been repeated many times in the lives of people who have seen destruction but then have found new hope as they turned to God. No matter how great our present suffering, there is always hope for the future. We can begin by viewing our pain as a tool God can use in our spiritual growth. Then we must turn to God for the forgiveness and healing he promises.

Ezek. 6:14

"Then they will know that I am the LORD." The people of Israel needed to learn this lesson if they hoped to recover from their punishment in exile. This is an important lesson for all of us to learn. Each of us must discover who God is and what he requires if we hope to know true spiritual renewal and transformation. When we give God control of our lives and follow his will, we establish ourselves on a firm foundation.

Ezek. 7:5-11

Until we recognize where we are, we can never take measures to get to where we should be. The people of Israel refused to admit their sinful past and were therefore unable to receive God's forgiveness, healing, and direction. God forced them to face the sinfulness of their lives by bringing judgment. We would be wise to admit our problems and humbly turn to God for help before we are forced to do so by sin's painful consequences.

Ezek. 7:19

The people of Israel couldn't use their wealth to escape the coming judgment. In fact, all of their human resources proved inadequate for the task. Only God was able to deliver them. But since they refused to admit and forsake their sin, there was no hope of escape from the judgment to come. When it comes to dealing with our sinful nature, human resources alone are of no avail. God is our only hope. If we depend on any other resource, we are headed for sure destruction.

Ezek. 8:1-17

The religious activities of Israel's leaders were revealed to Ezekiel in a vision. They were involved in idolatrous pagan practices and had the gall to believe that God didn't see what they were doing or perhaps had gone away. This misconception about God is still prevalent today. Either we believe we can actually hide our sins from God, or we believe that he is somehow looking the other way. Such a belief is clearly false and extremely dangerous, leading to painful consequences. God is deeply concerned about our sinful behavior. The terrible fate of Israel's leaders should serve as a warning to us.

Ezek. 9:1-6

In Ezekiel's day many in Israel believed they had nothing to fear because they enjoyed favored status as God's people. They thought that God's presence in the Jerusalem Temple guaranteed their safety. From these verses, however, it is clear that God was not blind to their sin. He was concerned about the people's blatant disregard for his laws and would make sure the offenders were punished. Sin always has consequences. God will not stand idly by and allow people to rebel against him forever. We would be wise to listen and take appropriate action before it is too late.

Ezek. 10:1-22

In these chapters (Ezekiel 9-11) we see God's glory departing from the Temple. It moved to the entrance (9:3), then to the south side of the Temple (10:3), to the east gate (10:18-19; 11:1), and finally to the mountain east of the Temple (11:23). God was leaving Jerusalem. Many of the Jews believed they were immune to enemy attack because of God's presence among them. This attitude made them deaf to Ezekiel's condemnation of their sin and the predicted consequence of Jerusalem's destruction. When God left the Temple, however, the people could no longer claim his divine presence. Their sin was real, and God's judgment was near.

Ezek. 11:16-21

God had a purpose behind the devastation he brought upon his people. His judgment was necessary so that they would allow him to change their hearts. We are often as stubborn as the people of Israel. God may have to allow us to suffer a devastating setback to get our attention. As we face suffering, we should be encouraged by the future God has planned for his people. God would use the Exile to transform them into people who loved him. Ezekiel's prophecy can come true for us, too. As we admit our failures and sins to God, he will bring us forgiveness and healing through Jesus Christ. We, too, can become God's own people.

Ezek. 12:1-3

The people referred to in these verses are totally unaware of their spiritual condition. When people are spiritually blind, they cannot see just because someone tells them to open their eyes. We all need to humbly ask God to give us eyes to see the sins in our own lives so that we can confess them and forsake them.

Ezek. 12:18-20

In these verses Ezekiel prophesied, through symbolic actions, the coming destruction of Jerusalem. Since negative people warn us continually that "the worst is yet to come," we usually discount their dire predictions. Ezekiel's harsh predictions, however, were driven by God's truth, not Ezekiel's gloomy disposition. Again and again, he attempted to turn the people's focus from hope in Jerusalem's survival to hope in God—the only means to their ultimate deliverance. In order to escape the troubles ahead, the people would have to face the truth about their sin and act quickly to make some changes.

Ezek. 13:2-3

We all face the danger of following leaders who are ungodly. The people of Israel faced terrible destruction, and God's truth was the only real pathway to their deliverance. They were surrounded by false prophets who claimed the people had nothing to worry about—a message the people were only too glad to believe. These prophets offered the people an easy way out when an easy way out didn't exist. We need to be careful that we don't fall into the same trap. If someone claims that we can just ignore our sins, we need to steer clear. God calls us to examine our lives in light of his Word. If we see areas that are not in keeping with God's commands, we must face our sin and its consequences and take responsibility for them.

Ezek. 13:10

There may be significant problems in our lives, but claiming everything is all right will never solve them. In fact, refusing to see the truth will only make things worse. It is unwise to proclaim peace when there is no peace. If problems exist, we need to admit them and respond with the appropriate action. Many of us tend to look the other way, pretending everything is all right. This will only lead us into deeper slavery and eventual destruction.

Ezek. 14:1-5

Very often a third party is involved in the breakdown of important relationships. For example, a third party may come between a husband and wife. Our relationship with God tends to suffer in a similar way, and the third party is identified here as an idol. We should allow nothing to come between us and God.

Ezek. 14:21-23

Even Ezekiel seems to have struggled with the impending destruction of Jerusalem. He couldn't understand how God could destroy his Holy City. In these verses, Ezekiel was told that God's judgments would come true, just as he had predicted. He was also assured that the judgments on Jerusalem were completely just. We can trust God; his actions are always right. Even when we don't fully understand the circumstances we face, we can trust God to do the right thing.

Ezek. 16:6-15

In this passage, Ezekiel compared God's people to a young, helpless girl who was nurtured by God to become queenlike in power and beauty. God took unruly Israel from Egyptian slavery and strengthened her until she became one of the great nations of the ancient world. He made a covenant with her, similar in many respects to a marriage covenant. But rather than being devoted to her husband and provider, the wife (Israel) became far more interested in prostituting herself to others. As we progress spiritually, we may not feel as if we need God as much as we did initially. Although he is the one who freed us from our past and strengthened us, we may drift away from a love relationship with him. We must realize that our relationship with God is key to spiritual vitality.

Ezek. 16:59-63

Even though Israel had failed God and her punishment was certain, God's promises of blessing would still be fulfilled in the end. The judgment Israel would suffer was designed to help her redirect her course. The same is true for us. As we face the consequences of our failures, we should not blame God. We must face the truth that we have failed him and others. But no matter how great our failures, we can hope for future restoration. If we are willing to listen and respond humbly to our sufferings, God will use them to redirect the course of our lives.

Ezek. 17:1-24

This chapter contains a review of Judah's final years. It mentions the times when Jews were exiled to Babylon prior to Jerusalem's destruction and predicts the ultimate destruction of Jerusalem. The exiles who heard Ezekiel's words had been among those exiled during the events he described, but they still hoped that his final prediction—Jerusalem's destruction—would not take place. They still refused to admit the truth about their sin. We often resist the truth about ourselves just as the people of Judah did. This is never a solution to our problems. Instead, we should humbly repent of our sins and seek forgiveness.

Ezek. 18:2-4

Here we are reminded that we are held accountable by God for our actions. Many of us have suffered innocently at the hands of others. As we become aware of this, it is tempting to blame them for our problems. As much as others may have hurt us, it is never valid to blame them for the mistakes we have made. We cannot change the behavior of others, and we must forgive them and put the pain of these experiences behind us. Spiritual renewal requires that we accept responsibility for our own failures and do what we can to make restitution with those we have harmed.

Ezek. 18:30-32

Some say that God is too good to punish anyone. Certainly, it is true that God takes no pleasure in the death of the wicked. But he also created us with a free will to choose or reject him. If people should choose not to turn from their sins, they choose to separate themselves from God. Let us heed the Lord's passionate call to turn from our sins and live.

Ezek. 20:1-8

God's plan is defined by him alone. He sets up the terms; we don't. God is not a power we can just use for our benefit. If we want to come to God, we must come on his terms and enter his Kingdom his way. As the one who created us and loves us, God knows how we ought to live. If we try to do things our own way, we are only asking for trouble. The experience of the people of Judah in these verses should make these truths clear.

Ezek. 20:40-42

Here Ezekiel gave God's exiled people a precious promise for the future. After a period of suffering, the people would repent and experience God's cleansing; then they would also be restored to the Promised Land. But, of even greater significance, they would be restored to God's fellowship. Doing things God's way—admitting our sin and seeking his plan for us—is the beginning of our spiritual growth and the foundation of our hope for the future.

Ezek. 21:3

These ominous words are addressed to the nation of Israel. Notice that God would punish the entire nation, including the few good people. Our sin always has consequences, and very often those consequences are experienced by the innocent people around us. Our mistakes and sinful ways cause undeserved pain for spouses, children, coworkers, and friends. This should motivate us to seek changes in our lives and make restitution to those we have hurt.

Ezek. 22:2-4

In contemporary culture the reality of personal guilt is often rejected as an illusion. There are programs that seek to ignore the guilt we feel rather than deal with the sin that lies at its root. This is not to say that false guilt does not exist. Yet any teaching or philosophy that denies the existence of sin and tries to find excuses rather than remedies is not in agreement with God's Word. God has provided salvation from the guilt of sin. There is no reason for us to hide or ignore it. We must choose God's remedy, which starts by recognizing our guilt, confessing our sins, and depending on God for true forgiveness.

Ezek. 23:1-49

Throughout this chapter Ezekiel compared the kingdoms of Judah and Israel to two adulterous sisters. Despite all the blessings God had given them, they sold themselves to idols and were thus unfaithful to God. God's people were guilty of spiritual prostitution. We are guilty of this same sin when we allow anything in our lives to take God's place. Whatever idols we have, they must be removed if we hope to maintain a relationship with the true God.

Ezek. 24:1-14

In these verses God predicted the destruction of Jerusalem. God had delayed his punishment for many years, giving his people ample opportunity to repent and seek forgiveness. His people had refused, however, and the time of their final destruction had arrived. God gives us numerous opportunities to admit our failures and ask his forgiveness before he allows our destruction. We would be wise to listen before it is too late.

Ezek. 24:25-27

These verses conclude the long section of judgment (1:1-24:27). The people already in Babylon would soon hear news of Jerusalem's destruction. They would discover that Ezekiel's predictions had been true. This would confirm the truth of all his words, including his condemnation of the people for their sin. Their response could only be one of mourning and repentance. They would have to humble themselves before God, their Judge and their Redeemer. From this point on, Ezekiel is called upon to bring a message of hope to the exiled Jews. God's judgment was not the end. He began by showing his people that the foreign nations would also be judged for their sin (25:1–32:32). Then he also promised the restoration of his scattered people to the land of Israel (33:1–39:29).

Ezek. 26:1-21

This entire chapter focuses on God's judgment of Tyre. In the ancient world, Tyre was considered to be impregnable. The main part of the city was surrounded by water and therefore was difficult to attack. Tyre's ships could keep her continually supplied with food and water. Her people believed that no one could conquer her and that her future was secure. But in this chapter we see that her destruction was assured. In a similar way, we may think we are strong enough to stand on our own and that we don't need God. But this is not true. Ultimately we will all have to recognize our dependence on God.

Ezek. 27:3-25

Tyre congratulated herself on her beauty (27:3-7), her military might (27:8-11), and her wealth (27:12-25), but none of these would be able to avert the disaster she would soon face. When we are gifted with intelligence, beauty, strength, or wealth, it is easy to deceive ourselves into thinking that we don't need God's help. If we have this attitude, however, our strengths are only liabilities. We must never let them blind us to our weaknesses and lead us away from dependence on God.

Ezek. 27:26-36

Tyre had achieved success of all kinds—except the kind that really mattered. She believed that she was sufficiently able to handle any crisis on her own. This city was able to stand against invaders for hundreds of years, but in the end she was destroyed. No matter how successful we may seem, we are headed for destruction if our lives are not in line with God’s will for us.

Ezek. 28:2-10

The first lie ever told was Satan’s promise to Eve, “You will be like God” (Genesis 3:5). It seems that the prince of Tyre believed that old, recycled falsehood. And he was not the last person to believe that lie. If we choose to live according to our sinful natures and the desires of our flesh, we are doing the same thing. Doing things our way sets us up as our own rulers, acting as if we are our own gods. We would be wise to surrender the throne of our lives to the only one who can give us lives filled with meaning and freedom—God himself.

Ezek. 28:25-26

By every human measure, the day of Israel’s success was in the past. The elite of Israel’s population had been in forced captivity for years. Jerusalem itself was on the verge of destruction. But God always controls the final outcome; no matter how far a nation or a person falls, God can pick up such a nation or individual and bring victory when defeat seems a certainty.

Ezek. 29:2-16

When Israel was in deep trouble, her leaders often turned to Egypt for help. Their dependence on Egypt, however, was always in vain. Egypt lacked the power necessary to bring true and permanent deliverance. We often make the same mistake. When we face terrible problems, we may turn to strategies that provide only temporary respite or fail altogether. These can provide temporary distraction or relief, but they do not offer real solutions to our problems. We must be careful to deal with our problems with the only one able to bring true deliverance—God.

Ezek. 29:18-21

God used King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon as an agent to achieve his sovereign will. It may be hard for us to accept the fact that God could use an evil dictator as a part of his plan. Nebuchadnezzar was just such a man: He disposed of people and treaties without giving a thought to the consequences. He even considered himself a god. Sometimes God may use hostile forces to accomplish his purposes in our lives. We may wonder how God could allow such a thing. But we can be sure that if we trust in God, we will receive his best in the end.

Ezek. 30:21-26

God is sovereign in international affairs. And if God can work his will among hostile superpowers, how simple it must be for him to do so in willing individuals! God wants us to grow spiritually, and if we are willing to submit to his will for us, he will accomplish just that. God is both willing and able to work miraculous changes in this world. If we surrender our lives to God, we can become a part of his plan for the redemption of his people and his creation.

Ezek. 31:2-9

In Ezekiel's day, Egypt's pharaoh was second only to Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in power and greatness. The pharaoh was reminded here that the great empire of Assyria, once the greatest power on earth, had already been destroyed by Babylon. Pharaoh needed to learn that no one, even a nation as powerful as Egypt, could stand against God's ultimate plan for the world. God has created all people and things to live in a close relationship with himself. Only as we conform our lives to God's will can we find hope and blessing. If we refuse to surrender to God, we will miss the blessings he longs to give us and, instead, face painful consequences.

Ezek. 31:18

God's assessment of greatness was certainly different from Pharaoh's. Pharaoh thought of himself as possessing great strength and glory. But as magnificent and stalwart as Pharaoh and his nation were, they would be cut down and destroyed. No one can reject God and hope to succeed for long. Pride always comes before a fall. As soon as we begin to think we can do things our way and in our own power, we are headed for a fall.

Ezek. 32:2-8

It is always dangerous when we begin to think of ourselves more highly than we ought. Pharaoh thought of himself as a lion spreading fear among all who saw him. But the following verses reveal just how vulnerable to capture and death he actually was. If we begin to think we can go it alone, we are headed for trouble. Not one of us is strong enough to endure the pull of our sinful nature without God's help. If we think we can stand alone, we will reject the help and support offered by God and others. We need to be reminded that we need God's power continually.

Ezek. 32:9-10

There is something terrifying about the fall of a person or nation of great power. Pharaoh had been a figure of great domination; his authority had been almost absolute. When he was judged, the world was horrified and filled with fear. We would be wise to learn from the failures of others. People with far greater strength than ours have been destroyed when they rebelled against God. We must not rebel against God and think that we are strong enough to stand against him and his purposes. No one is strong enough to resist God and win.

Ezek. 33:2-6

The solemn responsibility of a watchman in an Old Testament town was to warn the citizens of impending danger. If the watchman was unfaithful, the result would be the tragic loss of life and property. We are watchmen for others as well. Like Ezekiel, we should be careful not to lead others astray or fail to warn them of the dangers of disobeying God.

Ezek. 33:10-16

Even as we suffer terrible consequences for our failures and sins, we can be sure that if we repent, God will forgive us. God does not punish us out of anger or vengeance; he punishes us because he loves us. He doesn't desire our destruction; he desires our spiritual renewal and restoration.

Ezek. 33:33

There is an inescapable certainty to God's pronouncements. When God's Word is faithfully proclaimed, as it was by Ezekiel, then the message is vindicated when the declarations come to pass. When God says something—anything—we can be assured that his Word will be fulfilled. God declares much of his will for us in the Scriptures. We would be wise to listen to what he has to say and act on it. Doing anything else will lead to painful consequences.

Ezek. 34:2-10

Leaders are accountable to God for their actions. The spiritual leaders of Israel were like evil shepherds who could not be trusted to care for their flocks and would therefore be judged. They were opportunists who took advantage of the people under their care. As we grow spiritually, we must be aware of our leadership responsibilities. All of us touch the lives of others in some way. We must be careful to lead according to God's Word. If we don't, we will suffer great consequences and cause suffering to many. If we have already failed in this area, we need to take immediate action to correct any damage we have done.

Ezek. 34:11-16

Even though Israel was now a conquered nation and Jerusalem had fallen, and even though the deportation of the population had been accomplished and the people had no real hope for the future—God had given his people a promise that could be counted on. No matter what our circumstances, we can be assured of God’s constant care and concern for us.

Ezek. 34:23-24

God had promised David that he would provide someone from David’s family line who would rule his people in peace; this promise would eventually be fulfilled in the person of Jesus the Messiah. He is the true Shepherd—the Good Shepherd. We can trust him for guidance and sustenance through every situation in our lives. He promises to give us help and power to overcome the areas in our lives that are drawing us downward toward destruction.

Ezek. 36:17-24

God promised the people of Israel that their nation would be restored, but not because the people deserved it. They really deserved destruction. God had promised to reveal himself to the world through the nation of Israel, and God’s will would not be thwarted. He would deliver his people from exile and rebuild his nation so that the whole world would benefit. Through this tiny nation, the Messiah would be born to change the face of history and to transform all who give their lives to him. We would be wise to take advantage of God's gift of forgiveness and restoration through Jesus the Messiah.

Ezek. 36:25-27

How can any individual please God? We have experienced how helpless we are against sin, but these verses should fill us with hope. As we respond to God's gracious provision of forgiveness and restoration, God promises to give us a new heart and fill us with his Spirit so that we can obey him.

Ezek. 36:33

Before the nation of Israel could be rebuilt, it had to be cleansed of sin. Sin separates us from God and leads to destructive consequences. Let us receive God's gracious forgiveness and cleansing, and then we can experience the power God offers.

Ezek. 37:1-10

Ezekiel was shown an old battlefield filled with dry bones. There was no life in them whatsoever—no possibility of life for the people to whom the bones had once belonged. It would be difficult to find a better illustration of our complete lack of power apart from God! The bones were helpless to act for themselves. But as the dry bones were a picture of complete need, so God's Spirit provided a picture of complete supply. When God entered the picture, defeat became uncompromising victory. Alone, our lives may look as if there is no hope for the future, but when God restores us, people will be amazed at the new life they see.

Ezek. 37:24-28

God promised that one day he would make his home among his people. This took place as God became a man in the person of Jesus Christ. As we study the life of Jesus on earth, we can discover what God is really like—who he really is. And God still lives among us in the person of his Spirit. Though our world is far from perfect because of sin, we can all look forward to the day when Jesus Christ, the true Shepherd, will return to guide his people in righteousness and truth.

Ezek. 38:17-23

In these verses God declared his power in no uncertain terms. The greatest powers of military and political strength that the world could offer would array themselves against God and his people. But when God intervened, the unthinkable would happen—even the greatest enemies would be destroyed by his powerful hand. God is powerful enough to handle any struggles we may face. All we need to do is trust and obey him.

Ezek. 39:1-6

God was against Gog, but it must be remembered that Gog was against God first. Every creature with the power of choice either chooses to obey God or stands against him. Gog had arrayed his mighty forces against God's people; he had left God and his divine will out of his thinking altogether. The destruction of Gog promised by Ezekiel reveals the consequences of choosing to stand against God and his will.

As we see these terrible consequences, we should be encouraged to admit our own failures and redirect our course to follow God's will for our lives.

Ezek. 39:25-29

Without God, the future of Israel was dark and hopeless. But regardless of their present suffering, they could hope in the future, knowing that God still had great things in store for them. The Lord is a God of restoration. It is part of his plan for creation that the power of sin be broken and the destruction of sin be reversed. God restored his people so his promise of a Savior—Jesus the Messiah—could be fulfilled. And through this Savior, the restoration of our lives is possible, no matter how great our past sin or how terrible our present circumstances.

Ezek. 40:1–48:35

The final chapters of Ezekiel contain a description of a new Temple in a new Jerusalem. Through the restoration of the Temple, we see that proper worship is also being restored. In every age, God considers worship one of the most important activities of life. Life itself ought to be an expression of worship. Our hope for future restoration must involve a restoration of our relationship with God and our proper worship of him. Without a healthy relationship with God, spiritual transformation is not possible.

Ezek. 40:1

Notice that God spoke to his people through Ezekiel while they were still in exile. God is never limited by where we are or what we have done. Ezekiel discovered that even under the adverse circumstances of exile, God was still reaching out to communicate with his people. We may feel that the terrible circumstances we face because of our foolish choices make us ineligible for God's help. We may feel that we have sinned too deeply to be forgiven by God. But even in times of "exile," God is still reaching out to us. He desires to help us; all we need to do is admit that we need him.

Ezek. 43:1-5

Ezekiel had seen the glory of God leave the Jerusalem Temple early in his prophetic career (10:1-11:23). Here he had the joy of seeing it return. As a descendant of priests, Ezekiel must have been greatly encouraged by this vision. It signaled God's renewed presence among his people and hope for their restoration. God did restore his people and then came to live among us in the person of his Son, Jesus the Messiah. And through a relationship with him, we are assured of God's presence with us as we undergo the process of spiritual growth. God promises us his transforming presence through his Spirit, giving us hope as we make the changes necessary to conform to his will for our lives.

Ezek. 44:6-7

Refusing to obey God's will always has painful consequences. God had clearly revealed his will for his people, but they had ignored the guidelines God had graciously provided. They had rebelled against the plan God had laid out for them. God has clearly revealed much of his will for us in the Bible. It is our responsibility to follow it. Since there are consequences for failing to obey God's will, we would be wise to diligently seek God's will for our lives and then do whatever is necessary to carry it out.

Ezek. 46:1-24

This chapter contains a long list of regulations relating to the giving of sacrifices. Sacrifices were a means of paying for the sins of the people and reestablishing the people's relationship with God. Slaughtering animals for our sins may seem terribly barbaric, and we may wonder why God chose to do things this way. Our negative reactions to this practice, however, simply underscore the awfulness of sin. Yet it is important to note that God provided a way to pay for his people's sins without bringing their complete destruction. He only asked them to admit their sins, receive his forgiveness, and redirect the course of their lives to obey him. God expects the same of us today. Since Ezekiel's day, God has provided the ultimate sacrifice, Jesus Christ, to pay for our sins and provide a means for our redemption. All we have to do is accept the gift he has provided.

Ezek. 47:1-12

A river of healing is described in these verses. It will flow throughout the land, restoring the arid landscape with vitality and life. The land had been destroyed by the foolish choices of God's people, but God will restore what they had destroyed. This is our hope in the coming of Jesus the Messiah. During his first coming, Jesus made our personal restoration possible through the power of his miraculous resurrection. We now look forward to his second coming, when God will restore all of creation. The sin of humanity has perverted God's perfect plan for the world. In the end, however, God's plan of peace and prosperity on earth will come to pass. God will restore us and the universe we live in from the devastating consequences of sin.

Dan. 1:1-6

Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah faced troubled times: Their city was conquered, and they were captured by the enemy and marched across the desert to Babylon. Life must have seemed over for the four young men. But then their fortune changed. After a three-year training period they were chosen to be Nebuchadnezzar's counselors. No one knows what the future holds. Our current bad times may be temporary; God's blessings may be just around the corner. God may even use our hard times to prepare us for greater service for him.

Dan. 1:7-16

When people try to squeeze us into their mold and get us to compromise our values, we need to remain strong and set godly boundaries on our behavior, just as Daniel did by not eating food contrary to God's laws. With proper boundaries, we will be less tempted to give in to compromise and will foster our spiritual growth.

Dan. 1:17-21

When we use the talents and abilities given to us by God, others will notice. King Nebuchadnezzar saw that Daniel and his friends had more insight than any of his other magicians or enchanters. The wisdom of these young men is what set them apart from the other advisers and allowed them to triumph.

Dan. 2:16-23

Here we are given a model for action when we are in trouble.

Daniel needed help, so he gathered his godly friends and prayed. Then, after their request was granted, Daniel praised God for his blessings. Praying with others is essential to our spiritual growth. It is easy to forget that God is in control and that we are not left to accomplish everything on our own. Thanking God when he grants our requests will also help us maintain a proper focus on him.

Dan. 2:26-28

Daniel wisely gave God the credit for the discovery of the dream. He could easily have told Nebuchadnezzar that he knew the dream, thereby elevating himself above all the counselors. But he acknowledged God and God's power. God works in our lives too, bringing new life where once there was pain and despair. Have we given God the credit for our spiritual growth, or have we told others we did it on our own? We need to follow Daniel's example and give credit where credit is due.

Dan. 2:29-45

In this vision, a prominent theme of the book of Daniel is introduced: God is ultimately in control, even over seemingly unshakable human power. This passage provides the framework for interpreting all the prophetic visions of Daniel, but it also tells us that God will ultimately defeat those who are against his people. He will establish his Kingdom for those who follow him.

Dan. 3:1-30

We all face situations in which we are tempted to do things that are wrong. Sometimes there are consequences for not going along with the crowd. This fact is clearly illustrated in the story of the fiery furnace. The penalty for not going with the flow was death by burning. When we stand for what is right and refuse to go along with the crowd, we may suffer persecution, but we must stand firm. In the end, God will reward those who remain faithful to him.

Dan. 3:16-23

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego put their faith on the line by not giving in to Nebuchadnezzar's threats. They risked their lives in order to obey what they knew to be God's will for them. To die was better than to live with the guilt and shame of disobeying God. Like these three friends, we must determine to stand up against our oppressors in order to follow God.

Dan. 3:24-30

Nebuchadnezzar was amazed at what he saw and immediately worshiped the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. If the Hebrews had not stood up to Nebuchadnezzar, he never would have seen the great power of God. The best way we can tell someone about God is to demonstrate his power in our lives. This will encourage them to seek him and surrender their lives to him.

Dan. 4:18-27

Nebuchadnezzar's dream was interpreted by Daniel (Belteshazzar) through the wisdom given by God's Spirit (4:18). The king's tragic breakdown would soon take place unless he made some drastic changes in his life. Similarly, we may be heading for a humbling experience if we continue to think we are in control of our lives. Our spiritual growth is dependent on our trust in God and our obedience to his will for our lives.

Dan. 4:28-37

Even after a warning, Nebuchadnezzar did not change his lifestyle and give God the credit for his power. The result was seven years of humiliating insanity. But God restored Nebuchadnezzar to the throne when he turned toward heaven for deliverance. We should notice that the king praised and honored God; he didn't curse him for his many years of madness. When we experience a painful setback, we need to consider what we can learn from our trials and how we can honor God in them.

Dan. 5:18-31

Belshazzar had not learned from the experiences of his ancestor Nebuchadnezzar, and now his time had run out. He was now going to reap the consequences of his pride and arrogance: He would die before the night was over. It is a sad thing to watch someone receiving the consequences of his or her sin. We must make certain that we repent and seek forgiveness so that we will not encounter the same sad fate.

Dan. 6:1-4

Spiritual health doesn't guarantee popularity or acceptance by those around us. Such wholeness, especially if it is matched with ability, can be quite intimidating to those who do not have it. There will always be those who are threatened by our spiritual progress, and they may try to impede our growth. Nevertheless, we must set our minds and hearts to follow God and refuse to be swayed by intimidation.

Dan. 6:6-10

Daniel chose to ignore the manipulation of his rivals and continued to worship God, who had cared for Daniel throughout his life. Fortunately prayer doesn't earn the death penalty for most of us, but there are other drawbacks to following God. We can be ridiculed or discriminated against by people who feel threatened by our faith. No matter what opposition we face, however, God is still worthy of our trust. We must stay true to him despite the earthly consequences.

Dan. 6:11-17

We need to always consider how our actions will affect others. The king satisfied his ego but failed to realize the impact of this new law. As a result, Daniel, who was obviously close to the king, was sentenced to die. Before doing anything, it is important to evaluate the significance of our decisions. Will anyone be hurt? Is it morally wrong? Will we regret the outcome? If any of these questions can be answered yes, we need to consider another plan of action.

Dan. 6:19-23

God rescued Daniel from what seemed a sure death. The lions didn't harm Daniel, just as the fire hadn't touched Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (see 3:1-30). It is clear that God watches over those who obey his will. He is able to save us when no one else can. Even when we are in situations with apparently no hope of escape, God is still able to deliver us. We need to continue to trust in him.

Dan. 6:25-27

Not only will we benefit from God's work in our lives, but others will also reap a profit. Darius was able to see the awesome power of Daniel's God, and he was also relieved of the guilt he felt for sentencing Daniel to death. As we are patient in our sufferings, we may find that God is using us to reach others. Those who mistreat or persecute us, whether intentionally or unintentionally, need God as much as we do. When God reveals himself to them through us, their lives will change, and they will want to tell others of the power of God.

Dan. 8:5-8, 21

Although not the most prominent figure in this vision of the future, Alexander the Great, the "first king" of Greece (8:21), presents an important lesson. While oppressors may seem to have great power and be invincible, God is in control of their fate. All who are in authority have been allowed by God to rise to power (see John 19:10-11). When God deems the time right, he will cause such rulers to stand or fall.

Dan. 8:9-14, 25

This prophetic description of the reign of an evil leader carries with it an important point. This leader was allowed to get away with his atrocities for a period of time, but not indefinitely. The days of his domination were numbered (8:25), and the Temple worship would begin again (8:14). Likewise, the mistreatment we suffer is being watched by God, and he has set a limit on the amount of pain we will have to endure. Whenever we suffer, we can pray to God for comfort and guidance, asking for help to get through our anguish until we are set free.

Dan. 9:1-3

Daniel and his friends were suffering as the consequence of the sins of others. Because of his nation's sins, Daniel and other "innocent bystanders" were forced into captivity. We all suffer from the injustices of others. When this happens, we would do well to follow Daniel's example. He did not waste his time or energy merely blaming others and complaining about the injustice. He confessed the sins of his people and asked God for comfort and deliverance.

Dan. 9:7-9

Everyone is guilty of sinning against God, and we all need redemption from the eternal consequences of sin—death (see Romans 6:23). Even the godly prophet Daniel admitted his sins, asked for God's mercy, and surrendered his life to God. We need to do the same thing with regard to the sins that entangle us, and their consequences. Twenty-five centuries have not changed the way God works in people's lives.

Dan. 9:10-14

Refusal to see the truth about our own sins has the power to blind us to the dangers about us. Daniel said that the people of Israel had suffered all the curses that God had promised to send for their disobedience. Yet even after all their suffering, the people still wouldn't do right and follow God. Had the Israelites been spiritually honest, they could have been aware of their first mistakes and corrected the situation immediately. They could have avoided much of their severe punishment. We must be careful not to resist the truth that we are sinful. This can lead to spiritual blindness that endangers our lives. We need to be honest with ourselves and God and ask him to help us overcome our sins.

Dan. 9:20-27

Though Daniel was worried about his people and country, God had a plan for their restoration. The road would not be easy, and Israel would have many years of pain ahead, but God's time to judge his enemies would come. God hasn't abandoned us in our hour of need. He is there, waiting to work his plan for our lives. We are to follow God and trust in his timing for our complete redemption.

Dan. 10:11, 19

God twice assured Daniel that he was "very precious to God." And each one of us is also precious to God. When we realize that the Creator of the universe finds value in us, we will then understand that our identity isn't wrapped up in our jobs, possessions, or power. When we truly believe this, we can stop our attempts to gain our sense of worth from what we do or what we have and begin to feel good about ourselves because God loves us.

Dan. 11:12

The king of Egypt's success would be short lived, probably as God's judgment against his pride. If there is anyone God refuses to help, it is the proud person who thinks he should be credited with all his successes. God is the one effecting changes within us. When we begin to believe that we have made progress because of our own work, we only distance ourselves from God and lose ground. Remembering to thank God for the work he is doing in us and giving him the credit he deserves will help us to keep depending on him.

Dan. 11:35

Undergoing suffering in our spiritual walk can serve to refine and strengthen us. We can look at those times when we stumble as a weight lifter looks at weights. If they weren't hard to lift, he wouldn't gain any muscle. At first we may stumble a lot, but as we struggle, we grow stronger. Eventually we will be able to resist greater and greater temptations where we once would have fallen.

Dan. 12:1-4, 13

When we set out to seek God and surrender to him, we would probably like to believe that life will never again be painful. That, however, is not guaranteed. There will be times of trouble for God's people (see Acts 14:22), and we may never have all the answers to our questions, but we have the assurance that we will be with God and will be at peace in the end.

Dan. 12:10

The suffering that may have to be endured by those who have surrendered their lives to God can have a very positive effect. These difficult trials will teach us lessons to help us in the future. But for those who deny the truth, there will be no learning and no purification. Through our openness, honesty, and self-examination, God can use our trials and suffering to purify our faith and make us the people he wants us to be.

Hos. 1:2-3

God told Hosea to marry an unfaithful woman. Their relationship would symbolize God's relationship with Israel, who prostituted herself to the false gods of her pagan neighbors. Using this analogy, it becomes easy to see how it must hurt God when we forsake him and seek after other "gods" in our attempts to satisfy our desires. These other loves will only hurt us in the end. Instead, let us be faithful to God, the one who truly loves us.

Hos. 1:6

At first glance, God seemed to be saying that his relationship with Israel had ended. But naming the daughter Lo-ruhamah ("Not loved") indicated a change for the nation of Israel. God had shown mercy in the past despite Israel's unrepentant condition. Now genuine love demanded that he withdraw that mercy to allow her to suffer the consequences of her actions, bringing her to abandon all of her false hopes. Allowing others to experience the consequences of their wrong actions is often hard for us to do. But failing to speak the truth doesn't help those who need to learn the lessons of responsibility and accountability. Often the best thing we can do for people who keep falling is to refuse to catch them. We may need to let them fall so they can learn from the painful consequences of their actions and seek God.

Hos. 1:7-2:1

Hosea was told to name his third child Lo-ammi, which means “Not my people.” In essence, God was granting Israel a divorce because of her unfaithfulness. God’s declaration of rejection, however, was only to be a temporary condition. Lo-ammi was to be renamed Ammi, which means “My people.” The troubles of punishment and exile that were soon to arrive would someday be replaced with complete restoration and healing. That is the hope for all who are following God’s path. Today’s pain and suffering are here only for a season, “but joy comes with the morning” (Psalm 30:5).

Hos. 2:5-13

Our divergence to seek spiritual fulfillment apart from God is like Israel’s worship of foreign gods, because we are searching for the joy and fulfillment that only God can give. And while God is patient with us, if we refuse to devote our lives to him, he will often allow us to bear the consequences of straying from him. But we can always turn back to him. His love is always there for us, always pursuing us. We can have hope because God loves us; we don’t have to die in our sins. If we turn to God, we will be redeemed.

Hos. 2:21-22

God is in control of nature, and nature praises him. Since God can control the rain and the growth of plants, he certainly can control the events of our lives. We, too, like nature, must proclaim the greatness of God, because without his help, we would still be in the parched desert wilderness. As we sing out our story of deliverance, we will not only encourage others to persevere, but we will also find renewed strength for ourselves.

Hos. 3:1-2

Hosea was able to heal his broken family by redeeming, or buying back, his wife, Gomer. His extraordinary love is highlighted by this unexpected action. She did not come back to him, so he went to her and paid money to get her back. This symbolizes God's love, which is even more extraordinary. While we were still sinners, God sent his Son, Jesus, who gave his life for us (Romans 5:8). We can experience the ultimate spiritual renewal by accepting a relationship with Christ and joining the community of believers, his "bride."

Hos. 4:1-2

God wanted his people to examine their lives honestly. They had ignored the boundaries set up by the Ten Commandments (see Exodus 20:1-17; Deuteronomy 5:6-21). Their lack of commitment to God was at the root of their sinful behaviors (breaking vows, murdering, stealing, and committing adultery). This should encourage us to reflect honestly on our lives so that we can become aware of our sins and repent of them. If we are honest in our self-examination and confession, God will grant us the healing forgiveness we need.

Hos. 4:6

A healthy relationship with God requires an intimate knowledge of his revelation in the Bible. The knowledge God desires us to have goes beyond a mere acquaintance with the facts of his Word, however—he wants us to get to know him personally. The priests of Israel were well acquainted with the laws of God, but they lived an immoral lifestyle because they didn't really know God. In order to progress in our spiritual growth, we must get to know God himself.

Hos. 4:7-9

Leaders carry great responsibility. They are responsible not only for their own spiritual well-being but also for the well-being of those who follow them. If we are at the point where we are sharing the good news of God's deliverance in our lives, we must be sure to stay on the right path and not lapse back into sin. Those who look to us for guidance will do as we do, not as we say. If we hope to help others stay on the road to spiritual growth, we need to stay on the road too.

Hos. 4:15-17

Judah was warned to stay away from Israel, lest she be tempted to follow in the footsteps of her unfaithful sister nation. We can heed this warning, too. Since we tend to conform to the people around us, it makes sense to stay away from those who are engaging in immoral behaviors. To stay firmly on God's path, we would do well to develop deep relationships with people who are following God and obeying his Word.

Hos. 5:3-4

Because God's people clung to their idolatry and refused to cleanse themselves of this sin, they could not approach God. In their arrogance they refused to admit their wrongdoing and surrender their lives to God once again. Though the pleasures of sin may bring us a temporary thrill, we can never escape their destructive consequences. We must turn from our sin and receive God's forgiveness in order to approach him again.

Hos. 5:13

The people of Israel and Judah recognized their need for help, but they turned to the wrong source, and they suffered because of it. If we are honest enough in our self-examination, and penetrate deeply enough, we will see that no one is able to heal the disease of sin except God. Let us turn to him and be delivered from sin's deadly grip.

Hos. 6:1-3

Here the people finally saw the truth and admitted their helplessness, viewing themselves as torn and wounded. They surrendered their lives to God, deciding to "return to the LORD." They decided to ask God to change them, affirming that he would heal and bandage their wounds. They sought a relationship with God, saying, "Oh, that we might know the LORD!" These actions exemplify many of the keys to spiritual renewal.

Hos. 6:4-5

The people of Israel started down the right path, but they soon turned back. God asked what he should do with his wayward people. Why did they fail? Perhaps the Israelites were never really committed to following God and his will for them. While they turned from God, however, he never turned away from them or stopped loving them. This should encourage us that while we may turn away from God at times, he will never turn away from us or stop loving us.

Hos. 6:6

The way we treat other people gives us a good idea of how committed we are to God. Our religious worship activities can be acted out without any true feeling. They may prove nothing more than that we know the rituals. Acting kindly toward others and forgiving those who have hurt us not only proves that we are growing spiritually; it also helps us to grow even more. God is not saying here that he does not value our sincere acts of worship; he values them greatly. But if our worship is sincere, it will always be manifested in our compassion for others.

Hos. 7:10

Pride is a very destructive sin. It lets us assume the place of God in our own lives. It tells us to take credit for our successes and blame others for our failures. The sin of pride robs us of God's help because it won't let us admit we have a problem. To grow spiritually and see God's transforming power change our lives, we need to come to God with humble hearts, admitting our weaknesses and seeking change.

Hos. 7:13

God longs to redeem us and transform our lives. But what hinders him from doing that? Hearts hardened by rebellion and a refusal to see the truth. If we want God's powerful help, we must surrender ourselves to him. It is necessary that we learn to accept reality, admitting our faults and sins. Then we open our lives up to God so that he can help us.

Hos. 8:5-6

Jeroboam set up two gold calves in Israel in an attempt to consolidate his power. He feared losing control of the northern kingdom if everyone went to Jerusalem (in the southern kingdom) to worship God. So he made the idols and told his people that these were the gods who led the people out of Egypt (1 Kings 12:28-30). God had promised to give Jeroboam the kingdom of Israel, but Jeroboam had gone to another source to secure God's promise. This led to the destruction of Jeroboam's dynasty (1 Kings 13:33-34). When God promises us something, we can trust him to complete it in his way and in his time. Taking matters into our own hands is always harmful and will impede our spiritual growth.

Hos. 8:12

God's laws apply to everyone, not just the people who obey them. Those who believe that God's principles for life apply only to others are only harming themselves. If we drive at 90 m.p.h. in a 55 m.p.h. zone and get pulled over, the officer will never let us off if we claim, "Well, officer, I saw the speed-limit sign, but it doesn't apply to me." And neither will God let us off when we refuse to obey his revealed will in the Bible. Knowing that God holds us accountable to know and obey his will should motivate us to read and understand his Word.

Hos. 10:1

The more prosperous the people of Israel became, the further they moved from God. Unfortunately, most people think that success is measured in direct proportion to wealth. Even if we are spiritually bankrupt, we tend to think everything is all right if we are financially successful. However, money is never the key to a successful life. Our relationship with God is what measures true success. Living a godly life and receiving eternal wealth is worth far more than having earthly wealth.

Hos. 10:8

When that which we have trusted fails us and we begin to experience the painful consequences, it may seem as if a quick death would be better than trying to redirect the course of our lives. A quick end to our pain may be the easiest way out, but it is never the best or right way. There is always hope for a good life in the future, no matter how terrible things may seem in the present. We can begin by surrendering our lives to our merciful God. He wants all of us to come to him, no matter how great our past failures.

Hos. 10:12

In this verse, God expressed his desire to restore his relationship with Israel. Earlier we saw that the people planted the wind and then would harvest the whirlwind (8:7). In other words, they sinned and then reaped the chaotic and painful consequences. Here they were asked to plant righteousness and reap the unfailing love of God.

Hos. 11:1-3

Hosea here compared God's love for Israel to a father's love for his son. He paints a poignant picture of our complete dependence on God. God did everything right in raising his child, but Israel rebelled against God and sought the favor of false gods who could not protect her from the destruction to come. We can learn from Israel's catastrophe and accept the guidance of our heavenly Father before our lives are destroyed by the consequences of our rebellion against him.

Hos. 11:8-11

Here we see just how painful it is for God when people stray from him and seek out false sources of security. Even though sins that entangle us may have almost totally destroyed our lives, we have not suffered what we deserved; God has compassion on us, his wayward people. What a wonderful God he is! He shows us mercy and provides healing and restoration in our relationship with him.

Hos. 12:2-5

The patriarch Jacob changed from being a deceiver to one who sought God's blessing. In his struggles with God he finally faced his need for him and earnestly sought God's favor. Healing and growth will be found only through honest communion with God.

Hos. 12:6

God asks his people to love him by loving others. This means that we are to seek the best interests of others in a manner consistent with God's revealed will. When we are tempted to take advantage of others for personal gain, we need to ask God to help us to be just and loving. With God's help we can treat others as God would have them treated.

Hos. 13:1-3

Israel's downfall came after it had forsaken God for false gods, not before. Likewise, we may find that the source of our problems was our forsaking God and going our own way. We cannot blame God for our situations if we abandoned him. He lovingly cares for us. If we will see that our problems began when we went our own way, we can begin to remedy those problems by turning back to God. We must admit where we went astray, and ask God to direct us back into obedience to his will. He will lovingly come to our rescue and redirect the course of our lives.

Hos. 13:4, 13

There is no salvation except that offered by the God of the Bible. He offers salvation to all who will accept it (John 3:3, 16). Anyone who refuses this offer and looks to another source for salvation is like a stubborn "child who resists being born," not wanting the life being offered. Are we resisting God's offer, or have we gladly accepted the new life God has in store for us?

Hos. 14:1-4

These verses contain a paradigm for spiritual renewal. The people were called to admit their helplessness apart from God and to examine themselves, taking responsibility for their condition. They were called to let God change them, renouncing any further dealings with gods of their own making, and to commit their lives to God alone. We can follow the same direction in our spiritual renewal, renouncing our own false gods and surrendering our lives to God by obeying his will.

Hos. 14:4-8

God's people would experience unprecedented spiritual growth as they committed their lives more and more to him. As they allowed God to heal them, they would find that he also was the source of the water they needed for nourishment and growth. They would become blossoming plants that would send out their roots to start new shoots. We can have the same hope today. The problems caused by our sins can be resolved as we repent and accept God's acts of mercy on our behalf.

Hos. 14:9

We need God's wisdom to discern the areas of our lives that need to be changed. The prophet Hosea spoke often of sin and judgment, but his message never ended there. He always pointed the way to salvation through humble repentance. Wise people will listen and learn from the prophet's words, seeing the inherent rightness in all that God asks of them. God cares about our welfare and wants to see us healed because he loves us.

Joel 1:4-2:11

The people needed to admit their helplessness before God could intervene on their behalf. Joel led them to do this in three areas. First, their physical resources were depleted by the locust plague and drought (1:4-12). Second, they were spiritually destitute and could not find God through the standard method of presenting sacrifices (1:13-20). Third, they could not rely on courage and self-defense because the locusts were too great a foe to overcome (2:1-11). Once we admit we cannot do anything to save ourselves, then we can turn to God and ask him to mercifully rescue us from our pain.

Joel 2:12-17

Instead of responding to God's judgment with the prescribed ritual (tearing garments), God wanted the people of Judah to come to him with broken hearts, admitting their guilt and helplessness. The people needed to commit themselves to God, examine themselves, and ask God to change them. Since God is known for his mercy and compassion (2:13), it makes sense to surrender our lives to him. He can change our pain into joy.

Joel 2:18-27

When the people of Judah admitted their sin, God would take away their disgrace and replace it with his blessing. Likewise, when we accept reality, admit our sins, accept responsibility for our lives, and surrender our lives to God, he will free us from the bondage of sin and grant us mercy. The parched, barren areas of our lives will flourish, bringing glory to God.

Joel 2:28-29

Since this prophecy was fulfilled at Pentecost (see Acts 2), we can receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit has been changing sinful and troubled lives since he was poured out: Peter and the apostles (Acts 2), Paul (Acts 9), a demon-possessed slave girl and a prison guard (Acts 16), and others. The Spirit whom Joel prophesied about, and who changed first-century lives, is available to change our lives, too. We can trust the God of the Old and New Testaments to heal our broken lives and bring about our complete redemption.

Joel 2:32

When we call “on the name of the LORD,” we will find deliverance. No failure in our past is too great to prevent this. No disadvantage of any kind can keep us from God’s grace. When God comes to judge the world, his grace is able to keep us from all harm.

Joel 3:16-21

Ultimately God has a good future planned for all who trust in him. Restoration will be complete; salvation will be forever. With this hope for the future, we can find the courage we need to persevere through our problems today (Romans 8:18-21). Since our final destination is assured and God promises to stay with us throughout life, we need not fear the path we must walk, even if it winds through uncertain territory.

Amos 1:3–2:3

All the people of the earth are accountable to God for their actions. There are certain boundaries of human behavior that God will not allow people to cross without punishment. Yet, as Jesus said, God shows grace even to the unrighteous (Matthew 5:45). God will send judgment, but only after giving all people time to repent and change their ways. God does the same thing with us today. We may seem to prosper while going our own way, but this will last only a short while. If we do not admit our sin and turn back to God, we will eventually suffer the consequences of our sin.

Amos 2:4-8

The sins of Judah and Israel stemmed from their rejection of God's laws. They oppressed and took advantage of the poor; they took bribes, engaged in sexual sins, and disregarded God's laws in many other ways. Obeying God's regulations would have brought them blessing, but their evil deeds ensured their punishment. While our world may have changed since Bible times, God and his laws have not. These same behaviors will still bring punishment from God.

Amos 3:2

The people of Israel knew how God wanted them to act, yet they chose to sin anyway. They knew the laws and the consequences for disobedience, yet they still flouted them. So God would send the appropriate curses outlined in his laws. We know the dangers and consequences of our sins. If we engage in them and don't expect the consequences, we are blind to the truth. The only way to avoid the consequences of our sins is to turn from them, surrendering our lives to God and confessing our sins. Then he can show us mercy and redirect the course of our lives.

Amos 3:3-8

God's prophets had warned the people of Israel on a regular basis, and they had all seen the pain suffered by their ancestors for disobedience. We receive regular warnings, too. Continuing in our sins and ignoring the warnings is as bad as hearing a smoke alarm go off and then waiting to be burned in the fire. We should listen to the warnings we receive and respond before it is too late.

Amos 4:4-5

It is easy to find substitutes for a genuine relationship with God. One tempting substitute is religious activity. If we go to church regularly, perhaps even sing in the choir, won't that be enough? God required the Israelites to give sacrifices and tithes, but he demanded even more. An offering given because the giver is already committed to God pleases God. But if an offering is given in place of true commitment, then God regards even the offering as a sin. Our heartfelt devotion is what God really wants.

Amos 4:6-11

Modern-day parallels to these verses could be: "I took away your job, and your family left you, yet you still wouldn't give up your sins.” “You are empty despite all you possess, yet you still won’t turn to me.” All the negative effects of our sins are signs for us to turn back to God, the giver of all that is good and perfect (James 1:17).

Amos 5:4-5

Israel was warned not to worship idols, and those who did would face trouble. We may not worship carved images, but when we look to other things to receive what only God can provide, we are serving a false god. He doesn’t want us chasing after things that will lead only to disappointment and death. Instead, he calls out to us: “Come back to me and live!”

Amos 5:6, 14

These verses describe how life comes from God alone, not from anywhere else. To seek God means to be willing to surrender our lives to him, letting him change us. But how do we avoid the various failures mentioned in these verses? God reveals himself uniquely in the Bible; it is our infallible guide to the truth. We need to seek out God’s will in his Word and then seek, with his help, to live by it.

Amos 5:8-9

When we seek God, we seek the Creator of all things. He is all-powerful, controlling both day and night. He pours out the sea like water from a pitcher. He cannot be stopped by the best efforts of the human race. When we commit our lives to him, we can be sure that he is capable of transforming us.

Amos 5:18-20

It is possible to fool ourselves into thinking we are spiritually right with God when we are not. Amos calls here for honest self-examination. When Jesus Christ returns, it will be a time of joy and of the fulfillment of all his promises for those whose faith is genuine. Those who have not been honest with themselves and who have not surrendered their lives to God through Jesus Christ will be lost forever (Matthew 7:21-23). Let us honestly reflect on our lives right now. Where do we stand with God? How can we change to be more like he wants us to be?

Amos 5:21-24

No amount of religious activity is going to make up for our sinful lifestyle. We may fool others, leading them to believe that we are all right because we go to church three times a week or give 20 percent of our income to the church. But God will not look favorably upon our religious behavior if our hearts are not right with him.

Amos 6:4-7

God has no quarrel with his people enjoying the good things he provides for them. The problem with the Israelites was that they craved their enjoyments so much that they no longer cared about anyone or anything else. Many of us are in the same situation; we get wrapped up in our pleasures and don't care about God or about those around us. Maybe we have ruined our family life or our friendships in the pursuit of more "things." If we surrender these areas to God, he can help us restore our lives and our relationships.

Amos 7:7-9

God would not hold back his judgment any longer. He took a plumb line to see just how Israel measured up to his righteous standards. God looks at our lives with a plumb line, too—the Bible, his Word to us. On our own, when we look at our lives, they may seem straight and strong. But if we compared them to God's plumb line, we would see that our lives are really weak and leaning to the side of sin. Praying to God for help is the way to start the process toward a life in line with God's plan for us.

Amos 7:10-17

Notice how Amos faced opposition. He was sure of his commitment to God and persevered in what he knew to be God's will. God had called him to enter new territory, and he had done it courageously. We will face opposition to our spiritual growth, especially when we call for repentance from sin. People may feel threatened by our progress, and they would love to see us fail so they won't feel guilty about their own lifestyles. When we are being attacked, we may feel like giving up and giving in to others. But we must persevere, trusting God for protection and strength.

Amos 8:4-6

Instead of serving God, the Israelites served material wealth. They were not honest about this, however, even with themselves. They sat through worship services but spent the time thinking up new ways to cheat their customers. Serving wealth has become quite common in our society, maybe even a way of life for some of us. But if we are devoted to money, we cannot be serving God (see Matthew 6:24). We must decide who our master will be: God, who offers eternal life and peace, or money, which can never satisfy us.

Amos 8:11-14

Why would the people not be able to find “the words of the LORD”? It wasn’t because God was silent. Other prophets followed: Hosea, Isaiah, Micah, and many others. The people couldn’t find God’s words because they looked in the wrong places. They looked for revelations from the prevalent false gods. God’s people would not be able to hear God speaking to them until they admitted their sin. They would need to seek God alone and nothing else. We, too, need to stop trusting the “idols” we count on to get us through the day in order to be able to hear the truth of God’s Word. Only the hope God’s Word offers us can truly satisfy.

Amos 9:1-4

If we desire spiritual renewal, we must surrender our lives to God. Amos speaks of the terrible consequences for those who refuse to surrender their lives to him (see also Revelation 6:15-17). Earthly and eternal redemption are available to all who are willing to ask God to rescue them from their sins.

Amos 9:10

Refusal to admit the truth can be dangerous. Outward appearances seemed to deny the truth of what Amos was saying. The nation was prosperous; enemies were weak; the military was strong; alliances were made with Egypt and other nations. Inwardly, however, the people were diseased (see 6:6). Israel's spiritual sickness would lead ultimately to her physical destruction. The people refused to see the truth, their country was destroyed, and they were taken captive to Assyria. Let's not refuse to see the truth and let our blindness cost us our lives and happiness. Let's admit the truth to ourselves and to God so we can enjoy the fulfillment he offers.

Amos 9:11-15

God has committed himself to redeeming and restoring his people. He plans to restore what is broken and in ruin, changing barren land to a place of unprecedented fruitfulness. This can happen only when we see how helpless we are without God's help and commit our lives into his hands. The process will be painful as we grow spiritually, but the end result will be worth it.

Obad. 3-4

Pride had distorted the thinking of the Edomites. They thought they were too great and powerful for God, but God let them know that no one is beyond the reach of his power. We may think that we don't need God because of our status in society or because of our wealth and prestige. Harboring this kind of pride is always destructive; whether we like it or not, we are helpless without God. If we are not able to admit the fact that we need God, there is little hope for spiritual growth.

Obad. 10-15

God held the Edomites accountable for taking advantage of their helpless neighbors in Israel. People who are undergoing troubles are precious to God, and he will not tolerate those who gain from others' misfortunes. God will see to it that justice is served; he says that their acts will boomerang upon their heads. We may have suffered unjustly in the past. If so, we can let go of our feelings of hatred because God is in control of the situation. If we have taken unfair advantage of others, we need to admit our failures to God and seek to make restitution. God will not allow such sin to go unpunished.

Obad. 17-21

Obadiah's words were for God's people in Israel, but they apply to all people who suffer. While we may have troubles now, God will preserve his people and bless them in the future. Though life may be rough now, God's promises offer us hope for our future restoration.

Jon. 1:1-3

God's ways are not always our ways. God gave Jonah a message that he didn't want to hear, much less obey. It appears here that Jonah was afraid to confront this godless people with the truth about their sin. Later on, however, we are given another reason for Jonah's reticence (4:1-2). Jonah was afraid that the Ninevites would repent and that God would spare them. The prophet was bitter against this bloodthirsty nation and wanted them to be destroyed. God desires that everyone should repent and receive his forgiveness and restoration (2 Peter 3:9), and we should desire the same.

Jon. 1:4-17

God created a great storm, putting the sailors in a dangerous position over which they had no control. Jonah, who was responsible for their plight, was asleep in the hold of the boat. Often our irresponsible actions put the lives of others in jeopardy. Our refusal to obey God brings pain, and sometimes long-term consequences, into the lives of family members and friends. We, like Jonah, need to wake up from our sleep and take responsibility for our failures. Then we must do what we can to make restitution to those we have hurt.

Jon. 2:1-10

It took Jonah three days in the stomach of the fish to realize that he would have to follow God's plan for his life. God had called Jonah to do something he didn't want to do. Jonah tried to do things his own way and had to suffer the consequences.

We all have the same choice Jonah did. We can do things God's way and receive his help and blessing, or we can do things our way and suffer the painful consequences. God will go a long way to rescue his wayward children and lead them back to himself. Sometimes that path will lead down to the depths if that's what it takes to show us that God's way is the only way.

Jon. 3:1-3

God once again commanded Jonah to go to Nineveh to proclaim his message. This time Jonah obeyed God and preached to the people of Nineveh, whom he despised. Sometimes God calls us to do things that we would rather not do. The easy road is often the wrong road; the right road costs us something. In the end, however, the right way always leads to spiritual growth, blessing, and deliverance.

Jon. 3:4-9

God's message penetrated to all levels of Ninevite society. The people admitted their faults before God and dressed in clothes of mourning and repentance. The king then took responsibility for his people, making sure that they understood how serious their situation was. He called both great and small to humble themselves before God. We need to bring God's truth to the world today as well, for God can bring even the most rebellious people to repentance.

Jon. 4:1-3

That which ordinarily would have been considered a great success became a source of great agitation to Jonah. The prophet became incensed because God decided to forgive the wicked Ninevites. God often chooses to answer our prayers in ways we would never ask for but that bring a much greater good. We need to submit to his ways, for he knows what is best.

Jon. 4:4-11

God was very patient with Jonah. Rather than condemn him for his anger or punish him for his actions, God taught Jonah another lesson. He used a fast-growing plant to deliver Jonah from the misery of the scorching heat of the Mesopotamian day. When the vine died and the hot desert wind and sun beat fiercely against Jonah, he was miserable. In fact, Jonah became so upset by his personal discomfort and the mercy God had shown the Ninevites that he wanted to die. God rebuked Jonah for his disdain for the Ninevites. God showed Jonah that he seemed more concerned about a silly little plant than he did an entire city of people loved by God. We, too, must make certain that we align our priorities and concerns to match those of God.

Mic. 1:2-7

God announced the coming of a sudden and intense judgment on his people, who had refused to trust and obey him. They had rebelled and sought help from powerless idols. God showed them how useless their idol worship was by allowing them to suffer the consequences of seeking help from a source that could not deliver. Anything we turn to in the place of God may become an idol. If we pursue help from idols, however, we will only be disappointed. Only God has the power to help us and satisfy our hearts' true desires.

Mic. 1:12-16

When there is no repentance, sin is contagious, and its effects are far-reaching. Notice that even the innocent children of the Israelites would be sold into slavery because of their parents' sins. We often fail to realize that our sins may cause great suffering for generations into the future. We need to act now, admitting our sins and failures and surrendering our lives into God's gracious hands. With God's help we will yet be able to set our children and grandchildren free from a painful future.

Mic. 2:1-5

Many of Israel's influential people spent their time planning ways to ruin the lives of others. They sought personal wealth and influence, and the more they took for themselves, the more they hurt those around them. They were blind to much of the pain they were causing and unaware of the judgment they were piling up for themselves. Our sins often drive us to make the same mistake. As we reflect honestly on our lives, we should think clearly about those we have hurt and seek ways to make restitution.

Mic. 2:6-7

The people of Israel did not want to face up to their sins and tried to ignore Micah's messages predicting punishment from God. But since they refused to listen to God's warnings, they would have to face the consequences of their actions. Perhaps their suffering would lead them to repentance. Notice that God told his wayward people that he planned to punish them because he loved them, not because he wanted vengeance. God wanted to lead his people back into a healthy relationship with himself. The painful consequences we suffer for our sins are one way God uses to call us back into a relationship with himself. Sometimes our refusal to see the truth is so strong that nothing short of disaster can get our attention. We can be sure that no matter how much pain we feel now, God still loves us and desires the best for us.

Mic. 2:12-13

Even though God warned his people of sure destruction to come, he also gave them a reason to hope for the future: Someday he would restore the nation he was about to punish. As we face the inescapable consequences of our past actions, we can still have hope for the future. Even though there may be hard times ahead, if we trust God and obey his will for our lives, there is always hope. No matter how great our sin and suffering, God is able to bring about our forgiveness and restoration.

Mic. 3:1-4

The leaders of Israel failed to fulfill their responsibilities before God—to defend the poor and helpless in society. In fact, they took advantage of the very people they were supposed to protect. They could expect only punishment from God for such actions. If we have harmed the innocent people in our charge, it is time to repent and make restitution.

Mic. 4:1-5

If everyone obeyed God's will, our world would be filled with peace and prosperity. Life would be filled with meaning and joy. For some reason, however, we continually reject God's plan and continue to do things our own way. We live for personal gratification and blind ourselves to the needs of others. As we recognize the destruction and pain we have caused by doing things our own way, it might help to reflect on how things could be if we did things God's way. God desires that we live in a world of joy and harmony. If we admit our failures and seek to live according to his will for us, there is still hope that our corner of the world can reflect God's good intentions for wellness and peace.

Mic. 4:6-7

God cares about hurting people. He consistently shows deep tenderness to those rejected by society. God also demonstrates a fatherly concern toward those he has disciplined. In fact, his discipline is a clear sign of his love (see Hebrews 12:6-7). Although God's discipline may hurt, it helps us recognize our sin and is often the impetus for us to redirect the course of our lives. We need to remember that God will never forget us, and he seeks to restore us to himself.

Mic. 4:9-13

God's people needed to accept the consequences of their actions. God had to remove their world of false security and send them into exile in order to help them realize that they needed him. But God did this only to make them a stronger and more righteous people. His punishments were only a small part of his much bigger plan to restore and heal them. God works the same way in our lives. The pain we face now for our past failures is real, but it is only a small part of God's plan for our redemption. In the end, God's judgments will become a source of great blessing for us if we trust God and obey his will for our lives.

Mic. 5:1-5

Out of a place that the world considered insignificant, God would bring greatness. God made the tiny town of Bethlehem an internationally famous place when he chose it as the birthplace of his Messiah. God is famous for using "insignificant" people and places to achieve great things. Even if we feel insignificant, God can still use us to bring great blessing. This can begin as we share our story of how God delivered us. As others hear how God has blessed us, they will experience hope that God can do the same for them.

Mic. 5:10-15

Here God promised to destroy all the useless things his people had depended on for security. They relied on their weapons and walled cities for protection from their enemies. They sought spiritual guidance in the occult, astrology, and idol worship. God's people would discover that their so-called strengths were only illusions; they were depending on things that could never help them. We do the same thing when we turn to our own devices to give us a sense of security. These things only lead us away from the one true source of help—God.

Mic. 6:4-5

The people of Israel had become smug and self-sufficient, forgetting that they were helpless without God's power. When we begin to experience significant spiritual growth, it can be easy to forget that God was the one who delivered us. We tend to take some of the credit and place less importance on our relationship with God. When we fail to acknowledge God's help in our earlier successes, we can almost count on a setback. God was the only one able to deliver us from bondage, and he is the only one able to sustain our spiritual growth.

Mic. 6:6-8

When we consider who God is and who we are, we realize that there is nothing we can truly give to him—neither our possessions nor our most prized treasures—that will impress him or win his favor for us. God, in the final sense, does not desire our religious acts of worship unless those acts are accompanied by lives that are pleasing to him. His desire is that we treat others responsibly, that we demonstrate compassion toward them, and that we exhibit a full reliance on him.

Mic. 6:10-16

The prophet made it clear that God despises those who treat others unfairly and seek their own personal gain (see Deuteronomy 25:13-16; Proverbs 11:1; 20:10, 23). God will bring dryness to the souls of such people, and they will experience an emptiness that cannot be satisfied by the things of this world.

Mic. 7:1-6

When people live for personal gain and turn away from God, the results are always disastrous. Following God's plan leads to peace and blessing. Merely seeking personal gratification leads to evil and selfishness. The leaders of the government become corrupt, and no one can be trusted—even members of one's own family! Instead of following our selfish inclinations, we can choose to obey God's will for our lives.

Mic. 7:9-14

Micah spoke for God's people, recognizing that they had sinned and that their suffering was a part of God's plan for their restoration. Instead of seeking to escape the pain of well-deserved consequences for our sins, we can surrender our lives to God. He will use our pain to help us grow. Just as he redeemed his people from the exile caused by their sin, he desires to redeem us from our bondage and give us lives filled with meaning and joy.

Mic. 7:15-20

What beautiful words of comfort! No matter how terrible our past, there is always hope for the future when we surrender our lives to God. As we follow God's will for us, we will begin to experience God's full pardon and will be the beneficiaries of God's perfect compassion. He will free us from the clutches of our sinful nature and make us a blessing to others. We can be assured of God's promises by looking back at how he has kept his promises in the past. As we hear the stories of others who have experienced God's redemption, we can take God's work in their lives as a promise for our own healing. We can depend on God to redeem us.

Nah. 1:15

This same language was used in Isaiah 52:7 of heralds poised on the hills of Judah shouting the good news of Judah's liberation. The kingdom of Israel had already been destroyed by Assyria, and Judah had lived under a continual threat of attack for many years. The conquest of Nineveh by the Babylonians and Medes would be good news for the desperate, helpless people of Judah. This event took place in 612 B.C., and Nahum 2:3-10 records an account of Nineveh's defeat.

Nah. 2:2

Assyria had rendered God's people powerless. However, because of God's righteous character and his faithfulness to his people, Nahum gave God's promise that the past glories of Judah and Israel would be restored with the defeat of God's enemies. There is always hope for those who trust in God.

Nah. 2:13-3:1

Assyria's defeat was certain. God's people would be delivered, and those who supported Assyria would be silenced forever. God's justice is always administered according to his timetable. It is easy to become discouraged as we see injustices happening all around us. We may wonder why God seems to be doing so little about them. Here we see that God will hold unjust people accountable when the time is right.

Hab. 1:1-4

Habakkuk, a contemporary of the prophets Jeremiah, Daniel, and Ezekiel, was appalled at the wickedness that swirled about him like a windstorm. Lawlessness and injustice were rampant in the nation of Judah. The prophet, sensitive to the sin around him, called out to God. Today's society is not much different. We often find ourselves wondering, Will this ever end? The rest of Habakkuk's book provides an answer to this question.

Hab. 1:5-11

God's solution for Judah's sin was exile in Babylonia. He would allow the Babylonians to destroy Judah and Jerusalem to teach them that their disobedience to God carried a price. It was God's way of helping his people devote themselves to him again so they could experience his redemption and restoration. God often does the same thing with us. He allows us to exercise our free will, and live in our sins for just so long before he allows the consequences to catch up with us. As we face the consequences, we are forced to realize that we truly need God's help and mercy. Then we can surrender our lives to God and experience his redemption and restoration.

Hab. 1:12-2:3

When faced with the coming of the Babylonians, it seemed to Habakkuk that the cure was worse than the disease. How could God bless the godless Babylonians so they would be able to destroy his own people? It didn't seem right. Like Habakkuk, we sometimes wonder how people even more wicked than we are can be allowed to prosper. But rather than turn away in confusion and resentment, we would be wise to turn to God, honestly asking him to help us understand. God will deal with the other people when the time is right. He is ultimately in control.

Hab. 2:4

Wicked people are characterized by the fact that they trust in themselves. They proudly believe they can make their own way in the world under their own power. Most of us have experienced the sad consequences of such an attitude. God knows what is best for us; we can trust him to lead us in the right way. Notice that being righteous does not depend on our doing the right things. It has to do with trusting God. We can be righteous, no matter how terrible our past, by believing and following God's plan for us.

Hab. 3:1-2

Habakkuk praised God, not only for answering his questions, but also for the knowledge he had gained about the person of God. Habakkuk had come to realize how much his people needed God's discipline (Hebrews 12:5-6), so he acknowledged God's righteousness in their coming judgment. Then he looked past the coming punishment to a time of restoration. God's punishment of his people is always meted out for the purpose of growth and blessing in the end. If we are willing to recognize our need for God and follow his good plans for us, we can experience the blessings God intended for us to gain through our painful experiences.

Hab. 3:3-16

Remembering the powerful acts of God in the past can give us confidence in what God can do now and in the future. It is of immeasurable help to read what God has done in the lives of his people and to receive the encouragement that their examples and words can provide (see Romans 15:4; 1 Corinthians 10:11). God's work in our own lives can also be of great help to others. As we share how God has delivered us in the past, not only will others receive new hope, but we also will find encouragement by remembering what God has already done for us.

Hab. 3:17-19

Habakkuk's prayer came to a climax in a beautiful affirmation of faith. Though there would be hard times ahead, Habakkuk knew that he could trust in God to provide him with the strength he needed to persevere. The words of 3:19 provide a stunning picture of the surefooted confidence we can have in our God of strength and safety, a great assurance for all who seek him.

Zeph. 1:4-13

Through Zephaniah, God condemned the irresponsible behavior of Judah's leaders. He was probably referring to the recent reigns of Manasseh and Amon, two of Judah's most wicked kings. During their reigns, the people of Judah had become increasingly dependent upon false gods, had ceased to worship the true God, and had built a society in which deceitful and immoral people could prosper. The progression is clear: When we turn from the true God, our society and its members begin to deteriorate. We all need God. Unless we recognize this fact, our lives will continue on a downhill path.

Zeph. 1:14-18

The prophet warned of the coming "day of the LORD"—a day of reckoning with God. At that time, Judah would be conquered and her people led away as slaves to Babylon. God mercifully offered his people numerous chances to repent, but there would come a time when judgment would fall. We should be thankful that God will not allow us to reject his way forever. When we do things our way, we only hurt ourselves and the people we love. If we listen to the early warnings we receive and act appropriately, we need not fear a future day of reckoning.

Zeph. 2:1-3

The purpose of God's judgment was to encourage the people of Judah to depend on him. The prophet called the people to repent, hoping that they would be spared the coming devastation. The people responded favorably to Zephaniah's message, and King Josiah led them in a great reformation. This led to the last high point in Judah's history. Though the day of reckoning did come, it was delayed for several generations. Like the people of Zephaniah's day, let us respond to the warnings we receive, admitting our failures and asking God to help us.

Zeph. 2:4-15

Zephaniah listed the nations that had influenced Judah in their idolatrous practices. These nations would come under God's judgment and lose their corrupting influence. God gives us great potential to influence others for good. However, we often end up leading others in the wrong direction. Taking responsibility for those we have led astray in some way is part of accepting responsibility for our lives. It may be one of our children or, perhaps, a friend or coworker. Part of making restitution with such people is doing what we can to get them back on the right track.

Zeph. 3:1-5

The destructive behavior of Judah's people, though influenced by other nations, was ultimately her responsibility. The people refused to admit their sins to God. Instead, they rejected all his attempts at warning and correction. We have all been influenced negatively by others, but pointing the finger at them will slow our spiritual progress. They are responsible for dealing with their problems; we are responsible for our own. As we take responsibility for our actions, recognizing how much we need God, we will be able to redirect the course of our lives. If we continue to blame others for our problems, we are headed for destruction.

Zeph. 3:9-20

Zephaniah described a future age that would follow the ultimate “day of the LORD.” This will be an age of blessing marked by honest and pure worship of God. Sorrows and burdens will no longer exist, and the nation of Israel will finally be restored to its land of hope and security. We can rejoice in this great promise for God’s people.

Hag. 1:2-8

God called the people in Jerusalem to reflect honestly on their lives and reconsider their priorities. The people had returned from exile and started to rebuild the Temple, but they had stopped when they faced opposition. They chose to build beautiful homes for themselves instead of finishing God's house. They had proven by their actions that they considered their personal comfort to be more important than God. As a result, they suffered the consequences of hard times. We must make sure that our priorities are such that God is first in our lives and that our other commitments are in keeping with his Word.

Hag. 1:13-15

There is a point when we need to get beyond mere self-examination, a time when we need to stop talking about our problems and take concrete steps to change. We are like the people in Haggai's day who already knew God's will for them—they were to rebuild God's Temple. They just needed to act on their knowledge. Here we see that they finally took concrete steps to complete the task God had given them. As we honestly reflect on our lives, we will become aware of the things we need to change, and we will have a good idea of what we should do. When we reach this point, it is time to take responsibility for what we have done and ask forgiveness. We need to take concrete, active steps to make real spiritual progress.

Hag. 2:3-9

The former Temple had been destroyed at least 67 years earlier, so there were few alive who could remember it. The few elderly people who had seen Solomon's Temple were sad because the new Temple would never match the old one in splendor. God made it clear, however, that their rebuilding project would result in a Temple even more glorious than the first. Regardless of what we have known in the past, whether it was splendid or humble, God has a glorious future planned for us. When we surrender our lives to God, he guides us through our present circumstances to the glorious future he has planned.

Hag. 2:12-13

Purity does not rub off; impurity does. This is true not only in a physical sense, but in a spiritual sense as well. That is one reason why we need to guard against being influenced by those who are sinful. If we are not prepared for them, they are more likely to lead us astray than we are to influence them for good.

Zech. 1:1-6

Zechariah confronted the Jews with their sin. These people had recently returned from Babylonian exile, so the prophet reminded them that God would deal with their sins just as he had punished their ancestors with the captivity they had recently escaped. It is never safe to ignore such a call to turn back to God. Hearing demands heeding! God's promises of future comfort, victory, and deliverance must not lead us to a false sense of security. Neglected spiritual opportunities are lost opportunities.

Zech. 1:18-21

Similar to one of Daniel's visions, the vision of the four horns (the horn being a symbol of power) and the four blacksmiths gave hope to the Jewish people. Eventually their oppressors would be overthrown. Today we, too, can find courage and hope in the fact that God will eventually overthrow the oppressive powers that dominate us.

Zech. 2:1-13

The vision of the man with a measuring line concerned the reconstruction and repatriation of Israel. Many of the Jews had become comfortable in exile and were reluctant to return to Palestine. They were probably afraid they would return to a land of confusion and strife. There was no need to fear, however, for God had promised a future of prosperity and peace. We also are given the assurance of God's special protection. If we want to escape our bondage, we need to trust

God and follow his plan for our deliverance.

Zech. 3:1-4

This vision of Jeshua the high priest teaches us much about God's merciful forgiveness. The historical figure Jeshua son of Jehozadak, the high priest at that time, appeared here in soiled garments. Satan stood at his right, accusing him of many things. The filthy high priest symbolized what Israel looked like to God in their sinful state. We still wrestle with sin today, and Satan is always there to accuse us before God for things in our lives that have demoralized and immobilized us. Yet God is always there to defend us if we have come to him for forgiveness and cleansing.

Zech. 3:5-10

God would purify Jeshua, the high priest, and he would be a living illustration of the good leadership that would be experienced under the Messiah's rule. There is a real word of hope here. When God's restoration is complete, suffering people will experience his healing. Their sorrow and isolation will be replaced by joy and true fellowship with friends and neighbors. As we experience God's powerful deliverance in our lives, we, like Jeshua, can illustrate what happens to a life that is ruled and directed by our loving God. As we share God's deliverance with others through both word and deed, they, too, will experience the healing power he offers.

Zech. 4:1-6

The vision of the lampstand and the olive trees teaches us about God's sustaining provision (4:1-14). This strange vision of the gold lampstand into whose reservoir two olive trees pour their oil points to the power by which the Messiah's kingdom shall be inaugurated, namely that of the Holy Spirit (see 4:6).

Zech. 4:6-14

Zerubbabel had led a contingent of Jews to Jerusalem to rebuild the Temple, but their efforts had been stopped by political opposition. The people became discouraged, and they began to wonder whether God was with them. Here God gave Zechariah a message of encouragement for his disheartened people. They needed to remember that success was not the result of human strength or ingenuity but a fruit of the Holy Spirit's power. With his power, the difficult task of rebuilding could yet be accomplished. We also may become discouraged when we face the massive task of rebuilding our lives, especially if we experience regular opposition from people, emotions, and temptations. The task may seem big to us, but God's power is more than sufficient to bring full redemption and restoration to our lives.

Zech. 5:5-11

The vision of the bushel basket was about liberation. The strange imagery graphically portrays the liberation of God's people from a longstanding curse of materialism and commercialism. This affliction was, in fact, the result of their misuse of one of God's blessings (Deuteronomy 15:6). We who are controlled by sins that enslave us and bad attitudes or habits need to realize, as did the Jews, that deliverance comes when we ask God to change us.

Zech. 6:9-15

In this climax to the visions, Zechariah was instructed to receive gifts, designated for the work of rebuilding the Temple, from a delegation of Jews from Babylon. From the silver and gold, he was to make a crown that he would set upon Jeshua's head. This would foreshadow the royal priesthood that would come with the Messiah (Psalm 110:1-4; Hebrews 7:1-3). Once again, however, the obligation upon God's people was clear. There would be no blessing from God unless they were willing to follow his will for them. The same is true for us. There is little hope for spiritual renewal unless we recognize our need for God and become willing to do things his way.

Zech. 7:1-7

Two years had elapsed since Zechariah received the visions of the first six chapters. Since then, the work on the Temple had progressed, and the minds of the people had been turned back toward God. The citizens of Bethel sent a delegation to Jerusalem asking whether or not their ceremonies of fasting for the destruction of Jerusalem were legitimate, especially since the Temple was being rebuilt. God made it clear through Zechariah's answer that he was more concerned about the attitudes of their hearts than whether or not they fasted. Many of us have come to realize that true spiritual renewal and transformation must involve deep internal change. Only as our hearts are changed by God can real renewal and transformation occur.

Zech. 7:8-10

For the exiles, the test of their faith was simple: love for others (Leviticus 19:18), especially the helpless—widows, orphans, foreigners, and the poor. The final step—and ultimate proof—of our spiritual renewal is our desire to help others who are suffering. As we reach out to offer them the second chance that we have already received, we will discover the joy of loving others, and our own spiritual lives will be strengthened as a result.

Zech. 7:11-14

Here we are reminded of how the ancestors of Zechariah's Jewish audience had ignored all of God's appeals to show compassion to the poor and helpless. Because they would not listen to God, he refused to listen to their prayers. Merely attending church or performing religious acts will be of no profit if our hearts are not willing to obey God and our lives are not surrendered to him. True emotional and spiritual healing always involves obedience to God's revealed will.

Zech. 8:1-17

The most important way to identify true religion is to see how it affects our daily lives. God promised wonderful blessings should the Jews complete the task of rebuilding his Temple. Their action in rebuilding God's house would prove their commitment to his revealed will. We cannot stop once we have honestly examined our lives. If we have seen areas of sin or disobedience to God's will, we must take appropriate action.

Our attempts to obey God's will for us prove that we trust his plan to the point of shaping our lives around it.

Zech. 9:1-8

These verses introduce a long declaration by God against the Gentile nations. Although all of Israel's neighbors would be overrun, God would protect his land from the invading armies. This prophecy probably referred to the conquests of Alexander the Great that would take place during the inter testamental period. These verses trace Alexander's campaign through Syria, Phoenicia, and Philistia (334–332 B.C.). But in Jerusalem, God would stop Alexander from destroying the Temple. This word would have given hope to the Jews, who had lived for centuries with the threat of invading armies. Fear is often the source of paralysis. God's assurance, however, leads to courage. As we face the difficulties of life, God's promise to stay with us should give us the courage to persevere.

Zech. 9:9-10

At the very center of Israel's hope was the Messiah, whose promised coming was a source of great hope and joy. His credentials were his righteousness, his offer of salvation, and his lowliness, distinguishing him from all other earthly rulers. The one who demonstrated these credentials was, of course, Jesus of Nazareth. Clearly, God's people must not place their hope primarily in human sources but in their personal relationship with God through Jesus Christ. If we put our hope in God, no problem is too great for us to overcome.

Zech. 9:13–10:1

Spiritual renewal involves surrendering our lives to God and patiently waiting for his timely intervention. The Jews' victory over the Greek tyrants is described here in a series of rapidly changing metaphors. God's people are seen as instruments of conquest: the bow and arrow, a hero's sword. God would give his people victory over the oppressive powers that assailed them.

Zech. 10:8-12

Like a shepherd who whistles to his flocks, God will call his people back from exile. Political restoration would not be enough, however; the Jews needed to return to their God in faith. Similarly, God has a perfect plan for his people, and he will not rest until it is accomplished (Romans 8:30-32). We are called to seek out God's will for us and do all we can to follow it. If we seek to follow God's plan, he will help us along the way.

Zech. 12:10–13:1

These verses describe a national conversion in Israel, but they are also an outline of our own spiritual conversion. We must recognize that we are helpless without God and depend on him to show us the areas of sin and failure in our lives (12:10). We need to admit our failures and seek to follow God's will for our lives (12:11-14). Next, we must accept the cleansing that God offers us (13:1). Because of what Jesus Christ has done on our behalf, we can be confident of God's total forgiveness of all our past failures.

Zech. 13:2-4

Part of God's plan for Israel's redemption included getting rid of her idols and false prophets. The people had learned to depend upon teachings and objects that had no power to deliver. God would remove those sources of false hope so the people could learn to depend on him alone. We, too, are often guilty of bowing to idols or following false prophets. The false prophets of New Age spirituality and other false religions can also lead us away from true dependence on God.

Zech. 14:1-7

Zechariah foresaw a time of terrible desolation, but in the midst of the horrible suffering, God would step in to deliver his people. Throughout the Scriptures we find God transforming terrible situations into amazing victories. This prophecy looks forward to a time in the future when God will do this in an ultimate sense. We all have experienced deep pain, and many of us are experiencing it even today. Sometimes we must see the truth of our desperate situation before we realize how useless it is to go on alone. God is able to heal our deepest hurts and restore our lives, no matter how terrible our past, if we will only admit our need and call out to him.

Zech. 14:8-15

At last Zechariah reached the climax of his prophecy—and of all history—the messianic kingdom. The Messiah will be king over all the earth, and all of earth's inhabitants will know, worship, and serve him. When the whole world runs according to God's will, life for everyone will be characterized by peace and joy. If we want to enjoy God's full blessings, we must live according to God's will—today. When God occupies the place of absolute authority, radical changes will take place. Our lives will be transformed, taking on a new beauty and peace as we see God fulfill his promise of restoration.

Zech. 14:16-21

When the Messiah rules, Israel will be sanctified as God's priestly nation, and it will be characterized by holiness. Nothing unclean will be allowed to defile the Temple precincts. We are reminded here that God desires his people to be holy just as he is holy. We are made holy by accepting God's work on our behalf through Jesus Christ. Because God dwells in us through his Holy Spirit, our body becomes his temple, where nothing unclean should be allowed to enter (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). This provides a strong motivation for us to stay free of the sins that enslave us.

Mal. 1:5

The Judeans had experienced many recent triumphs through God's power. God had allowed them to return to the Promised Land after years in exile. Then, with God's help, they overcame great obstacles to rebuild the Temple and the city of Jerusalem. The people had many reasons to be thankful to God and to recognize his power of restoration. Despite the great triumphs they had experienced, however, the people had quickly returned to doing things their own way. It is easy for us to do the same thing. After experiencing great victories with God's help, we fall back into old sinful patterns. We need to be reminded on a regular basis of what God has done and can do.

Mal. 1:7-14

God did not want mere words of repentance; he wanted the people to back up their words with appropriate action. If they were really sorry for their sins and honored God in their hearts, they would have brought their best offerings to God. They exposed their insincerity by bringing blemished sacrifices. They kept the best for themselves. When we say that we are seeking God and surrendering our lives to him, this needs to be evidenced by how we live our lives. When we truly are devoted to God, we will gladly bring him the best we have to offer.

Mal. 2:1-9

Even Israel's religious leaders failed to show God proper respect. God singled these people out for special punishment because they used their influence to hurt rather than help the people under them. We are all in positions of influence at one level or another. Some of us are responsible for many; others of us influence only our families, spouses, or a few friends. No matter what our position, however, we can influence people for either good or evil. If we have led others astray, our responsibility is to acknowledge our failure and do what we can to make restitution. This may mean doing what we can to help these people redirect the course of their lives.

Mal. 2:14-16

Some of the Judeans had divorced their wives for no reason other than personal gratification. They pushed their wives into a world where they had no means of supporting themselves. This practice was not only unethical; it was also terribly cruel. God hates divorce. He intended family commitments to be binding. Some of us may have experienced firsthand the pain of a broken marriage. A broken family is a serious hindrance to spiritual growth. We need strong relationships to hold us accountable and keep us on the right track.

Mal. 2:17

God's standards cannot be ignored with impunity. The people had built up their walls of defensiveness so thick that they considered their evil deeds to be good. If we refuse to recognize and respect God's standards, we will suffer severe consequences. Our spiritual renewal is possible only if we recognize our need for God and the value of his plan. As long as we fight it, we will face a steady decline leading to disaster.

If we trust God and follow his will, we can be sure he will strengthen us as we continue to seek him.

Mal. 3:3-4

Precious metals are refined by the searing heat of the furnace. Cleansing of filthy fabric requires the use of caustic soap. God often uses the fire of difficult times to ready us for his restoring work. He uses suffering to lead us to a recognition that we need God. If we recognize this fact and turn to God for help, he will deliver us and encourage us as we redirect the course of our lives to walk in his ways.

Mal. 3:7

God's people refused to see the truth. God confronted them directly about their sin, but they still refused to acknowledge it. Our sinful nature and involvement in sin can lead us to refuse to see the truth. As long as we try to hide our sins, we cannot receive God's help. We can receive help only after we have acknowledged that we have a problem.

Mal. 4:1

It is not a popular theme, but the Bible is filled with warnings against proud and sinful people. People who think they don't need God are doomed to destruction. We may react negatively to God's warnings because we don't really understand his heart. God warns us of destruction because he wants us to change the course of our lives. If we continue to follow our selfish ways, we will risk destroying not only our own lives but also the lives of those with whom we come into contact. If we never realize this, however, we will never experience the rich and meaningful lives that God wants for all of us.

Mal. 4:2-6

Fear is never a pleasant subject, but healthy fear is the beginning of a proper view of God. As we recognize God's goodness and power, we learn to trust him and become willing to follow his plan. A proper view of God will lead to healing in our lives. Life in God's Kingdom will be characterized by wholeness and peace. Until that time, however, we can put God in charge of our lives, and we can experience his healing in our own corner of the world. As we grow to respect God as he deserves, we will joyfully follow his perfect plan for us.

Matt. 1:1-16

Notice that the family tree of Jesus, the sinless God-man, was far from perfect. Judah fathered Perez with his daughter-in-law Tamar, thinking she was a prostitute (1:3; see Genesis 38); Salmon married Rahab, the former prostitute of Jericho (Matthew 1:5; see Joshua 6); and David had an adulterous affair with Uriah's wife, Bathsheba (Matthew 1:6; see 2 Samuel 11). Throughout history God has used imperfect people to work his will. This does not mean that God is unaware of people's past mistakes. Rather, this shows that he can redeem the lives of fallen people to do great things for him. This should give us hope that God can give us a productive future no matter how sinful our past.

Matt. 1:5-16

The mention of Rahab, Ruth, and Bathsheba in Jesus' lineage is significant. Though each of these women came from different backgrounds, God used them along the way to prepare for the coming of the Messiah. Similarly, God often employs people from diverse and unusual backgrounds to accomplish his purposes. His grace is stronger than the presumed limitations of our past. He can use us regardless of our background.

Matt. 3:1-2

John the Baptist preached a centuries-old message: repentance. People could have easily dismissed his message by saying, "I've heard this before," or "I'll quit sinning tomorrow." But John presented with fresh urgency the need for an immediate moral U-turn: “The Kingdom of Heaven is near.” Repentance requires honest self examination. The sense of urgency in John’s message still holds true for us today. There is no time like the present to face reality and turn from our sinful behavior.

Matt. 3:5-9

It is clear that not everyone who went to listen to John the Baptist wanted to repent and find new life. John saw that the Pharisees, and others like them, were merely going through the motions, trusting external appearances for their salvation. We must make sure that we are not seeking spiritual renewal merely for the sake of appearances or trying to earn our salvation by what we do. It is not our outward appearance that matters most, but our inner person of the heart. We need to begin with an honest assessment of our inner lives before God will transform our behavior.

Matt. 3:7-11

John the Baptist confronted the Pharisees with their refusal to see the truth. These religious leaders had blinded themselves to the sins of their hearts and believed themselves to be beyond the reach of God’s judgment. Perhaps we once acted as if the consequences of our actions would never catch up with us. Our spiritual blindness may have been so severe that we weren’t even aware of the serious consequences we would have to face. It is only a matter of time before God sees fit to take an ax to unproductive trees—those who are not following him. However, for those of us willing to truly repent, God fuels our spiritual growth by the power of his Holy Spirit. The choice is up to us: Either we continue as we are and await God's judgment, or we turn from our present lifestyle and redirect the course of our lives, counting on God's Spirit to help us change.

Matt. 3:13-15

Jesus did not need to follow John's call to baptism because he had never sinned and had no reason to repent. However, Jesus proceeded to be baptized anyway because it was the right thing to do, and his actions modeled the importance of baptism to others. We all need examples of those who do the right things for the right reasons, thus modeling a balanced life. As we continue growing spiritually, we can become models for others to follow.

Matt. 3:16-17

After Jesus' baptism, the Holy Spirit was seen in visible form, and the voice of the Father was heard commending the Son. Jesus is thus shown to be in perfect harmony with his Father and the Holy Spirit. While we will never have perfect unity in our earthly relationships, we can draw support from those who affirm us. As we study the Bible, we will find numerous evidences of God's great love for us.

Matt. 4:1-2

When we seek God and surrender to him, we should not mistakenly think that our faith will insulate us from temptation. In fact, Jesus was actually led into the wilderness by the Holy Spirit for a prolonged siege of temptation. This should serve as a fair warning that temptation may follow quickly on the heels of a spiritual high. God can use such trials in our lives to remind us of how helpless we are without him.

Matt. 4:3-10

Notice that Satan did not doubt that Jesus was the Son of God. Rather, he appealed to real needs and possible doubts that were common to his humanity. Jesus, like us, had need for food, security, protection, significance, and achievement. Had Jesus faltered at the point of his humanity, Satan could have called into question Jesus' right to rule and his perfection as the unique God-man. Similarly, Satan and his forces will attack those of us pursuing spiritual growth at our most vulnerable points. It is important that we be on guard against these attacks, filling our minds with Scripture and calling upon the Lord to help us.

Matt. 4:12-16

The way of salvation through Jesus Christ is open to everyone. Jesus can heal anyone, regardless of his or her heritage or sinful past. Jesus himself proved this by spending his early years in the cosmopolitan region of Galilee. The Jews in this area were not considered "good Jews" by those in Judea because of their contact with the many Gentiles who lived there. But Jesus showed God's love for them. And he continues to show his love to all who trust him, no matter who we are or how great our mistakes in the past.

Matt. 5:1-12

The Beatitudes contain much of what God desires of us as we seek to follow his will for our lives. This lifestyle affirms God's perspective, priorities, and boundaries. As we look over God's plan in this passage, we may wonder how anyone could live up to it. The truth is, no one can do it without God's help. Following God's plan requires wisdom and grace from him.

Matt. 5:3-5

We cannot experience spiritual renewal and transformation from God without true humility. Pride stands in the way of our dealing with painful problems and sins. If we cannot admit our problems and failures, there can be no real cure for us. When we humble ourselves before God, we may need to mourn and grieve over our mistakes and losses. This is key to spiritual growth. As we do this, we will experience the wonderful comfort that only God can offer (see 2 Corinthians 1:3-5).

Matt. 5:10-12

Persecution can be a real problem for us as we try to live by God's principles. Others may try to intimidate us into giving up on spiritual growth. Family members may be threatened by the changes we are making and may do what they can to discourage us. We need to realize that it is more important to please God than other people. Then, as we do things God's way, we will be set free from our sinful ways of life. We can begin to build healthy relationships with others and continue to strengthen our all-important relationships with God.

Matt. 5:13-16

If we have been delivered by God's power, we are witnesses to his power to save. We can carry the light of his Good News to people imprisoned in the darkness of sin. Sinful behaviors and warped relationships abound, and people are desperate for truth and light. We can make a significant impact on individuals, relationships, and even societal structures if we are willing to shine our spiritual light for others to see. As we experience God's deliverance, we are privileged to share the Good News of God's love with others, extending hope to hurting people.

Matt. 5:21-22, 27-29

Anger and lust are two dangerous pitfalls that threaten all of us in one way or another. Intense emotions and desires must be dealt with from the inside out. Those of us burning with rage, lust, or some other intense driving force within us may think we can control it from the outside in. But we eventually and invariably lose control. Jesus shows how the patterns of anger and lust are serious and far too powerful for us to control alone. We need to see the truth that we are unable to control such forces on our own, confess this to God, and ask for his powerful help.

Matt. 5:43-48

When we find ourselves able to love our enemies, we can be sure that we are making spiritual progress. Loving our enemies doesn't mean we have to like them, but it does mean we must forgive them and desire what is best for them. If we harbor anger and bitterness toward others, we only hurt ourselves; such emotions keep us from making progress in our spiritual growth. God loved us while we were still his enemies (see Romans 5:8); he loves us even though we are far from perfect. Spiritual growth is not perfectionism; it is the development of the ability to follow God and shape our actions according to his good plans for us.

Matt. 6:1-4

God's priorities are very different from ours. God is clearly more interested in our quiet service to others than our outward success in worldly terms. All of us have both public and private lives, but the reward systems for each are very different. While we may succeed to some degree by becoming famous or wealthy, we will never receive further reward from God for our public success. However, if we humbly seek to help others, we will be openly rewarded by our heavenly Father. What seems private and unnoticed by other people is public, even center stage, before God.

Matt. 6:5-8

Public prayer is open to many distortions and abuses. Some individuals use majestic sounding, churchy jargon that impresses people but not God. Others think that the key to answered prayer is repetition, thus reducing it almost to the level of a chant or mantra. Both attitudes miss the mark because they assume prayer has more to do with technique than internal attitudes and realities. True heart-to-heart communication with God, whether private or public, is rewarded and will have a profound effect on our spiritual growth.

Matt. 6:9-13

Jesus gave his disciples a model prayer to follow. This prayer, however, is more than just a model for our prayers; it is a model for our lives. We are to acknowledge and praise God's supremacy and desire that his Kingdom enter into this world. We are to ask for God's will to be accomplished, both in our lives and in the world in general. We are to look to God for our daily provision. Also, we must ask for forgiveness of our sins while forgiving those who have wronged us in the past. Finally, God wants us to ask for protection from the evil temptations we face each day. Let us seek to serve God by both praying these things and living them out in our actions.

Matt. 6:12, 14-15

True forgiveness is an essential part of our obedience to God. We often experience difficulty in getting past our anger and bitterness toward those who have mistreated us. However, asking God's forgiveness for our personal shortcomings and sins is hypocritical unless we are willing to forgive others. We forfeit forgiveness from God by denying forgiveness to others. Not only is this selfish; it is also self-destructive.

Matt. 6:19-34

Jesus made it clear that living for personal gain will only lead to great anxiety. Materialism and anxiety are two enemies of spiritual growth. They often work together to lead us away from a balanced life. We need to realize that the essence of life is not found in the possession of things and that worry about the future is never helpful. By ourselves we have little power to change the future, so we must trust God to take care of us. And God does promise to provide for our needs, for he loves us and gives his children good gifts. Therefore, those who learn to trust God have no need to worry.

Matt. 7:1-5

Jesus warned against our tendency to be judgmental toward others. It is easy to hide from the sins (“logs”) in our own lives by pointing out the small failures (“specks”) in the lives of others. This kind of refusal to see the truth destroys the relationships we need for spiritual growth. It also blinds us to our own sin and its destructive consequences. To be truly helpful to others, we must first recognize that we have sin in our own lives, and then we need to deal with that sin. After humbling ourselves in this way, we will be ready to lovingly confront others about the sin in their lives.

Matt. 7:7-11

Prayer is an opportunity for perseverance. Each of the three commands (“ask,” “seek,” and “knock”) are positive habits meant to be developed. We will persist in prayer with realistic hope once we fully appreciate the kind of Father who hears our prayers. Some of us may have suffered at the hands of parents who offered us metaphorical “stones” and “snakes.” If so, we must gain a right concept of God as a Father who gives good gifts to his children. As we discover his loving character, we will be encouraged to ask him for the good gifts he promises us in his Word.

Matt. 7:15-20

The good fruit that our lives should be evidencing is “love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control” (Galatians 5:22-23). To be enslaved to our sins, however, means that we are without peace and unfruitful. As we honestly reflect on our spiritual lives, we need to examine the fruit of our lives. If they are not those that God intends for us, we need to confess this and ask God to show us how to produce such fruit.

Matt. 7:24-27

There are two kinds of life-building foundations. One foundation is as solid as rock—the foundation of faith in Jesus Christ. The other foundation is like shifting sand—the foundation of human pride and selfish endeavor. Our lives might be outwardly impressive, but if they are built on the wrong foundations, difficult circumstances will soon level what we have built. Like a fragile house of cards, our lives will come crashing down. How much better to build our lives on the solid foundation of faith in Jesus Christ. Then when the inevitable storms of life come, we will not be moved.

Matt. 8:2-4

Jesus’ healing of the leper demonstrated his ability to bring about instant physical healing in response to faith. Emotional and spiritual healing is generally a more prolonged process for us than was the physical healing of this leper. Yet both processes of healing have the same starting and ending points. The same Jesus who can effect instant healing is also the Author and Finisher of our emotional and spiritual healing.

Matt. 8:5-13

The healing of the servant of the Roman army captain has much to teach all of us. The officer understood and humbly admitted his need, believing that Jesus could heal his young servant even at a distance. Jesus marveled because such faith was rare, even among God's chosen people, the Jews. We see here that Jesus came to bring deliverance to all people, whether Jew or Gentile, man or woman, rich or poor, religious or nonreligious. With God's help we all can have hope, no matter who we are or what we have done.

Matt. 8:23-32

In this passage Jesus exhibited power over both the weather and the demonic realm. In both cases his disciples learned lessons about faith in God's incredible power. Since Jesus has the ability to calm a mighty storm and rid people of demonic influence, he can certainly calm the storms we encounter and overcome any forces of evil that come against us.

Matt. 9:1-7

The Jewish religious leaders thought it blasphemous for Jesus to claim to forgive sins. So by doing the impossible—healing the paralytic—Jesus made it clear to his critics that he also had the power to forgive sins. Implicit in his actions was a claim to deity, because only God is able to forgive sins. Knowing this truth should give us the courage to turn to Jesus for help. As God's own Son, he has the power to offer forgiveness and healing to all who trust in him.

Matt. 9:9-13

The tax collectors in Judea during the time of Jesus were seen as traitors who sold out to the oppressive Roman government. They were hated by the Jews because they used their position to extort money from their own people. Many were surprised that Jesus would even speak to such people. But if Jesus had not, we may have never had this Gospel, for the author is traditionally held to be the tax collector named Matthew in this passage. As sinful as many of the tax collectors were, some admitted their need and responded to Jesus with humility. On the other hand, many of the Pharisees clung to their self-righteousness, not recognizing their own desperate need for redemption. It is not how we appear to others that matters; it is whether or not we are willing to be redeemed from the power of sin in our lives.

Matt. 9:18-33

More and more evidence stacks up that Jesus is the Messiah. Jesus restored life to a dead girl and stopped a woman's chronic hemorrhage. Then he healed two blind men and a demon-possessed man who was unable to speak. No matter what our needs or how desperate our situations, we can always bring our needs to Christ and trust him to meet them completely. His unlimited power has proven sufficient for any situation we could possibly face.

Matt. 9:36–10:8

Jesus had great compassion for those who had no protection or guidance. So here we find Jesus training his closest disciples to help fill the need. They were to go out and use God's power to spread the Good News of the Kingdom of God to the Jewish people. They were not expected to reach everyone, but they were to make a difference among a certain group. As we seek to share our experience of the Kingdom of God with others, we cannot expect to reach everyone with the Good News. We can, however, share the message with a few, who will also share it with others. We can start a chain reaction that will touch the lives of many.

Matt. 10:14-15

Spiritual blindness carries with it eternal ramifications. Those who refuse the offer of redemption in Christ are making a huge mistake. Yet while this message seems threatening, it is also meant to bring peace to those who serve God. It shows us that there will always be some who do not welcome our message, but God will handle them. We must simply do what he has called us to do.

Matt. 10:16-26

Those of us who seek God and have surrendered our lives to him may feel like sheep in the presence of wolves. We must remember, however, that Jesus suffered much at the hands of godless people, and those who are committed to him can expect similar treatment. But if we can persevere in following God's will for us, we will receive a tremendous reward (see 5:11-12).

Matt. 10:39

The only way to find our lives is to submit ourselves to God through Jesus Christ. By living for ourselves, we may have become slaves to ourselves and to sin, for we are sinful people. By giving our lives to Jesus, we allow him to cleanse us of the sins that enslave us and show us the way to real life—a life free from the grip of sin.

Matt. 11:2-6

Doubt is a troubling reality at times. We may doubt both ourselves and others. Here even John the Baptist doubted that Jesus was the promised Messiah, the one who would come to offer physical and spiritual redemption to his people. Jesus reassured John by pointing to the good things that were being accomplished—the miraculous healings and the spread of the Good News. In the same way, our doubts can also be quieted by looking around us and seeing what Christ is doing in the lives of his followers.

Matt. 11:16-19

The religious leaders of Jesus' day wanted God to fit in with their expectations. They were not willing to repent at the message he sent through John the Baptist and Jesus. To avoid having to obey God's message, they found excuses for rejecting God's messenger and God's Son. Anytime we find ourselves making excuses as to why we cannot accept God's message, we must beware. God's Word cannot be adapted to fit our expectations. When our lives do not agree with God's Word, we should ask God to help us see the truth and change as necessary. We should never reject God's Word just because it does not agree with our lifestyle or expectations.

Matt. 11:25-30

Only when we come to Jesus as little children can we find redemption and relief. Many of us think we can work things out our own way. In doing this, however, we miss the simple truth that God alone has the power to redeem us. Children are very aware of the fact that they do not have power over their own lives. As a result, they entrust themselves to their parents each and every day. As we recognize our lack of power over our lives and over the sins that entangle us, we can surrender ourselves to God's loving care. He has all the power we need, power to redeem us and to help us break free from the tangle of sinful habits.

Matt. 12:1-8

God's standards are intended for our good; he gave them to mercifully meet the needs of his people. But his laws can also be abused through legalism. By seeking to follow God's laws to the letter it is easy to violate the very reasons that God gave his laws in the first place. God gave the Sabbath as a reminder of the covenant he had made with them, but the Pharisees became so caught up in all the Sabbath rules and regulations that they forgot its intended purpose. The Pharisees employed God's Word for restrictive and enslaving purposes rather than for spiritual freedom and health. People do the same thing today. But God wants to be merciful to us, offering hope instead of condemnation. If God had wanted to crush us with legalism, he would never have sent Jesus to die for us. He would have let us die in our sins.

Matt. 12:9-12

People who refuse to admit their own need for God are usually the first to stand in the way of someone else's spiritual growth. Instead of praising God for the miracle that Jesus performed, the Pharisees judged Jesus for breaking the Sabbath laws. To the Pharisees, it was more important to preserve their legalistic observances than to see a man healed of his deformity. They wanted to be ruled by their interpretations of the law and rejected the rule of the compassionate Messiah-King. There will be people who oppose our attempts at spiritual growth, doing anything they can to keep us enslaved to sin. We should make every effort to follow God's will for our lives, regardless of the pressures from the people who surround us. No obstacles are too great to overcome with God's help.

Matt. 12:17-21

Centuries earlier the prophet Isaiah had described the Messiah (Isaiah 42:1-4), and Matthew recognized how Jesus fulfilled that prophecy. This passage offers a powerful message of hope. Jesus the Messiah is both our servant and our leader. He is strong enough to lead and judge the nations yet tender enough to care for the weak and helpless. He is the world's hope for salvation.

Matt. 12:22-32

Only God through Jesus Christ is able to offer us the power we need for salvation and transformation. There is no other source of salvation. It is tragic that many who are in need of salvation and are seeking spiritual growth do not trust Jesus Christ and look to him first. God's way of salvation is always through Jesus Christ. It is through him that we can receive the power we need for salvation and restoration.

Matt. 12:43-45

We are subject to the influence of spiritual forces that can invade our lives. If we get rid of spiritual forces of evil without filling our lives with the Holy Spirit, we can end up "worse off than before." To be rid of what afflicts us is only half the battle. We must fill the void in our lives with God's Spirit, God's truth, and godly attitudes and actions. God doesn't want to just clean up our lives; he wants the interior of our lives to be devoted to him and filled with his Holy Spirit.

Matt. 13:2-8, 18-23

The varied responses to the "seed" of the gospel determine how fruitful each life will be. Some of us who seek spiritual renewal do so wholeheartedly, some only halfheartedly or temporarily, and some pass up the opportunity, denying they need it. If we hope to bear spiritual fruit, we must allow God to plow up the soil of our hearts and make it ready to receive his Word.

Matt. 13:10-17

Jesus' explanation for teaching with stories and illustrations relates to our ability to see the truth. Those of us who respond in faith to what we already know will be given more insight as we make spiritual progress. We who do not respond properly, however, will become more and more spiritually blind and unable to see the truth. If we are willing to see the truth, we should ask God to give us eyes with which to see and hearts that are willing to obey.

Matt. 13:24-30, 36-43

The story about the wheat and the weeds applies to those who claim to seek God. Ultimately, there are two kinds of people in the world: Some submit to God's will and experience the restoration he offers in Jesus Christ; the others, whether they realize it or not, have submitted themselves to the control of Satan. This stark but realistic contrast shows us that if we do not choose to follow Christ, we choose Satan by default.

Matt. 13:53-58

We shouldn't be surprised to find that others will ignore or discount God's work in and through our lives, saying that we are still the same people we have always been. They won't listen to us because they are too close to who we were and are not able to see who we have become through God's grace. As we share what God has done in our lives with those who are familiar with our sinful past, it may take some time to convince them of our sincerity.

Matt. 14:1-11

John the Baptist was arrested because he had condemned Herod Antipas for marrying his brother's wife, Herodias. Rather than admit his sin, Herod put John in prison, hoping to silence him. Herodias wanted John silenced too, only she was more vicious than her husband and wanted him executed. In the end, Herod was too weak to refuse his wife's request, and the prophet was beheaded. Our shame from one sin often leads us to commit greater sins. To avoid the downward spiral, we must have the courage to admit our smaller sins and problems before they grow larger. As we turn our sins and failures over to God, we can be confident that we will receive his healing help and forgiveness.

Matt. 14:15-21

Jesus fed multitudes of hungry people on more than one occasion (see also 15:32-39). This illustrates not only that Jesus is able to do the impossible but also that he is concerned with our pressing human needs. Since Jesus is committed to meeting even our most basic physical needs, how much more is he committed to meeting our spiritual needs! And notice that Jesus did not do everything himself; he used his disciples to help meet the people's needs. Jesus often meets the needs in our lives through human instruments. God may well be working through concerned friends or others who, like us, are hurting. As we are given opportunities to encourage others, we can be thankful that God has chosen to use us.

Matt. 14:22-24

Time alone to focus on our tasks and to pray is necessary if we are to preserve spiritual gains. Though we may feel we are wasting time, it is important to recharge our batteries physically, emotionally, and spiritually. If we don't, we will experience burnout. Since Jesus took time out to pray and recharge, we should never feel guilty for doing the same.

Matt. 14:25-33

Jesus walked on water and then empowered Peter, through faith, to do the same. Life is never without its occasional storms. However, when we trust God, we, like Peter, can receive God's power to make it through the storm. As long as we hold on to our faith and keep our eyes on Jesus, we will not be overcome by the storms of life. It is when we focus on the troubled waters around us and forget God's assistance that we start to sink. If we want to make continued progress, we need to keep our eyes on God.

Matt. 15:1-20

There are those who assume a self-righteous posture because they fulfill all their proper "religious" obligations, while others may not appear to be model church members. However, Jesus says that those who go through all the right motions may not necessarily be righteous on the inside. If we do all the right things and have proud and selfish hearts, we will be judged by God. If we have repented of our sin and received forgiveness in Christ, he is pleased with us, no matter what others may say.

Matt. 15:32-38

The feeding of the four thousand is both similar to and different from the previous feeding of the five thousand (see 14:15-21). In both cases Jesus pitied those in need; he took a small amount of food and fed a large number of people; he used the disciples to distribute the resources; and much more was left over at the end than they had in the beginning. Since the reason for pity was somewhat different, as were the location of the event and the number of people fed, we see that Jesus tailored his resources to meet pressing needs. We can count on God to show similar concern for us and to lend his unlimited resources to provide for us in times of need.

Matt. 16:1-4

The Pharisees had the kind of attitude that is often a hindrance to true spiritual growth. They wanted an amazing miracle to prove that Jesus was the Messiah. We make the same mistake when we demand an instant cure or supernatural intervention before we will trust God. Looking for a quick fix to a lifelong problem is also tantamount to seeking “signs in the sky.” We must be willing to trust God regardless of how long it takes for him to work in our lives. The same God who may choose to do a miracle also has the prerogative to change our lives by giving us the patience to wait on him as he transforms us day by day. Our part is to seek him and surrender our lives to him. His part is to choose how he will change our lives and how long that will take.

Matt. 16:13-17

There are many answers to the question, Who is Jesus? But only one of them is correct. The insight that Jesus is the promised Messiah and the Son of God comes from God himself. It doesn't come from any human source. If we are not assured that Jesus is the promised Messiah and the source of spiritual renewal, we need to ask God to reveal the truth to us. Seeing this truth becomes the foundation for our spiritual renewal.

Matt. 17:14-21

This account of the disciples' failure to cast out a demon teaches us a crucial lesson about the role of faith. Jesus criticized the disciples for their lack of faith in God's powerful ability to heal the boy. We don't need large amounts of faith for God to work in us; we need only a small amount, "as small as a mustard seed," to effect change. Prayer and faith in God are enough to move mountains!

Matt. 18:10-14

Many children and adults have bought the lie that they are worthless to other people and insignificant to God. Jesus indicated that his mission was to save the lost, no matter how few or how "insignificant" they were considered to be. God the Father does not want anyone to miss the opportunity for salvation in Jesus Christ. God values each one of us, no matter how painful our past or how far we have strayed. If we admit our need for him and seek to follow his will for us, we will discover how very important we are to God and the people close to us.

Matt. 19:3-12

Jesus affirmed the importance of the marriage relationship. We may find it confining to be without an “escape hatch” in marriage, but God has always intended that marriage be a lifelong relationship. Realizing that marriage is permanent and that a husband and wife become one through marriage should make us consider how much our sins affect our spouses. The sins that enslave us always harm our mates in one way or another. And even though divorce may end the conflict a couple is having, it will not correct the attitudes or behaviors that brought about the conflict. Unless we correct the root problems, we will have the same conflicts in any future relationship.

Matt. 19:16-24

The rich young man was trying to work his way to heaven. Jesus played along with this man’s shortsighted attempt to claim he was perfect. But it soon became clear that he was dependent on his material wealth and the security it bought him. His possessions had a higher priority in his life than God had. We need to guard against materialism, which often keeps people from humbling themselves and trusting Jesus Christ alone for salvation.

Matt. 19:25-26

Left on our own, we would only fall deeper into the pit of the things that enslave us. But with God’s help, the inconceivable is made possible. He can lift us out of our sad estate and give us hope and health where once despair and pain had reigned. Surrendering our lives to God is the only way to regain freedom from the sins that enslave us.

Matt. 20:1-16

The story about the workers and their pay speaks strongly about the grace of God. No matter when we begin to follow Jesus, we receive the same amount of grace from God. That may seem unfair to some; however, God in his mercy accepts all people who turn to him for salvation, no matter how early (or late) in life.

Matt. 20:20-28

The disciples were indignant at James and John's request for special recognition because they, too, wanted to achieve a high position of honor in God's Kingdom. This prideful attitude was contrary to what Jesus was teaching, and such an attitude is always detrimental to our spiritual growth. The path to becoming great in God's sight is through humbly serving others. As we receive God's grace and experience his restoration, we are then called to share God's message with others and do what we can to help them grow spiritually.

Matt. 20:29-34

Jesus' sensitivity to the needs of two blind men in the midst of a huge crowd shows that God cares very much for individuals who need him. Jesus healed the blind men because they believed in him and they asked him to. Notice that they did not listen to the discouraging remarks of the other bystanders. They persevered despite opposition and continued with their humble pleas for help. As we continue growing spiritually, we may encounter similar opposition. If this happens, we may need to swallow our pride and just keep going. We can be sure that even if others deride us, God is listening and will respond by helping us.

Matt. 21:28-32

Before we surrendered our lives to God, we were like the first son, saying no to his father's wishes and indulging our sinful desires. But later, seeing where we were headed, we may have changed our mind and obeyed our Father. Although we may have gone our own way at times, God wants us to redirect our course and return to obey him. This is in sharp contrast to the son who said he would obey and then didn't. Our change of lifestyle will show our true spiritual condition.

Matt. 22:1-10

When the king's servants brought everyone they could find, there were good people and bad people alike. The offer was open to anyone who wanted to come. So it is with heaven: Everyone is invited, and anyone can turn down the offer. Will we be like the first group of guests and suffer for our decision, or will we be like the second and enjoy what God has to offer us?

Matt. 22:33-40

To simplify our priorities, Jesus boiled down the six-hundred-plus regulations of the law of Moses into two foundational responsibilities. We are to love God with everything we are and have, and we are to love our neighbors as ourselves. To do these is to obey every other law.

Matt. 23:1-12

The Pharisees and Jewish leaders are classic examples of people who live by a double standard. They made the standards of behavior for others impossibly difficult, but they failed to keep these stipulations themselves. In spite of their shortcomings, they demanded to be called by distinguished titles. They did not realize that true greatness begins with humility and is proven by a willingness to help others. The Pharisees' pride kept them from seeing their true need for God.

Matt. 23:13-36

As a result of their hypocritical behavior, Jesus pronounced judgment on all the spiritually blind religious leaders. Their external rhetoric and ritualism were mere shams, all show with no inner reality. Such people cause great pain to others and themselves. However, there is hope for everyone—even hypocrites! Both Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, once numbered with the hypocrites, eventually found new life through belief in Jesus (see John 19:38-42). If we search for Jesus, we will find him. And if we have been hypocrites, he will change us, making our faith genuine.

Matt. 24:36-51

Jesus did not let us know when the final redemption of this evil world would come. In the meantime, we are to make good use of our time here, daily conforming our lives to God's will. Not one of us has arrived, so we need to constantly strive to imitate

Christ.

Matt. 25:1-13

The story of the ten bridesmaids reinforces the need for wise preparation and readiness for Christ's coming. Those who have readied themselves for the return of Jesus, the heavenly Bridegroom—by faith, commitment, and righteous living—will not be ashamed.

Matt. 25:14-30

This story is about using our gifts wisely, and it provides both needed encouragement and sobering reality regarding our accountability to God. Even though this parable is about money, it can, by extension, also refer to God-given abilities. God has given everyone abilities of various kinds; no one is untalented or worthless. That should encourage us. On the other hand, we are each responsible to use our abilities for God.

Matt. 25:31-46

We will all ultimately be accountable to God on Judgment Day. Not only will we be responsible for our own conduct, we will also be responsible for how we have helped others. Since Jesus identifies himself with those who suffer, we should follow his example and be especially alert to the needs of others.

Matt. 26:6-13

This woman expressed her love for Jesus the best way she knew how. The disciples criticized her wastefulness, but Jesus commended her action. There will always be someone who thinks we are foolish for expressing our gratitude to God. But we should continue to praise him because this act reminds us that our love for Jesus should take precedence over other good deeds. Our love and devotion for Jesus should motivate all that we do, regardless of the reactions of others. When we do what we can to show our love and gratitude to the Lord, he will commend our lives.

Matt. 26:14-16, 20-25

Judas thought he could hide his dealings with the chief priests, but Jesus saw right through his false front. Jesus discreetly yet openly made Judas aware that he knew exactly what was going on. Judas, however, passed up an opportunity to confess his actions and restore his relationship with Jesus. When we are confronted with our sin, will we do as Judas did and deny our involvement, or will we use the chance to turn to God?

Matt. 26:26-28

Through the activities of the Last Supper, Jesus communicated the reason why he came to earth. His body would be broken, like the bread, so that we could receive continued spiritual sustenance. His blood, represented by the wine, was the eternal payment for our sins. When we acknowledge Jesus as the Lord of our lives, we become members of his body, forgiven through his blood. There are no restrictions based on race, sex, occupation, or past failures. All who look to Jesus are forgiven through the blood he shed on the cross.

Matt. 26:31-75

Like Peter, we often go through several stages as we fall prey to our weaknesses. First we claim that we will never fail in a certain way (26:31-35). Then we find ourselves doing what we promised we wouldn't do (26:56, 69-74). Next we realize that we have failed miserably (26:75). From there we have two options: We can work to overcome our weakness and learn from the experience, as Peter did, or we can wallow in our sin and never allow ourselves to be restored.

Matt. 27:3-8

The religious leaders refused to accept the blood money that Judas tried to return. It was probably their way of denying that they were responsible for the death of Jesus. If we are not careful, we can fall into this kind of hypocrisy. Sometimes we hide behind righteous activities to conceal terrible sins. We should honestly examine our lives to see which actions are not lined up with God's desires. When we see where our lives do not conform to his will, we must confess it and ask him to help us change. Denying sin in even one area of our lives undermines our spiritual growth overall.

Matt. 27:11-26

Although he was convinced that Jesus was innocent and righteous (27:24), Pilate bowed to public opinion and political pressure. Pilate was a classic example of someone in need of redemption who knew the right thing to do but did not have the courage to follow through and risk angering others. Since it is impossible to please everyone all the time, we must make sure that what we are doing is honest and pleasing to God. We should be more concerned about sinning against God than about angering others.

Matt. 27:26-54

The narrative of Jesus' crucifixion and death records one act of brutal torture after another. Jesus was beaten, ridiculed, tortured, and killed. Thus, he can directly understand the feelings of others who have suffered or have been oppressed. Jesus can also redeem the oppressors who come to faith, as did the soldiers and their centurion at the cross. Jesus' death and resurrection were intended to bring deliverance for everyone.

Matt. 27:57-60

Joseph of Arimathea was a secret disciple who revealed his faith at a crisis point (see John 19:38). Joseph's willingness to approach Pilate, as well as his generous burial of Jesus, indicates that he took the step toward faith and a stronger commitment. What kind of crisis will it take to inspire us to devote our lives wholeheartedly to God?

Matt. 27:62-28:15

The religious leaders went to a lot of trouble to be free of Jesus' message. They spent time and energy trying to discredit him in front of the crowds. Then they plotted his murder. When they caught him, they tried to come up with witnesses and then had to convince Rome that Jesus was worthy of the death penalty. Once Jesus was dead, the leaders feared he would come back to life, either in fact or through rumor, so they got permission to seal and guard the tomb. Finally, they had to come up with a story to explain the disappearance of Jesus' body. Obviously the easier path would have been to accept Jesus' message and make the appropriate changes in their lives and beliefs. We must make sure we don't become so hardened that we, like the Jewish leaders, go to great lengths to avoid accepting the life saving message of the gospel.

Matt. 28:16-20

Some disciples received the news of Jesus' resurrection quite readily while others were more reticent. But Jesus' resurrection was not an end in itself, nor was it given for just his closest disciples. The message of new life through faith in the crucified and resurrected Christ was to be offered to all the nations of the world. Those who by faith trust Christ for salvation are baptized to display their commitment. Continual instruction in the faith helps us grow and preserve our spiritual gains.

Mark 1:1-13

Jesus demonstrated his great power through victory over Satan and his temptations. Jesus' victory over temptation should encourage us as we face temptation in our own lives. With his help, we can stand up to anything. Under our own power, we are helpless against the sins that enslave us. We can tap into God's power by making a conscious decision to turn our backs on sin (1:4) and by surrendering our lives to God.

Mark 1:16-20

We are not sure how many times Jesus had to call Simon Peter, Andrew, James, and John to follow him. On two other occasions, a similar call went out to these four fishermen (see Luke 5:1-11; John 1:35-42). Their response to Jesus' call on any one occasion, as here, seems to have been immediate. But it seems that they soon went back to their old occupation and way of life. Our faith in God will grow over time, at uneven rates, with uncertain steps. Each step of faith we take requires that we drop whatever else we are doing and follow Jesus wholeheartedly.

Mark 1:21-28

God's power to change lives was demonstrated as Jesus cast out an evil spirit. If Jesus has the power to cast out evil spirits, he certainly has enough power to free us from the sins that entangle us. We need to recognize our problems and sins, confess them honestly, and call out to him for help.

Mark 1:35-39

If Jesus, the Son of God, took time from his busy schedule to pray to his Father, how much more do we need to do so. By placing a priority on prayer, Jesus was able to persevere in his ministry and keep from burning out. We who seek spiritual growth for ourselves, and redemption for others, can hardly get by without prayer. The busier the day ahead, the more we need to meditate on God's Word and pray for his strength and wisdom.

Mark 1:40-45

Jesus displayed his power by healing a man with leprosy. Leprosy is a progressive, infectious, and crippling disease that affects the skin and superficial nerves. In ancient times, it was often considered a form of divine retribution (see Numbers 12:9-10; 2 Chronicles 26:16-23). There was no hope for a cure except by a miracle from God. In a sense, we all are "lepers," infected by the incurable disease of sin. This has made us ugly and spiritually deformed. Yet there is hope for us. We can be restored to healthy living and fellowship by the healing touch of Jesus. First, like the leper, we must realize our inability to cure ourselves. Then we can trust Jesus' power and love for cleansing and spiritual renewal.

Mark 2:1-12

Jesus came not only to heal physical problems, but also to solve the sin problem. If we have not yet come to know Jesus, we are paralyzed in spirit, as powerless to help ourselves as was this paralyzed man. If our faith is still too weak to carry us to the point of healing, the faith of “four friends” may be enough to get us there. Notice that Jesus did more than simply mouth the words of forgiveness; he showed his authority and intent with action. In the same way, we need to do more than mouth words of faith. We should also act on what God has called us to do.

Mark 2:13-17

Because of their reputed cheating and support of pagan Rome, tax collectors were considered notorious sinners by the Jews. But it was for people like this that Jesus came to bring his salvation. Levi (Matthew) proved he meant business with Jesus by bringing to him friends, colleagues, and collaborators in sin. Some may question whether a person so new and immature in his faith should be telling his story to others. But the account here illustrates the truth that our spiritual lives are strengthened when we share the Good News of God’s love with others, no matter the extent of our knowledge, skill, or experience.

Mark 2:18-22

The old wineskins of Jewish religious practice were too rigid to carry the expansive, life changing message of God’s love in Jesus Christ. In a similar way, religious activities are never enough unless they are coupled with genuine repentance. We must start by recognizing the failures in our lives and then look to the only one who is able to make things right again—God in Jesus Christ. If we look to him for help, he is more than able to forgive us and get us back on the right track. God will make our hard hearts open and pliable, like fresh wineskins, so that we can receive his gifts of grace.

Mark 2:23-28

Like all of God's laws, these laws were intended for the good of his people. When the disciples picked grain at the edge of a farmer's field, they were actually following one of the provisions God had prescribed in his laws (Leviticus 19:9-10). Yet the Pharisees, with their made-up rules and false assumptions, accused Jesus of breaking the law by working on the Sabbath. Sadly, as they pretended to uphold the law, the Pharisees actually stood counter to God's intentions. We must guard against legalism, keeping in mind that God's ultimate desire is to help and to heal.

Mark 3:1-6

This Sabbath controversy reveals two ways of dealing with anger. Anger itself is a normal human emotion; it is morally neutral. What we do with our anger is what counts. Jesus was angry at the Pharisees for making up rules about the Sabbath that stood counter to God's real intentions in the law. He used his anger constructively, not to tear people down, but to heal a man's deformed hand. The Pharisees and supporters of Herod, in their anger, plotted to kill Jesus. Anger expressed in selfish or harmful ways is always a destructive thing.

Mark 3:7-19

Despite being rejected by the religious establishment, Jesus enjoyed an ever growing following, even from places he had not yet ministered in. Nearly halfway through three years of public ministry, Jesus' popularity was at a high point. The great demands on Jesus for service may have prompted him to summon and appoint the twelve disciples who could help him carry out his ministry. Not even Jesus attempted to minister alone. In the same way, our work for Christ can be multiplied through the help of other believers.

Mark 4:1-20

Some welcome Christ's message of redemption while others reject it. The mystery of this is revealed in the stories Jesus tells about the Kingdom, four of which are given in 4:1-34. God's Kingdom refers to God's hidden reign in the world, a reign that will be made visible at the return of Christ.

Mark 4:21-25

The lamp in this illustration represents the truth about Jesus. We hide that light every time we fail to openly share our faith with others. When we reflect on our lives, we need to consider whether there are times or places where we hide our faith. God wants us to openly share God's love, his truth, and what he has done for us. If we discover that we are hiding our lights, we need to confess this to God and ask him to help us share our faith more openly.

Mark 4:26-29

Just as seeds silently grow in the soil, God gradually and relentlessly prepares people to be transformed by his grace.

We may not see God working in the lives of those we pray for, but often he is busy bringing them to a place where they realize their need for him. Ultimately we cannot change people—God does. He has the power to grant new life and spiritual growth.

Mark 4:30-34

Jesus used the illustration of the mustard seed to make another point about how God works in our lives. God's healing work may have a small beginning. We may even wonder if anything has happened at all. But as God's power and grace begin to work in our lives, we will experience significant changes for the better. In time, our transformation will be complete (see Philippians 1:6) and, just as the mustard tree grew up to shelter birds in its branches, we will make a profound impact for good on the lives of the people around us.

Mark 4:35-41

Jesus demonstrated his power over nature: Even the wind and the seas obeyed him! The disciples were awed by the power Jesus displayed. Seeing this incredible power should strengthen our faith in God. Just as he was able to calm the stormy sea, he has the power to calm the storms of our lives. We need not fear, for there is no storm so violent or powerful that Jesus is unable to calm it. We should never hesitate to cry out to him in our desperation.

Mark 5:1-20

After healing the demon-possessed man, Jesus faced opposition from the people of the nearby town. The demons had left the man and entered a herd of pigs, causing them to run wildly into the lake to be drowned. The people of the town were frightened by this and begged Jesus to leave. We may experience similar opposition when God begins to make changes in our lives. Friends and family members may feel threatened by the changes and try to stop us. If we experience such opposition, we should be neither surprised nor discouraged. We should simply continue trusting God to change us so we will be able to help our friends and family in ways they may never have imagined possible.

Mark 5:21-43

Jairus was among a minority of Jewish leaders who responded positively to Jesus. Driven by love for his daughter and by faith that Jesus could help her, Jairus risked the scorn of his peers by publicly seeking Jesus' help. In the end, we see that his humble faith paid off. Some of us avoid coming to Jesus because we are too ashamed to admit we have a problem. We are afraid to go public. If we cannot humbly admit our problem, there is little hope for our healing. We must, like Jairus, risk the scorn of friends and enemies and admit our failures and mistakes. If we do this, we can be sure that Jesus will be there to help us. With his help, no problem is too great to solve; no wound is too deep to heal.

Mark 5:25-34

Sometimes we feel so ashamed of our problems that we think God's opinion of us must mirror the social ostracism or self-loathing we have experienced. Such was the case with the woman who had been bleeding for 12 years. This hemorrhage was likely a menstrual or uterine disorder, which would have made her ceremonially “unclean” (see Leviticus 15:25-27). So, according to Jewish law, anyone who touched her would also be rendered unclean. This woman had likely lived as an outcast for some time. But she reached out to Jesus in faith and was miraculously healed. We must never allow fear or shame to keep us from approaching God for forgiveness and healing. He is waiting for us to reach out and touch him.

Mark 6:1-6

During Jesus’ visit to his hometown, he was looked upon as a mere man, a carpenter, Joseph and Mary’s boy. In short, Jesus was just a regular guy to this hometown crowd. This attitude of unbelief effectively kept Jesus from doing a more extensive ministry in Nazareth. Unfortunately for the people of Nazareth, their familiarity with Jesus bred contempt. Fortunately for us, Jesus left and went elsewhere to minister, to those who would believe in his miracles and message. Our world has tried to pass Jesus off as just another man, a good teacher, or a wise prophet. Anyone who focuses on Jesus’ humanity to the exclusion of his divinity makes a grave mistake. If Jesus is not the Son of God, there is no hope for our redemption.

Mark 6:7-13

When we experience the joy of redemption, we naturally want to share the Good News with others. Yet we are not always well received. So it was with the disciples, who were paired off and sent out to share the Good News of the Messiah’s coming.

They were told what to take and what not to take, where to stay and for how long, and what to do when rejected. In the face of rejection, they kept up the good work of preaching repentance, deliverance, and healing. As we share the healing we have experienced in our lives, not everyone will be responsive. When ridiculed or rejected, we can still press on to share our hope with others. Sharing our message may be the difference between life and death for someone in need.

Mark 6:14-29

Herod Antipas did not like being rebuked. So when John the Baptist confronted him concerning his immoral marriage to his brother's wife, the prophet paid for it with his life. Herod was refusing to see the truth about his sin and did not like to be reminded of what he had done. But his refusal to see the truth only led to an even greater sin—murder. We need to learn that our refusal to see the truth will never help things; it will only lead to even greater suffering and devastation. We would be wise to immediately act on the warnings we receive. If we don't, we are headed for even greater trouble.

Mark 6:30-34

Jesus encouraged his disciples to take care of themselves by drawing them away for rest and solitude. For the disciples to continue helping others, they needed time apart for personal reflection and refreshment. Unfortunately, their time apart was delayed by the many who followed after them. We need to make sure that our lives are balanced, too. We need time apart to recharge our spiritual and emotional batteries. As we take time to reflect, we will learn the lessons of humility and dependence on God that are necessary for our spiritual progress.

Mark 6:35-44

This miracle demonstrates an important principle: Our needs are never greater than God's supply. That's the lesson for everyone who appreciates Jesus' miraculous supply of food for more than 5,000 people. The 12 disciples should have learned this lesson through Jesus' ample provision, but they failed to do so (6:52). They should have learned that when confronted with an impossible situation, Jesus could be trusted to meet the momentary need. We also need to remember that no obstacle is too great for God. He is more than able to meet all of our needs.

Mark 6:45-52

We may lose sight of Jesus, but Jesus never loses sight of us. That's the lesson for people in "deep water" who appreciate his threefold miracle: (1) Jesus walked on water; (2) he calmed the storm; and (3) he saw the disciples' boat safely to shore (see John 6:21). Despite many such miracles, the disciples still had not realized just how powerful Jesus was. All of us can recall some time when Jesus intervened in our lives to show us how much he cares. When we begin to waver in our faith, we should recall the times when he has helped us in the past. This should give us the courage to submit our lives once again to his loving care.

Mark 7:1-13

For many of the Jewish leaders, human tradition had begun to supersede God's revealed Word. Ritual had begun to replace a relationship with God; reputation had become more important than godliness. Jesus called this hypocrisy. Our spiritual growth can succeed only if we are willing to have our hearts changed according to God's Word along with our outward actions.

Mark 7:14-23

Jesus explained that defilement does not start with our external behavior but comes from within our hearts. Most of us have tried to control our sinful natures by changing various aspects of our external behavior. The fact that this never works for long is clear evidence that our real problem lies within. We should find it encouraging that God goes right to the root of the problem; he works his healing from the inside out. By recognizing our need for internal healing, we open our lives to God's healing power.

Mark 7:24-30

By helping this Gentile woman, Jesus made it clear that his message of hope was for everyone, not just a privileged few. Jesus responded not only to the woman's humility and accurate self perception but also to her great faith and perseverance. The more we trust in God, the more he can do for us and through us. Conversely, a lack of faith and perseverance will keep us from experiencing God's healing in our lives and in the lives of our loved ones.

Mark 7:31-37

Another person may have led us to seek God and get the help we needed. In this account, a group of people apparently cared enough for this deaf man to do something about his problem. They brought their friend to Jesus and then begged Jesus to heal him. We may be the one God will use to give another hurting person hope and direction. As we share how God has helped us, and the Good News of God's power for bringing new life, we can share the gift of salvation.

Mark 8:1-9

We sometimes feel as if our prayers never get beyond the ceiling. We wonder if the hotline to God is busy and if we have been left indefinitely on hold. The truth is, God is never too busy to concern himself with the daily needs of his people. Jesus was moved by compassion to feed 4,000 hungry people, even though he was very busy with other things. There is no need so small or request so large that God will not hear and respond to it.

Mark 8:10-21

Jesus was troubled by his disciples' lack of faith and their seeming inability to learn the basic lessons he was trying to teach them. As slow to catch on as they were, Jesus still nurtured them in faith. We may tend to progress spiritually in a series of lurches and falls. When we fail, we can recover by admitting our limitations, accepting God's forgiveness, and continuing to depend on his power day by day. God will be patient with us if we are willing to continue following him and returning to him whenever we stray.

Mark 8:31-9:1

Jesus told his disciples that his ministry would lead to suffering and death. There would be no Resurrection if there were no Cross. Jesus had to suffer in order to overcome the power of sin in our world. We should be grateful that Jesus has already paid the price for our sins. If we admit our failures and accept God's forgiveness, we can be sure that God will free us from the destructive hold of sin.

Mark 9:2-13

In this amazing event, we are given a picture of what we can hope for in our own lives. Someday we will be changed to be like Christ; we will be made perfect. There may be times of struggle and despair; in such times, we can reflect on who we will become when God completes our transformation. At the same time, God wants to begin the process of leading us toward a godly and productive life right now.

Mark 9:14-29

In a moment of honest reflection, the father of the demon-possessed boy acknowledged both belief and unbelief. He believed that Jesus could restore his son to health, but he questioned whether Jesus would do so. Sometimes we feel the same way. We see how God has delivered others and believe that God is able to help, but we are afraid that God will refuse to help us. Perhaps we are afraid that God will think us unworthy of his deliverance. God never works that way. Not only is he able to help us, but he also wants to help us. All we have to do is turn to him in faith, ask for his help and forgiveness, and do what we can to follow his revealed will for us. God will do the rest.

Mark 9:30-37

The argument over who would be the greatest in God's Kingdom ran counter to everything Jesus stood for. True greatness is measured by how we serve others. That service, for the disciples, included showing loving care for all people, even a little child. We may not be tempted to turn away from little children in need, but what about the many adults who need our help? Do we turn away people who are poor, homeless, hungry, and needy? God heals our hurts so we can help others get the healing they need, not so we can rise to a higher position in society. If we fail to help the people who are in need, we are pushing Jesus right out of our lives.

Mark 9:38-42

Cooperation and peace, not cutthroat competition, must characterize our interpersonal relationships. Notice that Jesus instructed his disciples to fully and peacefully accept others who ministered in his name. He accepted those who were not in the immediate circle of disciples but were building up the Kingdom of God. So must we. If we fail to do so and cause others to lose faith, then we will suffer the painful consequences.

Mark 9:43-50

Through a series of startling statements, Jesus admonished his disciples to get rid of anything in their lives that might draw them away from God. We dare not ignore sin in our lives. Jesus' statements showed that it is vital to our spiritual well-being that sin be cut out of our lives. When we see areas of sin that we cannot control, we must bring them to God. We must ask him to help us do whatever it takes to rid our lives of sin.

Mark 10:1-12

The Pharisees were not looking for guidance when they asked Jesus about divorce; they were only looking for a way to discredit him. Jesus offered no grounds for divorce, with the possible exception of infidelity (see Matthew 19:9). In our society, many believe divorce to be a good way to deal with conflict. Most of us have discovered, however, that interpersonal conflict follows us wherever we go because it is only an evidence of much deeper problems. Marriage is not always easy; neither is spiritual growth. But both can be of great help to each other. Marriage gives us a context of accountability and loving support necessary to help us through the process of spiritual growth. As we grow spiritually, seeking God and surrendering to him, he gives us the help we need for personal growth and for reestablishing our family and marriage relationships.

Mark 10:13-22

These verses contrast two kinds of people: those who are like the little children, who came to Jesus with innocent trust, and those who are like the wealthy young man, who trusted in his wealth and was unwilling to follow Jesus. The only way we can enter the Kingdom of God is through childlike trust. As long as we think we can make it on our own, we will fail. We must begin by assuming that we are just like little children. Then we must put our lives into the hands of God. We must not trust in our abilities or wealth; only God can give us entrance into his Kingdom.

Mark 10:23-31

Most people in Jesus' day believed that wealth was a reward from God for being good. Thus, the wealthy usually enjoyed a measure of prestige. Jesus amazed his audience by showing how very difficult it was for the rich to enter God's Kingdom. Sometimes wealth and achievements can blind us to our need for God. Whenever we see this attitude in ourselves, we need to confess it to God as sin. The rich young man would have to see his need before he could be helped. Notice, however, that even this problem is not too big for God. He has ways of getting the attention of even the proud and self sufficient. Then God can change our attitudes before they keep us from receiving the treasures he longs to give us.

Mark 10:32-45

Immediately after Jesus warned his disciples of his impending suffering and death, James and John turned around and requested positions of honor and authority. They were blind to the fact that the call to follow Jesus would involve suffering and persecution. Following Jesus is never the easiest path, but it is the only path that leads to a life of restoration, joy, and fulfillment.

Mark 10:46-52

Faith brought recovery of sight to blind Bartimaeus. He had to persevere in faith despite the initial opposition he experienced from Jesus' followers. In that day, blindness was thought to be a divine curse for sin (see John 9:2), but Jesus refuted this notion by both word and deed. We sometimes face opposition to our spiritual growth. Sometimes those who claim to be God's people reject us and make us feel unwelcome because we are enslaved by our sins. Even when rejected by others, we can be sure that Jesus will never turn us away. We should persevere as Bartimaeus did, knowing that Jesus has the power both to help us overcome the sins that enslave us and to heal us.

Mark 11:11-19

The barren fig tree is analogous to spiritually bankrupt people. If the fig tree did not produce fruit as it was supposed to do, then it had no real reason to exist. So also in our faith: If our lives are not bearing the fruit of the Spirit, then our faith has no substance, and our attempt at spirituality is only a pretense. We need to ask God's Spirit to change us and cause us to become the people he wants us to be.

Mark 11:19-25

God wants us to pray for his will to be done in our lives, much as he wants us to pray for fruitfulness in his Kingdom work. The God we serve is the God of the impossible. He has the power to do miracles. We are invited to participate in bringing God's miracle-working power into everyday life. We do this by taking him at his word, truly believing his offer to intervene in our lives, and praying to him. And when we pray, we must make certain that we forgive others, for God desires to forgive us.

Mark 12:1-12

By telling this story, Jesus confronted the religious leaders with their hypocrisy. The leaders were the wicked farmers who had rejected God, the owner of his people (who were represented by the vineyard). These leaders pretended to be in touch with God, but their actions and attitudes proved otherwise. Jesus confronted them, hoping they would listen and change. God often brings people into our lives to cause us to hear and receive the truth. We would be wise to listen, unlike the proud Pharisees. If we refuse to admit our sins and mistakes, we will never be able to receive the help God offers.

Mark 12:18-27

Jesus addressed another trick question, this one by the Sadducees, who did not believe in the possibility of the resurrection after death. Again Jesus cleverly exposed the moral shortcomings of those who had the form of religion but denied its power. Knowledge alone, even of Scripture, is not enough to keep us from sin or help us break free from the sins that enslave us. We must know the living God personally and accept the help he offers. The God of the patriarchs is not the God of philosophical speculation. He is our God, active today in our spiritual lives.

Mark 12:28-34

Many think of the law, with all its commandments, as a burdensome straitjacket, antithetical to true spiritual renewal. This may have been true, in some sense, of the Judaism in Jesus' day, and it is sometimes true among people today who claim to belong to God. Jesus wanted to correct this wrong understanding of true faith. He summed up the numerous Jewish laws in two simple but profound commandments: We are to love God totally, and we are to love others as ourselves. Allowing these two truths to rule our hearts and minds will make the rest of the law fall into its proper place in our lives.

Mark 13:21-37

Jesus did not reveal when the end would come, but this should motivate us to remain alert and watchful from now until the end. And as we are unsure of the future of our world, we also are uncertain concerning the timing and difficulties we will face in our own lives. We will be completely transformed only after Jesus has returned to make us into new people. Preparation for his return must be made continually. We cannot calculate the day of his return and then plan to change just before the final event.

Mark 14:1-9

Here a woman (Mary) shows her devotion to Jesus by anointing him with expensive perfume (equal in value to a year's wages), as if preparing a king for burial. Her devotion was mocked by some of the disciples, but it was praised by Jesus as an example for all believers to follow. Our faith in God and commitment to spiritual growth often receive the criticism of others. Sometimes family members have a hard time believing we are sincere. Our friends may even feel threatened by the changes they see in our lives. We can be sure, however, that no matter what others might say, Jesus is in favor of the steps we are taking.

Mark 14:10-25

We are often shocked by the story of Judas's betrayal of Jesus. Since Judas had spent about three years in close friendship with Jesus, we wonder what could have prompted him to act as he did. Yet if we are as honest as we should be, we can see the same potential in our own hearts. Whenever we refuse to give Jesus authority over a certain area of our lives, we act like Judas. Whenever we promise to do one thing and then do another, we act like Judas. We all have betrayed God in one way or another. We should use Judas's failure as an opportunity to take a hard look at our own lives. In what ways are we betraying God?

Mark 14:27-31

Peter wasn't honest with himself when he promised that he would stay with Jesus no matter what the cost. He still did not realize that following Jesus would lead him to the foot of the cross. So when things got tough, Peter backed out of his commitment. We often do the same thing. We would be wise to consider the difficulties we may face along the journey, for Jesus never promised us an easy trip.

Mark 14:32-42

Jesus opened his heart to Peter, James, and John: “My soul is crushed with grief to the point of death” (14:34). In this way, Jesus demonstrated qualities that are important for us as well: honesty, transparency, and trust. Jesus evidently needed others for support in this hour of agony shortly before his death. If Jesus needed human support to face his trials, we must need it even more. It is important that we develop a network of relationships in which we are held accountable to our commitments. When we develop and maintain meaningful human relationships, we are creating a network of support that will help us sustain our spiritual growth.

Mark 14:35-36

Jesus expressed his true feelings as he prayed for his Father to remove the cup of suffering that he faced, but he never rebelled against God’s will. He was willing to suffer and die so that we could experience forgiveness from sin and redemption from its painful effects. And as much as we might want to escape certain occasions of suffering, we must submit all such desires to God’s will. God may lead us into some tough experiences, but as painful as they may be, we can be assured that he has our best in mind. We can also be sure that he will stand with us throughout the process.

Mark 14:53-65

Jesus himself endured injustice: He was lied about, falsely accused and convicted, and physically tortured. But, instead of returning words or blows in kind, he entrusted himself to his Father's care (1 Peter 2:23). Jesus thus modeled the kind of trust in God that we should have when we are being treated unjustly. As we experience the pain that comes from persecution, physical harm, injustice, or the sins others commit against us, we will feel violated. It is normal to feel anger, sorrow, fear, and any host of painful emotions. We are not told not to feel these; rather, we need to feel them and release them to God. As we surrender the injustices we endure to God, he can take vengeance where vengeance is due.

Mark 15:1-15

Pilate stated at least three times that he found no guilt in Jesus, yet he handed Jesus over for execution. Strong emotions on the part of the Jews and Pilate's desire to pacify them at all cost led to the punishment of an innocent man. We have a lot in common with Pilate. We often sacrifice the truth in order to please the crowd. Our challenge is to stand firm in our faith and not succumb to the world's sinful demands.

Mark 15:16-32

Jesus suffered the ultimate in humiliation and torture when he was spat upon, beaten, mocked, and nailed to a cross. Knowing that Jesus endured all this to provide for our redemption should cause us to be grateful. No matter how terrible our past, no matter how great our mistakes, Jesus has paid the penalty for our sins. Because of his suffering, we can have a true relationship with God.

Mark 15:33-41

The purpose for which Jesus came to earth, and the key thought of Mark's Gospel (10:45), can be found in Jesus' sacrificial death as a payment for our sins. At this excruciating moment, the Savior bore the pain and punishment for all the sins ever committed (John 1:29). This is truly good news! Although we are never good enough by our own merit to gain God's favor, Jesus' sacrifice provides for our redemption.

Mark 16:3-7

The women were wondering how they would ever roll the great stone from the tomb entrance when, to their amazement, they found it already gone. The tomb was empty! Notice that the women had only wanted to roll back the stone. But God had accomplished so much more: He had raised Jesus from the dead! If God can give life to a dead body, he surely can restore our lives. There is always hope. With God, all things are possible! He specializes in rolling away burdens too great for our feeble human strength to handle. And if we set out to do all we can, we will likely discover that God has already accomplished our goals—and even more!

Mark 16:9-20

Many of the disciples had a hard time believing that Jesus had risen from the dead. When they finally met the resurrected Jesus, he rebuked them for their unbelief. Then Jesus rewarded his followers as they came to believe. Faith is foundational for our salvation and redemption. As we grow in our faith in Jesus, we will discover that the power of his resurrection will touch and transform our lives. Then we will become a source of encouragement to others as we share the story of God's transforming power.

Luke 1:1-4

In this preface, Luke testified that the gospel of Jesus is based on historical facts and not on theories or myths. Speculative religions, secular philosophies, or political leaders do not meet the deepest needs of the human heart. History is filled with people who aspired to be gods, but only one was truly God. Jesus alone can meet our deepest needs.

Luke 1:5-7

Though Zechariah and Elizabeth were godly people, they were childless, and Elizabeth was well past normal childbearing years. Their situation was discouraging, even depressing, as many couples in our society can testify. To make matters worse, in their culture, childlessness was typically taken as a sign of God's curse or displeasure. Zechariah and Elizabeth were faithful in trusting God even though God seemed to be against them. This was a key to the blessings they received later on. Their example of patient perseverance is a good example for those of us who seek to grow spiritually.

Luke 1:16-17

John the Baptist's ministry was one that would turn the hearts of parents to their children (Malachi 4:5-6). His message called for personal repentance and the restoration of broken family relationships. Even though the complete fulfillment of these words is still in the future, the principle has always been true. When God is at work, even resistant hearts can be softened and families restored.

Luke 1:18-20

As godly as Zechariah was, he still could not believe the angel Gabriel's promise. From a natural frame of reference, it seemed totally impossible that he and Elizabeth could conceive a child in their old age. The consequence of even this short-term unbelief was substantial and tragic—Zechariah could not speak throughout the term of Elizabeth's miraculous pregnancy. Unbelief can have a numbing effect on our spiritual progress, as well. Confession of faith, before God and others, by lips and life, as Zechariah was eventually able to do (1:63-64), will help our faith to grow. Honestly admitting our doubts is a good place to start.

Luke 1:51-55

These words from Mary's song reflect God's priorities standing in stark contrast to the way our world thinks. How important it is, when life seems unfair and does not turn out the way we might have chosen, to realize that God's ways are often not our ways. True greatness is not measured by human success and achievement but by the depth of our sincere humility.

Luke 1:76-79

Here Jesus Christ is portrayed as light shining on those living in darkness. Hearing this metaphor, the original readers would probably have thought of a group of travelers overtaken by darkness, who were left in danger by the roadside all night. Such people, helpless to defend themselves against the attacks of robbers, would have welcomed the light of the rising sun. This is a picture of what Jesus can do for any of us who are in the darkness of sin. We move from darkness into light as we receive God's gift of forgiveness and make a personal commitment to him. As we experience new hope in Jesus, we can tell others about the light we have seen.

Luke 2:6-7

The welcome that Jesus received in Bethlehem is a good illustration of how most people respond to him today. The original manger scene was hardly an idyllic place like the ones pictured on our beautiful Christmas cards. It was probably a cold, damp, dark, dirty cave with a hollowed-out feeding trough, or manger. In the original manger scene, Jesus entered a world unfit for his royal presence. God's willingness to enter our world, darkened and dirtied by sin, is a reason to be thankful. We don't have to clean up our act first in order to make room for him. When Jesus comes into our lives, he accepts us as we are—then he works his transformation in us.

Luke 2:8-12

Encounters with the living God inevitably elicit fear. So the angels had to reassure the shepherds: "Don't be afraid!" Once the shepherds realized that God wanted to communicate with them, they were free to worship the Christ child. The fact that Jesus came in the flesh reassures us that our holy and almighty God is also a personal God. God is with us and for us. When we put our faith in the living God, his perfect love expels all fear (see 1 John 4:18).

Luke 2:29-32

Simeon's words reflect the universality of God's plan of salvation. It was a rare thing for a Jew to declare that the Messiah would bring deliverance to the whole world, not just the Jews. God reaches out to not just one ethnic group but to all people. He still brings light, life, and contentment to all who put their faith in him through Jesus Christ. God will accept any of us who are willing to turn to him for help, regardless of our background or situation in life. He is the universal Savior.

Luke 2:36-38

Anna modeled how faith in God can bring meaning to our lives, regardless of our family situation. After a relatively short marriage and the loss of a husband, most of us would have allowed bitterness to set in. Not so with Anna. Instead, she used her time and energy to serve God in the Temple. She prayed and fasted and was given the gift of prophecy. Anna accepted God's plan for her, which included seeing the Messiah she had been longing for.

Luke 2:52

Jesus, of course, did not need redemption because he was the sinless God-man. Yet it is clear that he lived out the perfect model of balanced growth from childhood to adulthood. He developed intellectually, physically, spiritually, and socially. He displayed both personal and interpersonal growth. No dimension was overemphasized, underdeveloped, or rejected. Our own lives need to be balanced in a similar way.

Luke 3:21-22

By settling upon him in the form of a dove, the Holy Spirit visibly showed not only that he identified with Jesus but that God's power was with Jesus. God the Father showed how much he was pleased with his Son by speaking directly from heaven. In Jesus, we can experience God's heavenly power upon us, his fatherly love for us, and his supreme identification with us. Thus, we, too, are God's "dearly loved," though not in the unique way that Jesus was.

Luke 3:23

Even though Jesus apparently knew from his youth what his mission on earth would be, this "son of Joseph" patiently persevered as an obscure carpenter in Nazareth until the age of thirty. He was never in a rush to accomplish his ambitious God-given task. He modeled for us the need for patience and trust in God's timing as we progress spiritually.

Luke 3:23-38

Luke's genealogy of Jesus traces his roots to the very beginning of the human race. This shows Jesus' close identification with all humanity. Jesus' genealogy is sprinkled with people known for their mistakes. Judah fathered Perez through an illicit relationship with his daughter-in-law, Tamar, and Salmon fathered Boaz through his marriage with Rahab, a former prostitute from Jericho. From Jesus' genealogy we discover that Jesus is clearly "one of us," regarding his heritage. By taking on our flesh, God in Jesus Christ became fully human, even suffering death for us. Jesus truly understands the difficulties we face.

Luke 4:1-2

Jesus was sorely tempted for 40 days, alone in the Judean wilderness. Here, as in every aspect of his life, he overcame adversity by depending on the power of the Holy Spirit working through him. This same Holy Spirit is available for believers today, for he dwells in us. The Holy Spirit within our hearts is great enough to help us resist the most tempting of sins (1 John 2:16; 4:4).

Luke 4:3-13

Jesus did not succumb to temptation, yet he fully experienced, in one form or another, every temptation known to humanity. Jesus did not sin, true enough, but in his humanity he seems to have been called to struggle as he was obedient to his Father. In this way, we see that Jesus is able to sympathize with our weaknesses (see Hebrews 4:15). When we experience temptation and recognize our human weakness, we can remember that Jesus understands and will help us overcome temptation.

Luke 4:13

Temptation by the devil is an ongoing reality. After tempting Jesus in the wilderness, Satan gave up, but only temporarily. He would save his best for later (at the cross). This time around he had to admit defeat, having exhausted his most compelling temptations to no avail. But the devil continued to try to undermine Jesus' ministry, especially through the people around him (see 11:14-22). Similarly, if we withstand a certain temptation at one point, Satan will eventually try again, either in the same area, or in another. We need to constantly look to God to help us.

Luke 4:18-21

When Jesus said that the words of Isaiah 61 had come true that very day, he was making a direct claim to being Israel's long-awaited Messiah. Isaiah's words beautifully characterized a major focus of the Messiah's ministry. The Messiah would heal people who were brokenhearted and in distress. He would deliver those who were captives to the power of sin. He would give sight to the physically and spiritually blind. He would bring triumph to the downcast. What a wonderful promise for all who believe in him.

Luke 4:28-30

The response of this hardhearted hometown crowd in Nazareth to Jesus' remarks is a classic example of what happens when spiritual pride and doubt are mixed with anger. When Jesus challenged their unbelief, their surface appreciation of his ministry gave way to outrage. They wondered how this hometown boy could claim to be a prophet. Their attempt at mob violence showed how hysterical and resistant to the truth even religious people can be. We need to overcome pride and doubt if we want to receive all God has promised us. God does not heal us until we put our faith in Jesus Christ.

Luke 4:33-37

Jesus demonstrated his ability to deliver people from demon possession. Luke and the other Gospel writers repeatedly affirmed Jesus' power in this arena. In that day, being possessed by a demon was believed to be the greatest infirmity one could suffer. By his absolute control over demons, Jesus was overruling all the adversity that this world and the world below could heap on humanity. Even today, no evil or adversity is too great for God's power to overcome.

Luke 5:4-10

The disciples were certainly persistent in their fishing, but doing things their way just wasn't enough. As soon as they followed Jesus' advice, as crazy as it sounded, they experienced abundant success. We may be struggling along on our own. We may be diligent, hardworking, and disciplined. However, if we don't do things God's way, no amount of hard work will bring the desired results. We may think the truth found in God's Word seems crazy. But as we follow God's plan obediently and with his gracious help, we will experience the abundant life he promises.

Luke 5:30-32

In order to receive Jesus' help, we must first recognize and admit how helpless we are on our own. Jesus' greatest priority was ministry to the so-called notorious sinners (social outcasts) because they admitted their lowly, helpless position. The Pharisees were also sinners, but they refused to admit their sin. Because of their self-righteousness, pride, and self-sufficiency, Jesus could do nothing for them. When we recognize our need and admit our failures to God and others, Jesus will reach out and help us.

Luke 6:6-11

Jesus often healed people on the Sabbath, and this angered his opponents. The religious leaders saw healing as a violation of God's command that they rest on the Sabbath day. While we are to maintain balance in our lives, taking a day to rest each week, God never rests from his healing work in our lives. God wants to heal us every day. As we continually seek God, we must always be open to the healing touch Jesus wants to give us.

Luke 6:12-16

Jesus spent an entire night in prayer before choosing his 12 disciples. Despite the care he took, however, among them was Judas Iscariot, who would betray him. Jesus did not make a mistake; Judas was chosen purposely and prayerfully. In the same way, when we carefully follow what we know to be God's will and pray earnestly about our decisions, we can be certain that God will use our decisions for his ultimate good, though it may sometimes seem as if things are going all wrong.

Luke 6:20-26

When Jesus spoke about Kingdom values, he left no question about the importance of priorities in life. He pronounced sorrows to shake people out of their selfishness and disobedience to God. He pronounced blessings to awaken joy and gratitude in those who depend on God. By his strong words, Jesus helped people see their true spiritual condition. How we live here on earth will determine our eternal wealth or lack. We must make sure that we are not satisfied with earthly riches to the neglect of our heavenly rewards.

Luke 7:1-10

The qualities possessed by the centurion are key elements for anyone wishing to receive God's greatest blessings in life. The centurion was unusually compassionate to people of a lower social class and people of another race and religion. He was humble and recognized his own unworthiness despite being a man of authority. Nonetheless, he wholeheartedly placed his faith in Jesus. Jesus himself marveled at such faith and answered the centurion's request. Sometimes true faith is best found in places we least expect to find it: among the unchurched and the outcasts, who recognize their need for help and cry out to God in their helplessness. It is this kind of faith that is necessary for true spiritual growth.

Luke 7:11-15

By raising the young man from the dead, Jesus showed his compassion for people experiencing great loss. This woman had previously lost her husband, and now her only son was dead. This miracle shows us that no situation in our lives is beyond the restoring power of God. The God who can raise the dead can certainly bring health and restoration to our lives.

Luke 7:18-19

This account of John the Baptist shows that even the strongest believers will go through times of discouragement and doubt. John had been imprisoned and was facing death (Matthew 11:2). Jesus had deep respect for John (Luke 7:28), even with his doubts. John's questions were asked honestly, in a time of acute suffering, so Jesus affirmed him and answered him accordingly. God invites us to do as John did and bring our doubts to Jesus, who will direct us to the truth that can inspire our faith and confidence.

Luke 7:24-28

Because of his strength of character, John the Baptist did not allow himself to be squeezed into anyone else's mold. Rather, he committed himself to fulfill his role as a prophet and forerunner of the Messiah. He knew the boundaries of his role and fulfilled his God-given purpose on earth. John is a good example for us in this regard. God has a purpose for each one of us. As we discover what our role in his plan is, following the vision he gives us will bring us contentment. As we follow his will, he will always be with us, guiding and strengthening us along the way. Trying to be someone we were never intended to be only slows our spiritual growth and our progress.

Luke 8:16-17

Just as lamps expose everything else to the light, so God will someday bring our thoughts out into the open. Our thoughts and habits are already known to God (see Psalm 139:1-4); someday others will know them, too. As we are open, honest, and transparent in confessing our shortcomings, God works to transform our thought life and behavior now. Then when our lives are exposed to all, they will bring glory to God instead of shame on us.

Luke 8:26-37

The life of this demon-possessed man was a complete disaster. Desperately in need of healing from demonic influence, he was a physical and emotional wreck, an embarrassing social outcast. As hopeless as his case was, Jesus had, and still has, the power to break satanic bondage and free him. No matter what obstacles we face, Jesus desires our complete freedom from the influence of the evil one. He will help us make progress toward that goal if we call upon him.

Luke 8:43-44

Luke, with his background in medicine, noted that medical doctors had been able to do nothing for this woman's chronic illness. By faith, God's power did the impossible. As with many of Jesus' miracles, this incident shows that one who trusts in God can experience hope where previously there had been only despair. Even that which may seem beyond the scope of most doctors is still well within the normal range of miracles that God does for people who look to him in faith.

Luke 9:10-17

This episode demonstrates, once again, Jesus' desire to meet needs at various levels. In feeding the five thousand he supplied even their most basic need—food. Before this incident, Jesus had been dealing primarily with problems that called for physical healing. Notice also that during this incident, Jesus met the intellectual and emotional needs of his disciples. God will ultimately meet our spiritual need for a right relationship with him. The restoration that Jesus the Messiah offers touches every area of life.

Luke 9:23-27

In this classic confrontation of wills, Jesus shows the critical importance of submitting our wills to God's will. Jesus has a prior claim on the lives of his followers, a claim that supersedes all personal conveniences or desires. Clinging to the conveniences of our world and the desires of the flesh may destroy our very lives. Paradoxically, "giving up" one's life in a relationship with God through Jesus is the only sure way of finding ultimate meaning and purpose. This teaching stands opposed to our natural inclinations and can only be accepted by faith. But if we are willing to submit our wills to God's will, we will begin to experience the meaningful life that God wants us to have.

Luke 9:28-36

While initial impressions do mean a lot, and while many judge others based on appearances, things often are not as they initially appear to be. At the Transfiguration, Peter relied too much on first impressions and outward appearances, so he jumped to some foolish conclusions. Here two great Old Testament prophets appeared to be on a par with Jesus. Yet God's voice and later events confirmed that Jesus, unlike Moses and Elijah, was in reality God himself. To progress spiritually, we need to suspend our human judgment and listen to God.

Luke 10:10-16

The disciples were given the ambitious task and privilege of sharing the message of the Messiah throughout Israel. Their ministry would not always be well received. One who follows Jesus will encounter similar setbacks, such as rejection, opposition, or ridicule. As we begin to share our faith with others, we may find we are not always welcome. We should not be concerned, however, for the Lord calls us to persevere, and he will bless our efforts among other people.

Luke 10:21

Many of us have spent years looking for wisdom that will help us. We may have begun to think it is hard, if not impossible, to come by. Often the reason we find true wisdom so elusive is that it is divinely and simply revealed to “the childlike.” The greatest of wisdom comes from God himself. God’s wisdom can be gained by simply trusting him day by day, as children tend to do.

Luke 10:25-37

The story of the Good Samaritan teaches that true love for God will express itself in caring for the needs of others. According to the Jewish religious leaders in Jesus’ day, the person least likely to help the wounded man was the Samaritan. When the despised Samaritan proved to be the good neighbor, Jesus was turning the tables to show that concern for others has no such boundaries. When God has done a work of transformation in our lives, we become the most effective instruments in reaching others with similar needs. Sharing the Good News is a responsibility we receive when we experience God's powerful help in our lives. As we share the Good News, we will experience great joy as others gain hope and find new life in Christ. We will also find our own faith strengthened as we remember what God has done on our behalf.

Luke 10:38-42

There is a difference between being spiritually committed to God and being preoccupied with our religious practice. This story about Mary and Martha illustrates the difference. Martha was so busy doing for others that she had no time or energy left for simply being with Jesus. Mary, on the other hand, took time out to listen to Jesus. In all her doing, Martha even became irritated at Mary for not being equally busy. Our religious practice needs to be born of love for Jesus from a devoted heart. We dare not just keep busy doing good things if we have no time to sit at Jesus' feet and listen to him.

Luke 11:4

God's forgiveness of us and our forgiveness of others are inextricably linked together. To fully experience God's forgiveness, we must forgive others. Conversely, an unforgiving spirit hinders our ability to enjoy the freedom found in God's forgiveness. To harbor anger and an unforgiving spirit when God has forgiven us so much is not only hypocritical, it is a roadblock to our spiritual growth.

Luke 11:4

The honesty of this prayer recognizes our own weakness and vulnerability to temptation. The prayer of faith asks for life's circumstances to lead away from rather than through temptation. As a model prayer, this principle is especially important when we are seeking victory over an area of our lives where sin has gained a foothold. Spiritual renewal involves not only recognizing our own shortcomings and sins but also avoiding situations that might lead to temptation and a fall.

Luke 11:8-13

God wants us to approach him with shameless persistence. The commands to ask, seek, and knock are all given in the present tense, emphasizing continuous, persistent action on our part. To practice this quality in our prayer life, we must first have a personal relationship with the Giver of all good gifts. Through faith, we can have great expectations from our relationship with God. He is good—gentler and kinder than any human father—and he wants us to be redeemed.

Luke 11:14-23

In these verses, Jesus was accused of being an ally of Satan. Through Jesus' words and actions, however, it became clear that these accusations were false. Unseen powers of darkness are agents of Satan's kingdom and are behind a great deal of human bondage. When we understand this, then "straddling the fence" between living for God and living for ourselves is no longer an option. Those of us who seek God and surrender to him leave no room for neutrality or living lives of moral compromise. Not to decide for God in Jesus Christ is to decide for Satan and his world of bondage. Only through uncompromising faith in Jesus Christ can we achieve victory.

Luke 12:6-7

If God cares for even the smallest sparrow, then he cares even more for us. If he cares enough to count the hairs on our heads, then he cares even more about the thoughts and feelings inside. Dwelling on this reality can help us when we feel depressed or lonely. The most powerful and important person in the universe cares deeply and personally for us.

Luke 12:13-21

Jesus continually emphasized the dangers of materialism. Materialism is not just a problem for the rich people Jesus encountered or for the characters in his stories. The tendency to desire more of everything is endemic to human nature. Notice that Jesus was concerned not so much with how much wealth we possess but with how much our wealth possesses us. True freedom and contentment cannot be found in the things we own. These gifts are freely given to us as we humbly turn to God for his gracious help.

Luke 12:22-31

True freedom and contentment are found by depending exclusively on God. The argument here confronts the worthlessness of spending time worrying about things God has already taken care of. Since neither animals nor plants worry about food and clothing, neither should we. As God takes care of them from day to day, so also God will take care of us while we seek his Kingdom. Knowing this allows us to enjoy life day by day.

Luke 12:32-34

The things we value most and spend time and money pursuing demonstrate where our heartfelt attachments and personal identities can be found. Our checkbooks and date books are barometers of our hearts' condition. If we truly value God's Kingdom and trust God to provide for our needs, that will be evident by our willingness to give generously to those in need. If we are afraid or unwilling to give to others, we need to confess this to God and ask him to help us trust in his provision.

Luke 13:10-13

Jesus cared for social outcasts, for those who were afflicted, and for those in spiritual bondage. This handicapped woman was hurting in all three respects. Jesus healed this woman who had given up all hope for a new life. He can do the same for us as we seek God and surrender to him.

Luke 13:22-30

Appearances can be deceiving. But God is not fooled—he knows the real intent of our hearts. We can go to church, teach Sunday school, or sing in the choir and, like the religious hypocrites of Jesus' day, still lack a real relationship with God. Being real, not merely religious, is what God desires of us. God will judge religious hypocrisy, and he will honor honest attempts to obey him and know him better—no matter how many times we may fail.

Luke 14:12-24

This story about the great feast illustrates one of the major themes in Luke's Gospel. God extends his grace and blessing to the poor and the afflicted of society, who in almost every case are ignored or rejected. Extending mercy to such people will be rewarded by God. An important step in following Jesus is our willingness to help others less fortunate than we.

Luke 14:26-33

We need to count the cost regarding both our decision to follow Jesus and our commitment to discipleship. If commitment to Jesus is more valuable to us than our sins, we will be motivated to seek him and ask him to redirect the course of our lives. If we cannot give up the pleasures of sin, we will end up compromising our commitment to Christ and undermining our spiritual growth.

Luke 15:1-2

Jesus attracted many of the outcasts of Jewish religious and social life. Perhaps this was because he was the only one who did not despise and reject them. Jesus preferred these downcast people because they were aware of their sinfulness and approached God with humility. In contrast, the religious leaders, who were outwardly moral but inwardly proud, were not at all attracted to Jesus. To this day, religion can still hinder true spiritual growth. Religious pride and self-righteousness will keep us from humbling ourselves enough to seek God and surrender to him.

Luke 15:3-10

The stories of the lost coin and the lost sheep show God's grace toward those who have strayed and his great joy in finding them. Though our past may be tarnished, we are extremely valuable in the eyes of God. This value is reflected in the symbolism of the coin and sheep (valuable commodities in that day). The fact that the owner would stop everything else to search for the one lost shows even more how valuable we are to the one who owns us.

Luke 15:11-32

The story of the lost son wonderfully illustrates the theme of Luke's Gospel (19:9-10) and the keys to spiritual renewal. We may have been like the younger son, who chose a life of sinful pleasure. With time, however, we discovered that we became a slave to our sinful and selfish lifestyles. We may have awakened to the reality that our lives were far from what we or God had hoped for. Seeing that truth may have caused us to redirect the course of our lives. Or we may have been more like the older brother who spent his life trying to earn the love that was freely offered. If this is the role we played, we must see the truth that God loves all his children. We must not refuse to forgive and accept those who have been forgiven for things we never dared to do wrong. We must humble ourselves to admit our own sins of self-righteousness and pride, which separate us from the Father's love as much as any sins of the flesh.

Luke 15:20-24

The father's great compassion for his younger son portrays God's response to anyone who repents. Like the father in this story, God waits for the sinner to come to his senses and return of his own volition. The waiting father, however, does not wait for his returning son to clean himself up. He welcomes him back as he is. The father runs to his penitent son, hugs and kisses him, and throws a party over his return. God actively seeks those who have strayed in their walk of faith.

Luke 15:25-30

God asks us to share his great concern for those who are helpless and lost and to be willing to carry the message of hope to them. The older brother in this story is a significant character because his selfish attitude is shown to be sinful and self-centered. The father in this story demonstrates God's attitude toward people who are lost. God desires our restoration more than anything, whether the people around us like it or not.

Luke 16:1-13

This story teaches the importance of using our material possessions for good purposes. If the shrewd accountant is commended for cleverly using his talent for winning friends and influencing people, how much more the honest steward who dedicates all to God. Using material possessions and God-given talents merely for personal enjoyment, with no concern for others, is wrong. That may mean that our possessions have possessed us or that our goods have become our gods.

Luke 16:19-31

In this story we are shown the consequences of selfishness. Insulated by all the material comforts of life, the rich man never reflected on his spiritual needs or his shortcomings, and he was consigned to hell. The beggar Lazarus, however, lacked basic material needs and suffered physical pain in his lifetime, but he was prepared for eternity. Death proved to be the great equalizer, effecting a reversal of fortune for these two. God wants us to have the proper attitude toward money and possessions and to use them unselfishly to help others.

Luke 17:1-4

Knowing when to forgive and when to confront is critical. Jesus taught that forgiveness is to be freely and frequently extended to others, with no strings attached. If our friends are acting in ways clearly counter to God's will, we need to confront them for their own good. Sorrow awaits the person, however, who puts temptation in the way of others. Those who lead others astray will be held accountable by God.

Luke 17:11-19

The story of the ten lepers illustrates Jesus' great compassion for the hurting and his desire to make them whole. Only one of the ten lepers returned to say thanks, and that one was a Samaritan. While God freely offers his healing and restoring power to us, we should never take it for granted. Part of maintaining our spiritual gains is to regularly thank God specifically for all the ways he has blessed our lives.

Luke 18:1-8

Many of us have experienced injustice at the hands of some authority figure. This story contrasts God to the unfair judge and makes the point that even if life is unfair, at least God is fair. If even an unjust judge will answer the pleas of a persistent widow, how much more will a just God respond to those in need who pray to him in faith. When trials and challenges make it seem as if life is unfair, we can still trust God to deliver us. Seeking God in prayer requires patience and persistence, but it always pays off in the end.

Luke 18:10-14

The Pharisee in these verses did not have an accurate self-perception. He looked upon himself as better than others; his pride hindered his ability to see himself or others as God did. He is a good example of what we are like when we refuse to see the truth. Most of us are guilty of ignoring our own sins by pointing a hypocritical finger at someone worse off than we are. Some of us have hidden behind the respect we command in our community. God sees the heart and will reward us (forgive us, heal us, aid us in spiritual growth) according to our humble faith. The tax collector in this story, with humble and honest self-awareness, was well on his way to true spiritual renewal. The Pharisee was headed for spiritual disaster.

Luke 18:15-17

Children are naturally trusting, and God wants our relationship with him to be driven by that kind of simple trust. Any other kind of “faith” is inappropriate and ineffective. Childlike faith is a gift from God that may take time for him to restore in us, especially if we have been hurt by others. God desires our childlike faith in him so that he can usher us into the abundant life he has for us. If this faith is hindered because of past hurts, we need to release these to God and ask him to make our hearts childlike once more.

Luke 18:18-23

Our true spiritual condition is not so much evidenced by our religious activities as by what we depend on for security. Here Jesus exposed a wealthy young man’s dependence on his possessions. In doing this, Jesus was bringing him face to face with a common human problem—loving the things of this world more than God. We don’t know whether or not this young man ever repented of his attachment to his belongings, but each one of us is faced with the same choice. Only by renouncing our dependence on earthly wealth will we be able to receive lasting spiritual treasure.

Luke 18:31-34

Jesus here predicted the suffering he would go through on the way to the Cross. While the pain and disgrace he would experience were extreme, he was willing to accept them as necessary parts of the process toward the goal. The process of spiritual growth often involves pain and sacrifice, but God promises joy to follow. Sometimes reversing patterns of former sinful behavior can be extremely difficult. This can be discouraging, so it is essential that we keep our focus on the joy that is promised. That can make the pain God allows into our lives worth the sacrifices we make.

Luke 18:40-43

Jesus would not have healed him had the blind man not trusted in Jesus' power to do so. On the other hand, it was not simply the blind man's faith that healed him. Faith heals to the extent that it is clearly focused on the proper and powerful object of faith—God in Jesus Christ. Our redemption is based not on our own power or our faith but on our loving God, who has the power and desire to heal us. Our part is to look to him for help.

Luke 19:1-10

The story of Zacchaeus beautifully illustrates God's acceptance and restoration of a repentant sinner. After admitting his failures to God, to himself, and to others, Zacchaeus was willing to repay the people he had wronged. Making restitution to those we have harmed or cheated is crucial unless seeking to do so will only cause further injury to people we have wronged. In such a case, it is enough to admit our wrongdoing to God, to ourselves, and to another person.

Luke 19:9-10

A central theme of Luke's Gospel is Jesus' passion to find and restore those who are lost and alienated from God. This priority has been on the heart of God since the first sin in the Garden of Eden. Immediately after Adam and Eve sinned, it was God who sought them out as they hid in fear. He restored fellowship with them and offered them a way of redemption from their sin (Genesis 3). The work of Jesus on the cross represents the culmination of God's plan for forgiveness, hope, and restored fellowship with God.

Luke 19:11-27

This story teaches the principle of stewardship—our accountability before God to wisely use the gifts, abilities, and possessions he has entrusted to us. To wisely use what God has given will result in generous rewards; to refuse to do so will bring a stern reprimand from God. Whatever opportunities and resources God gives us—whether time, money, talents, or relationships—we are to multiply in the lives of others.

Luke 19:45-48

Jesus came to show God's love for the world. However, this same Jesus who would give his own life to demonstrate God's love did not tolerate sin. Jesus openly expressed his anger toward the sin of those who misused God's Temple. Love and accountability are compatible. God loves us enough that Jesus died on the cross. God also loves us enough to chastise us for our sins. If we are engaging in sins or misusing our bodies (the temple of God's Holy Spirit) God will hold us accountable. We must confess our sins and forsake them.

Luke 20:9-18

No one likes being confronted. The Jewish religious leaders were no exception. They didn't like God's message, so they killed the messenger. That was true of the farmers in the story, of the religious leaders throughout Israel's history, and of all who refuse to see the truth. When we choose to deny the truth, there is not much others can do. Sometimes the truth can break through when someone speaks plainly but indirectly. Nathan did this effectively with David by telling him a story that motivated David to repent of his sin (2 Samuel 12). Yet some people who refuse to see the truth, like Jesus' listeners, will resist to their dying day.

Luke 21:1-4

God has an altogether different standard by which to measure giving and givers. With God, attitude counts more than amount, so this widow was praised by Jesus. A generous person is not one who gives conveniently and comfortably out of abundance. A generous person in God's eyes is one who risks all, sacrifices cheerfully, and gives without demanding attention or expecting a reward. Whether it's our time, talents, or money, God wants us to give everything to him.

Luke 21:16-17

What happened to Jesus leading up to the Cross, and what would happen to his disciples afterwards, illustrates an important principle. Family and friends are not always overjoyed at the prospect of our changed lives. Our faith in Jesus, as well as our freedom from sin, may threaten the status quo. Often those closest to us become the greatest source of hurt and misunderstanding as they resist what we know is best for us. As we become aware of this, we will not allow them to slow us down. In time, our faithful example may lead them to seek spiritual renewal too.

Luke 21:34-36

This charge follows a lengthy prophecy about the coming days of destruction (21:5-31), and it illustrates the biblical purpose of prophecy. Prophecy is never given simply to satisfy the curiosity of those who wonder about God's plan for the future. Prophecy is primarily a call for believers to repent, stay alert, and prepare spiritually for Christ's return. As we await that day, God warns about the danger of a life controlled by sin. We only fool ourselves if we think we have all the time in the world to get ready. If we continue to put off until tomorrow the repentance we need to do today, we will be sorry one day!

Luke 22:3-6

At the deepest level, the brokenness, bondage, and temptation to sin are a result of Satan's influence. But Satan's involvement does not excuse human sin. Whatever role Satan may have in enticing us to sin, we are still accountable for our choices. God offers us a way of escape if we turn to him in times of temptation. God is never thwarted. Jesus' death (at the hands of Satan) was part of God's plan all along. No matter what Satan does to harm us, God is able to use Satan's plans for evil to work God's good plan of deliverance for us and his world. Since Jesus defeated Satan at the cross, we now have access to the power to resist Satan's temptations. We should seek God and surrender to him each time we are tempted.

Luke 22:20

The cup of wine shared by Jesus and his disciples symbolized the blood of Jesus, which would institute the New Covenant (see Jeremiah 31:31-34). Jesus Christ was the sacrificial Lamb of God, who has taken away the sins of the world (see John 1:29). Without this provision for sin once and for all, we have no peace or serenity. With it, we have an open invitation to receive God's gracious forgiveness. We can now rest secure in God's grace, which allows us to remove the guilt of our past.

Luke 22:24-30

This upper room discourse contrasts Jesus' humility and servant's heart with the selfish intentions of his twelve closest followers. In going to the cross, Jesus showed his disciples what it meant to be a servant-leader. The disciples' desire for a special place at God's table was not what Jesus had intended to teach them. Jesus calls us to put the needs of others before our own and asks that we serve others rather than expect to be served. Our lives should be characterized and motivated by humility.

Luke 22:31-34

We see that Simon Peter, along with Judas (see 22:3-6), was influenced by Satan to break his commitment to Jesus and found his life careening out of control. While it must have pained Peter to hear that he would deny Jesus, Jesus held out to him the hope of repentance and restoration. Jesus knows when we will betray or deny him, and he makes gracious provision for that. Though we may have been "sifted" by Satan, it is never too late to turn back to Jesus.

Luke 22:39-46

Jesus' prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane reflected the awesome task before him: He was about to shoulder the sins of the world. He persevered through fear and faith to submit to God's sovereign will. His absolute commitment to God is an example for us of prayer and perseverance. Jesus could have selfishly seized the privileges of deity and avoided the cross (see Philippians 2:6-8). Instead, he was willing to surrender to the will of his Father in heaven to accomplish the task set before him. Although our challenges in life are not of this magnitude, there will be times when what God calls us to do seems to be more than we can face. At such times, we, too, need to surrender our wills and accept the will of our Father in heaven. God will help us bear the pain of dying to ourselves and will reward us with new life.

Luke 22:54-62

Though Peter believed he could never stoop so low (22:31-34), he denied Jesus completely when the heat was on. Peter not only disappointed Jesus, he also disappointed himself; but even then, all was not lost. His experience led to genuine sorrow and repentance. Peter's threefold denial was followed by a threefold affirmation and his restoration to full-fledged service (John 21:15-19). Later, Peter became the leading spokesman of the early church, powerfully proclaiming the message of the risen Christ. Only through complete forgiveness by God could Peter have so effectively recovered from the depths of despair.

Luke 23:13-25

Pilate initially saw through all the lies of the Sanhedrin. Yet he did not act according to these convictions. He acquiesced to political expediency and moral compromise to save his job. In seeing Jesus as a political threat, Pilate denied him his human dignity and rights. Often the truth does come out, vindicating the innocent person, but not before a price has been paid. Telling the truth and doing the right thing are always crucial.

Luke 23:32-34

Jesus forgave those who nailed him to the cross. Here in the most unjust situation in history, forgiveness was extended without limit. If Christ forgave in this way from the cross, no sin we've committed is too great for his forgiveness. As we experience his forgiveness, we are freed to forgive those who have sinned against us. Christ enables us to release the bitterness and resentment, which can only imprison us. His forgiveness empowers us to be forgiving people—forgiving ourselves as well as those who have hurt us.

Luke 23:40-43

The piercing self-examination of the criminal crucified next to Jesus was the prelude to his salvation. His attitude stands in stark contrast to the self-sufficient bitterness and cynicism of the other criminal, who died in bondage to sin and despair. It is never too late to choose to turn to Jesus for salvation.

Luke 24:1-12

During the arrest and trial of Jesus, most of the disciples ran away. They did not have the power or courage to face those who crucified Jesus. After the Resurrection, as we read in the book of Acts, a new Power filled them, giving them both the courage and strength to go into the world with God's Good News. The Resurrection is both a historical fact and an experiential power. This Power, the Holy Spirit, is greater than death itself and is more than able to help us overcome the sins that enslave us. As we experience Christ's resurrection in our lives, we will enjoy victory over temptation and power to live free of bondage.

Luke 24:13-24

The two disciples on the road to Emmaus were obviously deeply discouraged and grieved by the events of the past few days. They did not fully comprehend who Jesus was or how God would turn their pain into joy. At the moment Jesus revealed himself, they were lifted out of their grief to become people who would help change the world. By meeting and speaking with the resurrected Messiah, their despair turned to joy, their doubt to faith, and their confusion to confidence in the fulfillment of Scripture.

Luke 24:36-49

Jesus is alive and well, yet this was not immediately evident to his first followers in the upper room. They were banded together in their grief and pain when the living Christ appeared. Jesus is still alive today. He can calm our fears and doubts. The task of spreading the Good News was an overwhelming job for the first-century believers. Through the promised Holy Spirit (see Acts 2), they received the power to spread the Good News and become living witnesses of God's transforming power. We have the same power available to us today through the Holy Spirit.

John 1:1-13

The same God who created the universe (1:3) is able to create new life within us. The light of life that exposes and drives away the darkness of the human race (1:4-5) is the same light that brightens the dark corners of our world. This true Light of the World and source of all life is also the source of our spiritual renewal.

John 1:14-18

The true Light of the World (1:1-9) became a human being, Jesus Christ. Through Jesus, who was both fully God and fully human, we can know what God is like and can enjoy a relationship with him. Jesus Christ came to bring us God's forgiveness and to reveal God's truth to us. God's forgiving mercy says, "I forgive you for your wrongs; I love and accept you freely for the person you are." His truth says, "I will show you what is true about me, about life, about yourself and others."

John 1:19-28

John the Baptist was a messenger of repentance. He himself was not the true light; he merely pointed to the one who was (1:6-8, 26-27, 30-31, 34). Likewise, those of us who have received Christ reflect God's light and point the way to him, the true light. We should not draw followers to ourselves any more than John did. We are mere beggars telling other beggars where to find food. When we lay aside pride in our achievements and abilities, as John the Baptist did, we are better able to serve Christ by showing others the way to him.

John 1:21-23

In the religious leaders' minds, there were four options regarding the identity of John the Baptist: He was either (1) the Prophet foretold by Moses (Deuteronomy 18:15), (2) Elijah (Malachi 4:5), (3) the Messiah, or (4) a false prophet. John denied being the first three personages. The leaders kept pressing John to say who he was because people were expecting the Messiah to come (Luke 3:15). But John emphasized only why he had come—to prepare the way for the Messiah. They wanted to know who John was, but John wanted them to know who Jesus was.

John 1:29-31

Jesus was a perfect picture of God and a perfect teacher of God's truth. Here we see that he was also the perfect sacrifice—the Lamb of God. The Old Testament sacrificial system required that an unblemished lamb be slain on the altar in place of the people. Through its death the people could be forgiven of their sins and given a fresh start. By dying on the cross, Jesus fulfilled the requirements of that sacrificial system completely and forever. He is the Lamb of God who takes away our sin. He gives us a chance for a new start, no matter how terrible our past.

John 1:40-42

Once Andrew had met Jesus and realized who he was, he was quick to share the Good News with others. Here we see him rushing off to find his brother, Simon, whom he immediately brought to Jesus. When we experience God's power in our lives, we should be just as eager to share our newfound hope with others. This is an essential part of our spiritual growth. As we share the Good News of God and his power to deliver, we will give great hope to others. We will also be encouraged to persevere when we remember all the great things God has done for us.

John 2:1-12

Jesus was at a wedding celebration with family and friends when the wine ran out. So Jesus turned the water from six stone water jars into enough wine for the rest of the celebration. This abundance of wine might seem dangerous to some. But one truth should be encouraging for us all: Jesus wanted the people at this wedding to have a good time. Even though his life's mission was a very sobering one, he valued the joy of people at a wedding feast. God wants us to live joyful lives as well. He may call us to do some painful things in the process of life, but his ultimate goal for us is a life filled with joy.

John 2:13-16

Jesus was angry at those who turned the Temple courts into a marketplace of unjust profit. People were forced to buy "approved" sacrificial animals at exorbitant prices. They also were required to exchange their currency for Temple currency at inflated rates. Jesus cleared the Temple with a whip to demonstrate God's anger at those who abused the public trust and mocked holy worship. Anger that is measured and authorized by God's purposes is justified. Sometimes this kind of righteous anger can play an important role in God's plan.

John 2:17-25

Those who witnessed Jesus' actions and words had to choose between belief and unbelief. Our choice, like that of the Jewish leaders, is to accept or reject what Jesus' actions indicate about his mission and authority. Was he just a fascinating man who did amazing deeds? Was he just a good teacher with an interesting message? Was he a madman with delusions of grandeur? Or was Jesus actually God, who came to live among us? According to the Bible, Jesus is God, and he has the power to offer us a new life. The disciples discovered this truth and were transformed into some of the greatest leaders of their day. God has the power to do the same for us.

John 3:1-12

Spiritual rebirth is necessary to enter God's Kingdom. Being born again is the easy, passive part—just as a baby merely goes through the birth process. The challenge comes as we grow up and must choose to submit our wills to the control of God's Spirit. As we do this, we grow up spiritually and are transformed by God in the process. Transformation is not attained by trying harder to live a better life. It is the result of growing in the grace of God that is bestowed on us as we continually surrender our lives to him. It is the result of the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit that takes place as we yield our will to his over the course of our lives.

John 3:16-18

Faith says yes to God's loving overtures to us. God cared enough to send his own Son—Jesus Christ—to pay for our failures. True faith has nothing to do with our human efforts, social achievements, or material wealth. Instead, saving faith says to God: "I'm a helpless sinner, unable to effect my own salvation. I trust your forgiveness, which you freely offer me in Jesus Christ." That kind of faith in God delivers us from the ultimate consequences of our sins—eternal separation from God. It also gives us the power to make changes in the present that will plant the seeds for a new life.

John 4:4-27

The disciples were surprised to find Jesus speaking with the woman at the well for a number of reasons: She was a Samaritan (half Jew and half Gentile); she was a woman; and she had a questionable history. Any one of these factors would have disqualified her from speaking with a "righteous" Jewish man. But Jesus broke down all the traditional barriers to accept her as she was and gave her a chance to experience a fresh start in life. In doing this, Jesus demonstrated God's love for all who have been rejected or condemned. This can be a source of great encouragement to us. No matter what we have done in the past, God still offers us his unconditional acceptance in Jesus. With his powerful help, nothing can stand in the way of our salvation.

John 4:39-42

The Samaritan woman put her faith in Jesus, who knew all about her faults yet still loved and respected her. She responded to God's gracious forgiveness by immediately sharing her story with others. She told her neighbors about the Messiah, who had offered her a new life. As a result, many were blessed with the benefits of faith in Jesus Christ. As we experience the reality of Christ's love in our lives, it is important that we share the Good News with others. The message we share may be the difference between life and death for someone we know. And when we share our story, we will experience anew the great joy of knowing Christ.

John 4:46-53

The government official demonstrated his faith by humbly asking Jesus to heal his son and then by taking him at his word. He believed Jesus' word to be true even though he hadn't yet seen the results. Our faith is expressed in similar ways. We can begin by humbly and honestly seeking God's help. He will help us even though we don't see immediate results. Spiritual growth takes a while. We can believe that God is working, and then persevere, even when the results of his work in our lives are not immediately evident.

John 5:39-40

The Jewish leaders knew the Scriptures backwards and forwards, yet they were spiritually dead. That's because they missed the whole purpose of the Scriptures: to bring people into a vital relationship with the God of grace. Intellectual knowledge about the Bible does not bring us into a transforming relationship with God unless we act on that knowledge. Knowing about God's truth without applying it personally will do nothing for us. Real spiritual growth comes by knowing God through the person of Jesus Christ.

John 5:41-44

Jesus took the Pharisees to task for being more concerned about what others thought of them than about what God thought. At times it may be necessary to do things that are neither understood nor approved by those around us. The bottom line for us is whether or not God approves of what we are doing, not what others think. As we reflect honestly on our lives, God and his Word—not the opinions of our peers—are the guidelines for our behavior.

John 6:1-15

It is interesting that Jesus often used people as channels of his grace. In feeding 5,000 people, Jesus used what was provided by a young boy. God allows us to have a part in what he does. When we willingly dedicate our own small resources—time, talents, or possessions—to God, he can work miracles for us and others. God can take our limited resources and multiply them beyond our wildest expectations.

John 6:28-29

What does God want us to do? That question has plagued the human race ever since the first sins by Adam and Eve. Many of us live by a list of “shoulds” and “shouldn’ts” in our effort to earn God’s acceptance. The good news is that we don’t have to do anything to receive God's help and forgiveness! God in Jesus Christ has taken all the initiative; we simply receive him by faith. Each step of our growth begins as we respond to God's love for us.

John 6:32-40

After feeding more than five thousand hungry people with five loaves of bread and two fish, Jesus explained that he himself was the Bread of Life. Jesus feeds the hungry with himself. He satisfies the deepest longings of our souls and fulfills our needs. Until the end of time, Jesus will work toward the redemption of all the broken people in his world. Our part is to turn to him and believe in his power to help us.

John 6:53-58

Jesus' imagery of human flesh and blood is jarring for most of us. In saying we need to eat his flesh and drink his blood to have eternal life, Jesus offended many people, but he made some important points. Jesus' flesh reminds us that he was fully human. As one of us, Jesus understands our temptations and struggles in this life. Jesus' mention of his blood anticipated his death on the cross—in our place, for our sins. The call to partake of his flesh and blood was a call to make him and his teachings more than just an intellectual activity. We are called to make Jesus the very center of our being—emotional, spiritual, and physical. As we feed our bodies with food, we are to feed our souls with the spiritual reality represented by the body and blood of Christ.

John 6:68-69

Many sales pitches for enticing products assault us daily. Lottery games, television specials, political causes, religious gurus—they all call for our time, money, and devotion. They promise to give us what we all need and desire. When all is said and done, however, we are left with Peter's question, "Lord, to whom would we go?" Jesus is the answer. He alone can deliver us from powerful sins that entangle us; he alone deserves our total commitment.

John 7:2-9

Jesus experienced firsthand the ridicule and rejection from his family. His brothers did not understand what God was doing in or through Jesus. Therefore, Jesus obeyed the will of his Father in heaven instead of bowing to the pressure of those in his family. Like Jesus, we need to make sure that we are following God's plan for our lives, rather than following the dictates of people who do not know what God has planned for us. To do this we must know God's Word and have a close relationship with God that is nurtured by prayer. Staying close to God through prayer and remaining focused on his purpose for our lives will help us make good decisions and preserve our spiritual growth.

John 7:10-15, 25-27, 40-49

In this chapter the author polled the audience for different opinions about who Jesus actually was. Some believed he was a good man (7:12, 46). Others thought he was a fraud (7:12) or demon possessed (7:20). Still others conceded he might be the Messiah (7:26, 41), or the Prophet (7:40). The minority who were in power saw him as a political threat and wanted him arrested, even killed (7:1, 20, 44). We, too, must decide who Jesus is and what he means to us. Our decision about Jesus is very important. It will have eternal consequences (see 8:24).

John 7:37-39

Jesus is the living water who satisfies our thirst (see 4:10). When we put our faith in him and ask for a drink, he gives us his Spirit. The Holy Spirit becomes an inexhaustible river of living water, welling up in us and flowing through us. The indwelling and eternal Holy Spirit goes with us wherever we go and can quench even our strongest spiritual thirst. Having this water “on tap” is the key to resisting the temptation to follow sinful pursuits. While sinful pleasures seem to satisfy for the moment, in the long run they leave us thirstier than ever.

John 8:1-11

The Pharisees brought to Jesus a woman who had been caught in the act of adultery. Jewish law required that she be stoned to death (Leviticus 20:10; Deuteronomy 22:22). In asking Jesus to judge the situation, the Pharisees hoped to trap him. If Jesus had told them to stone her, they could have brought Jesus before the Roman authorities. The Romans did not allow the Jews to implement their own death sentences. Yet, if Jesus had granted this woman a pardon, the Pharisees could have claimed he was a false prophet for ignoring God’s law. Jesus wisely escaped the trap by showing the Pharisees that they had no grounds for judging since they, too, were sinful. Then, Jesus told the woman to go and sin no more. Jesus did not ignore this woman's sin, but he forgave her and gave her a new start in life. Jesus does the same for us when we turn to him.

John 8:12

As the light of the world, Jesus exposes what has been hidden and guides us down the path of life. To live in the light is to be honest and vulnerable with others and in fellowship with God (see 1 John 1:5-7). As we express our needs and feelings, our sins and struggles, with the people we trust, light will fall on our failures and strengths. This will give us the direction we need to make significant spiritual progress. (See also John 1:4-9; 3:19-21; 12:35, 46.)

John 8:31-36

To be “set free” is to know the truth—the truth about ourselves and the truth about Jesus our Liberator. The truth is this: We are all slaves to our sinful natures. With God's truth as the standard for our moral conduct, we can recognize and confess our struggles and our sins. As we confess these, we share the truth about our lives. Seeing the truth and speaking the truth in this way frees us. And when we turn our broken lives over to God, who alone can make us whole, we are again acknowledging the truth.

John 9:1-12, 35-41

Imagine being blind from birth, not being able to see the people we love and the world around us. Then to add insult to injury, people insinuate that we are blind because of our personal sin or the sins of our parents! Jesus healed this man's blindness, but the real miracle occurred later when the man's spiritual blindness was healed. He learned to see through eyes of faith that Jesus truly was the Messiah, the Savior of the world. When we recognize Jesus as our deliverer, we have begun to gain our spiritual sight.

John 9:13-34

Some people are so blinded by their legalistic attitudes that they cannot see a wonderful miracle of healing taking place right in front of them. This was true of the Pharisees. They were more concerned about the letter of the law and the threat Jesus posed to their authority than about the amazing healing that had taken place. Even though they were exposed to the power of God, they chose to remain blind to the truth. Those who are teachable and humble will discover that God can heal even the most terrible afflictions. It is often the people we think least likely to make spiritual progress who experience healing and deliverance; they are the ones humble enough to ask God for help.

John 10:1-5

The shepherd knows each of his sheep by name, and they know and respond only to his voice. In like manner, Jesus knows our personalities, needs, feelings, and desires. He even knows our faults and our sins, yet he still loves us! He calls out to us and leads us in the way that is best for us. To be set free from the pain of our past, we need to respond to the guiding voice of our Shepherd, who knows us fully and loves us completely.

John 10:7-18

At night, shepherds in Bible times led their flocks to lie down in a natural sheep pen (an area boxed in by brush or rock). The shepherd slept in the opening and literally became the gate to the sheepfold. With his own body he would protect the sheep from wild animals and robbers. This is what Jesus, the Gate and the Good Shepherd, does for us. By sacrificing his life he has provided the means for our protection from the evil one. In Christ we can find security, knowing that he is watching over us.

John 10:27-29

When we surrender our lives to Jesus, we can feel safe and secure. No one can take us away from him and his care, not even the devil! Such security is sometimes hard for us to grasp emotionally. Life can seem very unsafe, especially if we have been hurt in the past. Some of us may try to protect ourselves by keeping everyone at a distance—even God. God can protect us far better than we can protect ourselves. When we surrender our lives to him, he will cover us with his divine protection and even redeem our past hurts.

John 10:30-38

For Jesus to say that he and the Father were one was a clear claim to divinity (see 1:1-2; 8:58). Jesus was God in human flesh (1:14). He was one with his Father in essence, in purpose, in word, and in thought. All of Jesus' miracles attest to his divine authority (10:37-38); so do the Scriptures (5:39). Only such a God-man could perfectly understand our all-too-human weaknesses yet still command our complete trust.

John 11:3-4

When faced with a critical illness or a hopeless situation, we have two basic options: We can complain and blame God, or we can see the crisis as an opportunity to make a request of God. Mary and Martha asked Jesus to help them with their great loss. Then they gave him the glory for the amazing miracle he did—raising their brother, Lazarus, from the dead. If we can learn to humbly ask God for help, he can even bring life out of death. If he is able to raise someone from the dead, he is more than able to help us.

John 11:37-44

Imagine being there when Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead. The man had been dead for four days, and his body had begun to decompose. Then, suddenly, he responded to Jesus' voice and came walking out of the grave, wrapped in graveclothes! The one who has power over the grave has power to bring new life to us, too (11:25-26). Jesus Christ can set us free from the bondage of sin and death.

John 12:1-8

Mary's faith in Jesus is a testimony to us all. Scripture records three times in which she knelt in humble faith at Jesus' feet: She sat at Jesus' feet listening to what he taught (Luke 10:39); she threw herself at his feet crying and seeking comfort (John 11:32); and here she knelt to clean and anoint his feet with expensive perfume. Jesus was first in her heart, and she surrendered herself to him. The decision to surrender all we are and have to God is crucial. When we do this, God is able and willing to help us with the problems we face.

John 12:12-19

Jesus had just raised Lazarus from the dead in front of many witnesses, and the people were hailing Jesus as their Messiah. In a few days, however, they would stand back and do nothing as the Jewish leaders and Roman governors crowned Jesus with thorns and executed him as a pretentious “King of the Jews” (18:39–19:22). The world’s affections for God blow hot and cold. But we are called to follow Jesus even when it is not the popular thing to do.

John 12:23-25

Instead of giving a king’s acceptance speech, Jesus explained why he would have to die. He said, in effect: “I must die so that I can bring new life to you. If you want this new life, follow me.” There is a form of death to the old life that precedes the coming of new life. We are called to move from brokenness to healing, guilt to forgiveness, and from isolation to intimacy.

John 12:42-43

Many of the Jewish leaders believed in Jesus, but their faith was rendered ineffective by their fear and isolation. They were more concerned about what their peers thought of them than they were about what God thought. This kind of faith will never take us very far. If we hope to make real spiritual progress, we need to share our belief in God with others. When we tell others what we believe, we are inviting them to hold us accountable. Accountability for our intentions, attitudes, and actions helps our spiritual development.

John 13:1-7

The Son of God came, not as a proud master who demanded service from others, but as a humble servant who delighted in helping others. In stooping down to do the most menial of jobs (washing his disciples' feet), Jesus showed them that true leaders serve their followers. To follow Jesus' example, we start by allowing him to serve us. As we experience his cleansing in our lives, we can help others by serving them—sharing our faith, listening to their confessions, encouraging them, and standing by them in the tough times. We will find that as we support others, we will be strengthened as well.

John 13:20

God expresses himself to us primarily through chosen messengers. In doing so, he makes our relationships with others sacred. We experience God's healing love through the godly people in our lives. And as we reach out to others in the name of Jesus, we in turn become his messengers. God will use us to bring his powerful healing love into their lives as well.

John 13:23; 19:26; 21:20

Throughout his Gospel, the apostle John referred to himself as “the disciple Jesus loved.” John understood God's unconditional love for him. We, too, need to see ourselves as God does—as deeply loved. This will then pave the way for further spiritual growth.

John 14:5-11

Faith in Jesus is the only way to truly know God and receive the meaningful life that he wants for each of us. Many people know all about God and Jesus Christ, but they don't know God personally. Genuine faith is personal and relational. It is based on the truth that can be known about God through Jesus Christ, who is the way, the truth, and the life.

John 14:15-18

God desires to have a special kind of relationship with us. When Jesus ascended to the Father in heaven, he sent his Spirit to live within his followers. This Spirit serves as our Advocate, and he ministers God's compassion to us, brings to mind Jesus' teachings, guides us into doing justice and knowing all truth, and brings our needs before God the Father (see 14:26; 15:26; 16:5-15). God the Holy Spirit will never leave or forsake us. He is with us at all times, and he has the power to help us overcome the problems in our lives.

John 14:27

Many of us are dealing with stress and anxiety, grief and loss; we long for peace of mind and heart. So did the early disciples—they were about to lose their best friend and their Messiah. Their souls were troubled, and they were looking for something to fill the void. Yet Jesus said he was leaving them with peace —unlike worldly peace, which is merely an absence of conflict. God can bring us peace even in the midst of our troubles (see 16:33).

John 15:1-8

God desires that our lives be like the fruitful branches of a grapevine. The only way to be fruitful is to remain connected to Jesus, the vine, and to allow God, the gardener, to prune our lives in ways that will stimulate growth and fruitfulness. It is God's cultivating, weeding, and pruning in our lives that brings forth spiritual fruit. Just as sustenance for the desired fruit comes through the vine, so fullness of life comes through faith in Jesus Christ. We need to stay close to God in Jesus Christ, the source of our spiritual growth and fruitfulness.

John 15:9-12

Genuine, unconditional love overflows from the abundant love God has shown us. Only when we experience and remain in God's love (shared by people we trust and respect) can we genuinely love ourselves and others. God's joy is made complete in us when we experience his love in our lives.

John 15:26-27

It is crucial that we learn to depend on the Holy Spirit. As the source of "all truth" he gives wisdom to help us examine our lives; he helps us see past our self-deception. The Holy Spirit reveals the truth of God's Word, holds us accountable to other believers, and conforms us to the image of his Son. He can guide us to an accurate perception of ourselves, just like an unflattering mirror. The result will be convicting, but fulfilling—so much so that we cannot help but share the Good News with others.

John 16:33

In this world, we may encounter “many trials and sorrows.” Some of these difficulties are inevitable and beyond our control. These can be endured with God’s help. On the other hand, some of our suffering is self-inflicted and can be avoided. In such situations, God still offers us peace as we muster the courage to make needed changes in our lives. God’s forgiveness and loving acceptance can give us peace as we face our trials and sorrows, even when the pain we face is ultimately our own fault. He has the power to lead us down the path of life; he has already overcome all the obstacles that stand in our way!

John 17:1-26

Jesus is our High Priest and intercessor: He makes God’s will known to us and our heartfelt needs known to God. Through his words and deeds he reveals to us God’s mercy, justice, glory, and truth, and his desire to establish a personal relationship with us. Jesus also intercedes with God the Father on our behalf, bringing our needs and requests continually before God’s throne. He prays that we would know his perfect joy, be protected from all evil, grow in truth and holiness, and show love toward all people. Jesus prayed this prayer for his twelve disciples as they faced his imminent death. Yet this prayer is for all of us as we follow Jesus.

John 18:15-18, 25-27

The arrest, trial, and crucifixion of Jesus unfolds over several chapters. The injustice of it all makes us angry. We may find ourselves pointing a blaming finger at the religious leaders who instigated Jesus' downfall. We also see Peter deny Jesus, not only once, but three times—all this despite his earlier assurances of loyalty. We have often done the same thing. We have made steps of faith, only to turn around and deny Christ's lordship over a crucial area of our lives. Peter meant well when he assured Jesus of his loyalty, but he still failed. Yet his denial of Christ was not the end of the story (see 21:15-19), just as the times we turn back from following Christ fully don't disqualify us from his love. With Jesus Christ, there is always the opportunity for restoration.

John 19:1-3

When we are ridiculed, rejected, or abused, that is the time to look up—to Jesus' experiences leading to the cross. Jesus suffered the shame and humiliation of being mocked, crowned with thorns, and struck in the face. He was shamefully exposed on the cross, yet held his head high enough to shout, "It is finished!" (19:30). Because of the shame Jesus suffered, we can hold our heads high as we look to God. We have been forgiven our sins and failures. Through Jesus, our sins and shame are removed, and we have been offered another chance at life.

John 19:4-16

The people who were shouting "Crucify him! Crucify him!"

(19:6, 15) had just days before hailed Jesus as their King (12:12-13). Sometimes we are tempted to do the same thing. We may have surrendered our lives to God only to discover that following Christ comes at a sacrifice of our lives. We may have wanted a quick fix for our problems. When we realized that God wanted full surrender, we may have turned away. The people in Jerusalem gave up hope as Jesus hung on the cross. But three days later, they discovered that even death gave way to God's power! The path of pain and death led to the greatest of victories—the Resurrection! God does call us to take up our cross and follow Christ, signifying the death of our old lives. But the cross we carry leads to the resurrected lives God desires for us. Our new lives in Christ are worth the sacrifice God calls us to make.

John 19:28-30

What did Jesus finish? The underlying word means “paid in full.” Jesus on the cross finished the work he was sent to do (17:4) and fully paid for our sin (1 Peter 3:18). In the greatest act of love in history, and in fulfillment of a complicated, centuries-old system of sacrifices, he became the perfect sacrificial Lamb of God (see John 1:29; Hebrews 8:1–10:18). The miracle of the Resurrection (John 20:1-9) confirmed that Jesus is the Savior who can bring forgiveness and new life to all of us.

John 20:11-18

Once healed of seven demons (Mark 16:9), Mary had supported the ministry of Jesus financially (Luke 8:2-3) and was a faithful follower from early in his ministry. Her faithfulness was honored when the risen Christ appeared and spoke to her before he spoke to anyone else! After seeing him, she went immediately and told the disciples the Good News. When we finally begin to realize the power of the risen Christ, we can pay our debt of gratitude by doing as Mary did, sharing the Good News with others.

John 20:22-23

The risen Christ did as he had promised (see 14:16-20; 15:26; 16:7) and breathed his Spirit into his disciples. This life-giving, truth-revealing, sin-convicting, comfort-giving Spirit is also a Spirit of forgiveness. Just as we receive God's forgiveness for our sins, so we are exhorted and empowered to forgive those who sin against us. If we refuse to forgive others, we will miss the blessed freedom that God offers. He wants us to experience the emotional healing that comes only from working through our anger and hurt to the point of releasing it to God. Then God can redirect our course and redeem our lives.

John 20:24-29

This is where doubting Thomas earned his reputation. He refused to believe in Jesus' resurrection until he saw and felt the risen Christ with his own eyes and hands. Some of us may have a hard time believing God is at work in our lives when we don't see immediate changes or miraculous results. Sometimes the evidence of God's power is not immediate; when we persevere in faith, we will experience the peace that comes from trusting God with our present problems and our unknown future.

John 21:1-14

Just imagine what the disciples must have felt. They were professional fishermen who had spent an entire night fishing but still hadn't caught anything. Then Jesus called out to them and told them to throw the net on the other side of the boat! The disciples' first response must have been to laugh. But when they did as Jesus said, they caught so many fish that the net began to break. God will sometimes allow us to do our best, using all our resources and exerting all our strength without reaping the rewards. At such times we would do well to turn to Jesus and ask him what we should do. Peter offered his empty boat to Jesus as a pulpit. Even if we don't have an abundance, God wants us to offer what we do have for his service. When we do, God will gladly reward us. His abundance will overflow our emptiness and everyone will know that God is at work in our lives.

John 21:15-17

Just as Peter had denied Jesus three times, here Jesus allows Peter to declare his love for Jesus three times. Each time Jesus affirms his confidence in Peter by commissioning him to feed his flock. Peter was later able to fulfill this commission when he was filled with the mighty power of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. He became a key leader in the early church. Though we may experience times of failure, God is willing and able to restore us—even to the point where our lives become models to others.

John 21:20-25

It is easy to fall into the trap of comparing ourselves with others, as Peter did with John. We sometimes take solace in comparing ourselves with someone who is clearly not following God's way. Or we may look at others and become jealous of how quickly they seem to have progressed spiritually. Focusing on the failures and successes of others is an easy distraction from our own lives. God doesn't want us to compare ourselves with others. He wants us to look to him, look to his Word, and reflect on our own lives in light of his Word. We are to take responsibility for our own lives; then we can better progress spiritually and fulfill God's plan for us.

Acts 1:1-5

This is the sequel to Luke's Gospel, and it picks up where that Gospel left off. It records the activities of the apostles, beginning soon after Jesus' resurrection. Before ascending to heaven, Jesus assured his followers that the Holy Spirit he had promised to send would come upon them as they waited in Jerusalem. At the appointed time, the early Christians received the power they needed to reach the world with the Good News of Jesus Christ. God offers us the same powerful help in overcoming the struggles we face.

Acts 1:6-11

When the disciples asked Jesus about the coming of his earthly Kingdom, they displayed a deep yearning for the Messiah's reign of freedom and peace. Jesus responded by telling them not to worry about the future. Instead, he turned their eyes to the present. With the power of the Holy Spirit, they were to share the Good News of salvation in Jesus Christ with others. Sometimes we make the mistake the disciples did, looking forward to a time of complete freedom and peace while we could be taking productive steps of action here and now. Through the Holy Spirit, we can share the Good News with others as we await Christ's return.

Acts 2:1-4

On the day of Pentecost, the disciples waited in Jerusalem just as Jesus had told them to. Suddenly the Holy Spirit manifested his presence by sound (wind), sight (fire), and speech (new languages). The believers were filled with the Holy Spirit, and God's renewing power began its work of transforming them from the inside out. This marked a new era in history as God's powerful presence entered the lives of all believers. The Holy Spirit still works in the lives of believers today, transforming them, healing their wounds, empowering them to be witnesses of Jesus, and equipping them to do God's work in the world.

Acts 2:5-15

When the Holy Spirit came in power, the results were immediately apparent in the apostles, especially Peter. This man, who had previously denied that he even knew Christ (Luke 22:54-62), was now confidently preaching and helping others discover this new power for living. When we experience God's power in our lives, we will never be the same, nor will we be able to keep the Good News to ourselves.

Acts 2:14-21

After asserting his sobriety, Peter told the crowd about the power behind his transformation. The amazing power of the Holy Spirit had been promised by the prophet Joel centuries earlier. By quoting Joel 2:28-32, Peter stressed the universal impact of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit would be given to all God's people—young and old, men and women, masters and servants. God's power for living is for everyone—regardless of race, gender, or social class—who recognizes his or her helpless state and asks for God's mercy (2:21). No one with a humble heart is beyond the reach of God's powerful help.

Acts 2:37-39

Peter's preaching led the people to examine their lives and ask the apostle what to do. They readily recognized their need for salvation in Christ and went on to receive God's powerful help. Peter assured them that by turning from their sins and surrendering their lives to God, they would be forgiven and receive the powerful presence of the Holy Spirit. We can expect the same blessings if we bring our failures before God. His forgiveness of our sins will set us free from our bondage to sin. The presence of his Holy Spirit will give us the power to persevere as we follow Christ. Then we can fully experience the transformation and blessing he longs to bring into our lives.

Acts 2:42-47

In these verses, Luke mentioned a number of activities that characterized the early Christian community. They committed themselves to follow the teaching of the apostles, to fellowship together, to share in the Lord's Supper, and to pray together. They helped those in need by sharing their food, their clothing, and even their homes. Their faith, joy, and loving support were so contagious that large numbers soon joined them. Spiritual growth does not take place in isolation. We need people to walk along with us, encouraging us when we become discouraged and holding us accountable when we stray. This is how we preserve our spiritual gains.

Acts 3:1-11

This crippled man was truly helpless, making him a prime candidate for God's powerful help. Notice the steps in this healing. Peter established personal contact by asking the man to look at him. Next, Peter awakened hope in the man by telling him that Jesus Christ could heal him. Then, at Peter's command and touch, the man was suddenly on his feet, leaping and praising God. Our healing comes as God touches our lives through the ministry of others. As we experience healing in our own lives and share our faith, we can bestow the same blessings on others by leading them to Jesus Christ.

Acts 4:1-12

Peter consistently held his listeners accountable for their actions (4:10; see also 2:36; 3:12-23), but he never concluded his messages on a negative note. He always went on to declare that God can do what we are powerless to do—deliver us from the destructive grip of sin. We all need the forgiveness and redemption offered only by Jesus Christ. Jesus desires our complete redemption—spiritual, emotional, and physical—and he has the power to bring it about.

Acts 4:13-22

Peter's courage and power took the religious leaders by surprise, and they were uncertain about how they should proceed. They decided to command Peter to stop his preaching and healing ministry, but Peter refused to obey, affirming his commitment to God's authority. The leaders were unable to stop the spread of Jesus' message in Jerusalem and beyond. God wants people the world over to find forgiveness and freedom, despite what the government authorities might say. Once we have experienced the reality of God's power and direction in our lives, no one can take that away from us.

Acts 4:23-31

When Peter and John were released by the religious leaders, they returned to their circle of friends and fellow believers. There they dealt with their difficulties by discussing the issues, worshiping God, and spending time in prayer. This resulted in a new manifestation of God's presence among them and a new boldness empowered by the Holy Spirit. We can learn from the way these early believers dealt with the obstacles before them. We, too, can find help through a group of believers in whom we can confide and who will pray for us.

Acts 4:32-37

The early Christians were growing spiritually by caring for each other, by meeting each other's basic needs, and by carrying the Good News to people who hadn't yet heard. Barnabas was a model believer, even in this exemplary community. His original name was Joseph, but the apostles renamed him Barnabas, which means "Son of Encouragement." When God transforms our lives, we may find a new name that better reflects what we are becoming in Christ. Who knows? We might also become a son or daughter of encouragement.

Acts 5:1-11

God's judgment of Ananias and Sapphira is a unique event in the history of the church, but its message is universal. The fact that God punished their sin with immediate death makes it unique. But it carries a universal message by reminding us that we cannot pretend total devotion to God and get away with it. God desires that we willingly surrender our lives to him. And he knows the extent of our true devotion. Trying to lie to God and appear more spiritual than we are may not cost us our lives as it did Ananias and Sapphira, but such attitudes and actions reveal a serious problem in our spiritual lives. If we see these attitudes and actions in ourselves, we need to confess them to God and ask him to help us be genuine before him and with others.

Acts 5:9-11

Peter confronted Ananias and Sapphira about their dishonesty, holding them accountable for their sins. This kind of honest confrontation is as necessary today as it was in this early Christian community. Confrontation and discipline are vital components in any community, whether a Christian church, a support group, or a family. As we are confronted with the truth about ourselves, we need to humbly and honestly admit our mistakes and sins. As we do this, God will give us the help we need to overcome them.

Acts 5:12-16

We may wonder how God could possibly do anything for us. In the activities of the early church, we are shown the primary means that God uses to work in people's lives. He touches people with the help of other people. God channels his power through people like us so others can experience his powerful help. God has probably touched our lives through the help of an individual or group. As we share the Good News in both word and deed, we can be used to bring hope and healing to others.

Acts 5:24-42

This power struggle between the religious establishment and the apostles is instructive. People may try to stand in our way as we grow in our relationship with God. But if our lives are centered around God and his will for us, nothing will be able to stop our progress.

Acts 6:1

As the Christian community grew, various problems arose. One such problem was the distribution of food to needy widows. The conflict was apparently rooted in the cultural differences between the various church members. Most of the church members were Aramaic-speaking Jewish Christians, but there were also Greek-speaking Christians among them. Apparently, the Greek-speaking Jews were being neglected by the Aramaic-speaking Jews. Relationships within the church can be stretched, even broken, if members refuse to accept one another. As we humbly recognize our own need for God's gracious forgiveness, we will have less trouble accepting others who are different from us.

Acts 6:2-6

Conflict resolution is vital to our spiritual health, just as it was to the health of the early church. To accomplish this difficult task, the early believers acknowledged their limitations, set their priorities, and laid out specific tasks that would fulfill their needs. They sought God's wisdom and had the congregation select seven new leaders to better represent the cultural mix in their community. By delegating leadership to Spirit-filled, Greek-speaking Jews, they overcame their food-distribution problem. With God's wisdom and a godly network of support, we can find ways to overcome the problems we face and meet the needs of the people around us.

Acts 6:8-15

Stephen was noted for his courage, boldness, and faith. He was dedicated to declaring the message of Jesus Christ to the people around him. The Jewish establishment accused Stephen of attacking their institutions, especially the laws of Moses and the Jerusalem Temple. Stephen confronted them directly with their refusal to see the truth. We may need to do the same for some of the people we know. If so, we should seek God's wisdom, just as Stephen did. We can receive God's wisdom by surrendering our lives to God and following his ways.

Acts 7:1-53

Stephen did not get defensive about the accusations of his fellow Jews. Instead, he took control of the situation and shared his faith with them. Like Stephen, we do not need to be defensive about our faith. When we are experiencing God's healing power in our lives, we can boldly share that message with others without apology, fear, or shame. Others may yet try to harm us, as they did Stephen, but that does not negate the reality of God's power in our lives.

Acts 7:44-50

Stephen's discussion about the Temple is important to us as well. God, the Creator of the universe, is not bound by the Temple walls. Sometimes we mistakenly define God as being limited to what we can understand and control. We shape and limit him with our theological systems, our church dogmas, our political presuppositions, and our personal experience. God is much bigger than any conception we could ever have of him. He fills the entire universe! As we get a more accurate vision of God and his power, we will discover that he is far bigger than the problems that trouble us.

Acts 7:51-60

Stephen confronted the religious leaders about their refusal to see the truth. They were resisting the Holy Spirit and didn't like being rebuked. We would expect these leaders to have pondered Stephen's words and to have made some kind of honest self-assessment. However, they reacted in anger and wanted to kill Stephen. Despite their rage, Stephen did not react in anger. Instead, he kept his focus on Christ, forgiving the people who were killing him. Stephen's peace and self-control were fruits of the Holy Spirit, which are available to us today through faith as we continue growing in our relationship with God.

Acts 8:1-3

The people who seem the most unlikely candidates for salvation are often at the top of God's list. Saul of Tarsus was one such candidate. At Stephen's death, Saul was a dreaded enemy of the fledgling Christian movement. He went from house to house, devastating believers with his mission to search and destroy. Yet Saul's story is really a story of God's amazing grace. Saul the persecutor became Paul the apostle, one of the greatest leaders in Christian history. Many of us began our relationships with God as unlikely candidates, but there is no limit to what we can become with God's powerful and gracious help.

Acts 8:4-8

God used the terrible circumstances of persecution for his glory. The believers were driven from their homes in Jerusalem, but they used the opportunity to share the Good News wherever they went. God often uses painful circumstances for his glory. Some of us would not have begun to seek God if it were not for some episode of suffering or trouble. Pain can be used by God to awaken us to the opportunity to build a new life of faith. God can use our painful circumstances to give us a second chance.

Acts 8:9-17

Philip had preached boldly to the Samaritans, who were considered by the Jews to be no better than Gentiles because of their mixed ancestry. The Samaritans responded to the gospel message in great numbers. Hearing about the successful ministry there, Peter and John came to join Philip, and the Samaritan believers received the Holy Spirit. This proved that the Good News of salvation in Christ was not just for the Jews. It was for all people, including the Samaritans.

The Good News of Jesus Christ is for us, too, no matter who we are or what we have done.

Acts 8:18-25

When Simon the sorcerer saw the ministry of Peter and John, he offered to buy the secret of their power. This was proof to Peter that Simon did not understand Peter's relationship with God. Simon sought God only for what he might get out of the relationship. Perhaps he wanted to regain the prestige he had lost when Philip came to town (see 8:9-13). Peter warned Simon that he was heading for disaster and that he needed to examine himself and repent. We, too, need to guard against selfish motives in our walk with Christ. Instead, like John the Baptist, we should consider how we can become less and Christ can become greater (John 3:30).

Acts 8:26-40

Philip was called to share the Good News with an Ethiopian eunuch. His dealings with this man serve as an excellent model of how we can effectively share our faith with others. He didn't rush in and start preaching. He took time to understand where the Ethiopian was concerning his faith. Then, he proceeded humbly and confidently to share what he knew to be true—that Jesus is the Messiah and that through him we can experience deliverance from sin and its power. Sharing our faith this way takes time; it requires patience and sensitivity. But as we follow Philip's example, we will become more effective communicators of God's message of salvation.

Acts 9:3-9

Here we find Saul traveling to Damascus to persecute the Christians there. As he neared his destination, he was suddenly blinded by light from the risen Christ. Blind and helpless, Saul was led to Damascus to await further instructions from God. For three days he ate and drank nothing. He was forced into a period of rigorous self-examination. Whether our moment of decision occurs with a bang or a whisper, we all must come face to face with our sins. Spiritual renewal begins when we are willing to see the truth, confess it to God, and allow him to change our lives.

Acts 9:10-16

During Saul's intense self-examination, God sent Ananias to befriend him, pray for him, and restore his sight. Ananias was afraid at first because he wasn't sure that Saul had really changed. When he met with Saul, however, Ananias discovered that no one is too far gone for God. By coming to help Saul, Ananias discovered an important truth. When we reach out to others and share the Good News, God not only uses us to help them; he also strengthens our own faith.

Acts 9:20-25

Saul quickly joined the Christians in Damascus and began to share the Good News of salvation in Jesus Christ. In this way, he demonstrated that his transformation was real. Both Jews and Christians were astounded at the changes in Saul. The Jews quickly turned against him and sought to kill him, but his new Christian friends helped him escape. We also may experience opposition from our old associates when we surrender our lives to God and begin to share the Good News of Jesus Christ. They may begin to feel guilty about their own sins, or they may be afraid they are about to lose our friendship. Whatever the reason, they may try to thwart our spiritual growth. This is where our development of relationships with other believers takes on an essential role, protecting and guiding us through these difficult times.

Acts 9:26-30

Saul returned to Jerusalem and tried to join the Christian movement. He was immediately met with suspicion. They couldn't believe that such a cruel enemy could have changed so quickly. In time, though, Saul proved his sincerity and was accepted. When we begin to seek God, we may meet similar skepticism for a while. As we seek to redirect the course of our lives, friends and family members may turn away. In time, however, if we continue to follow God's will, we can establish better relationships with our loved ones.

Acts 9:36-43

Peter received a call for help from grieving friends in nearby Joppa. Dorcas, a disciple who constantly served other widows and the poor, had just died, and those who loved her had sent for Peter. Imitating Jesus and implementing God's power over death (see Luke 8:41-42, 49-56), Peter brought this woman back to life. When God's power is at work within us, nothing is impossible. God's power can revive us and give us new lives in Jesus Christ.

Acts 10:9-20

God sent a special vision to Peter to instruct him regarding things clean and unclean. In this vision, Peter saw a sheet holding all sorts of animals that, according to Jewish law, were unclean. At first, Peter refused to have anything to do with them. But God sent the vision three times, challenging Peter's view of what was clean or unclean. God was preparing Peter to carry the Good News to the Gentiles in the "unclean" home of Cornelius. Peter needed to realize that in Christ people of all backgrounds are acceptable to God. This truth is important for us as well. As we share the Good News with others, we must not allow our prejudices to stand in the way of God's will for us. If God opens a door for us to share his hope with someone, we need to step through the door in faith.

Acts 10:21-33

Peter didn't want to visit the home of this "unclean" Gentile. But when Peter and Cornelius got together, they excitedly shared with each other the unusual things they had just seen and heard. God had worked undercover to cut away the barriers that would have kept them from speaking to each other. Then the Holy Spirit filled all the Gentiles who were in the home of Cornelius. God was able to draw people close who had once been separated by immense barriers. We may have relationships that seem broken beyond repair. As hopeless as such relationships might appear, God can work to soften our defenses and enhance our communication. He will do this as we surrender our lives to him and seek to follow his will.

Acts 11:1-3

Even before Peter arrived home, the Jewish believers heard that Gentiles had believed in Christ. In their prejudice they did not accept what they had heard, so they immediately confronted Peter. Earlier, when faced with opposition before Christ's death (Luke 22:54-62), Peter was afraid to stand up for what he believed. He was afraid to speak the truth. But after Pentecost, Peter found the courage he needed. Peter defended the truth that had been revealed to him, without concern for what it cost him. It is human nature to be afraid to speak the truth at times, especially if there is the threat of dire consequences. However, the same Holy Spirit who gave Peter courage is available for us today, and he will help us overcome our fears.

Acts 12:1-11

Peter's escape from prison shows that nothing can thwart God's plan for our lives. God can always overcome the obstacles that stand in our way. He may even use supernatural means to deliver us—against all human odds and in response to prayer. This does not mean we will never face difficulties in our walk with God. Even as the early church enjoyed phenomenal success, it still suffered severe trials. We will always face some obstacles as we seek to live out God's plan for our lives. But God's plan will prevail. If we are living to fulfill God's will, ultimately there is nothing that can stand in our way.

Acts 13:1-3

However reluctant the church in Antioch may have been to lose Paul and Barnabas, they immediately submitted to the voice of the Holy Spirit. Although it meant a major change, they participated with the Holy Spirit by releasing and commissioning these key leaders to missionary service. To send them on their way, they fasted, prayed, and laid hands on them. In like manner, we can support one another's growth and times of change for the better. We can pray for each other and encourage each other to do God's will.

Acts 13:13-14

John Mark left the missionary team and returned home to Jerusalem. We aren't sure why he deserted the team, but perhaps it was due to a lack of faith, a conflict with Paul's leadership, culture shock, homesickness, or fear. For most of us, our spiritual journeys are not without interruption. There may be times when we, like John Mark, turn back from our commitments or from God altogether. It is encouraging to see that later John Mark was restored to fellowship with Barnabas and Paul. Barnabas took John Mark under his wing, even when Paul rejected him (15:37-39). From Paul's letters a decade later (Colossians 4:10; 2 Timothy 4:11), we know that John Mark became a faithful minister in the early church. Our failures can become opportunities to start over and then take steps to keep learning and growing if we ask God to redirect our course and restore us.

Acts 13:45-14:6

Jealousy, rejection, ridicule, revenge, physical abuse, murder plots—Paul and Barnabas experienced all that and more as they preached the Good News to others. Sometimes Paul and Barnabas stayed in a town for weeks; other times they had to run for their lives after only a short stay. When we reach out to others, we may need courage to hang in there with unreceptive people who present challenges to our message. In other cases we may need to cut our losses and move on. It takes wisdom from above to know how to react in a given situation.

Acts 14:14-20

The crowds at Lystra erroneously thought Paul and Barnabas were Greek gods. The missionaries were horrified by such badly mistaken identification and sadly misplaced worship. They quickly sought to clear up the misunderstanding. Soon after this, Jews from the neighboring town of Iconium persuaded the locals that Paul was a charlatan. As a result, Paul was nearly killed, but God intervened to spare his life. The people at Lystra changed their attitudes and opinions about God very quickly and on very little evidence. While our emotions will be touched by our spiritual renewal, we must make sure that our faith is based on truth. The truth is found in God's Word. These crowds were led astray because they were following outward signs and the influence of persuasive people. Our spiritual growth cannot be dictated by such unreliable influences.

Acts 15:1-5

The Jerusalem Council marked a crisis point in the history of Christianity. At the center of this crisis was the issue of the Jewish law. Should Gentiles be required to keep the law of Moses, including the rite of circumcision? Jewish Christians thought Gentile Christians should have to comply. The answer of the council would affect the basis for faith, fellowship, outreach, and leadership in the church. The very gospel of grace was at stake in this crisis. Is Christ's work alone sufficient for our salvation? Or do we also have to follow the Mosaic law? In the end, the sufficiency of Christ was defended. While there are specific keys to spiritual renewal that we can use, our salvation is not based on anything that we do to earn it. It is God's grace that delivers us and leads us to redirect the course of our lives.

Acts 15:12-21

At this council meeting in Jerusalem, James concluded the discussion and confirmed Peter's view that Gentiles were acceptable to God in Christ without adhering to Jewish law. James defended his view by appealing to the Scriptures as his final authority for faith and practice. Henceforth, Gentile believers did not have to keep the Jewish law in order to be accepted in the Christian community. At the same time, they agreed to continue following some key Jewish practices. Just as the Jews wisely did not add unnecessary requirements for salvation in Christ, we must not either. To do so is legalism, which denies the grace of God and undermines our spiritual freedom. On the other hand, we should also be sensitive to the differing beliefs of other Christians and not use our freedom in ways that cause needless friction. As we continue to submit to God's will, he will show us what is essential and what is not.

Acts 15:36-41

We never finish growing spiritually or get to a point where we are not prone to human weaknesses that can hurt our relationships. This fact is demonstrated in the conflict between Paul and Barnabas over John Mark. Paul did not want to work with John Mark after he abandoned them on the first missionary journey (see 13:13-14). This resulted in a sharp disagreement and split between Paul and Barnabas. Even as mature men of faith, Paul and Barnabas had to deal with conflict. We know from Paul's letters that all three later reconciled, due in part to Barnabas's willingness to take John Mark with him. Like these godly men, no matter how "spiritual" we become, we will encounter conflict with other godly people. When this happens, we must be careful to respond in a way that furthers God's Kingdom.

Acts 16:1-3

Paul advised Timothy to submit to the Jewish practice of circumcision, even though it wasn't necessary for his salvation—the Jerusalem Council had established that fact (see 15:12-21). Timothy voluntarily followed Paul's advice in order to remove any possible stumbling block to his communicating with a Jewish audience. As we seek to share God's Good News with others, we need to be willing to remove any cultural or social barriers to effective communication. Whenever we have opportunity to reach across racial or cultural lines, we should ask God to show us how to identify with that group of people. If we can do something that will make people more receptive to God's message, we should do it unless it violates God's Word.

Acts 16:11-18

In Macedonia Paul's first converts were women. One was a businesswoman named Lydia who sold expensive purple cloth to be worn by the wealthy. Another female convert was a slave girl who had been demon-possessed. These two women from entirely different economic and social levels in society both played key roles in the growth of the Philippian church. We are all welcome into the throne room of God through our relationship with Christ. We may be tempted to discriminate on the basis of gender, age, social class, employment status, marital status, handicaps, or the like, but God does not. God welcomes everyone who is willing to follow him, and so should we.

Acts 16:25-34

Paul and Silas were beaten and jailed in violation of their rights as Roman citizens. Yet they sang praises to God despite the painful circumstances they faced. God was not finished with Paul and Silas, and he delivered them from this abusive situation. In so doing he taught a clear lesson to the Philippian rulers. God is able to deliver and sustain us in even the most abusive of circumstances. When our focus is on him and all that he has done for us, our identity and inner strength will be sustained. Our inner joy and ability to praise God in the midst of persecution and hardship are signs of God's power and may even result in our enemies' admitting their need for him.

Acts 17:1-9

At Thessalonica, Paul presented the Good News in a way that took into account the questions and needs of his largely Jewish audience. As a result, many Jews and many Gentiles surrendered their lives to God. Nevertheless, many more Jews objected to Paul's message because they were jealous. They stirred up the crowds and city officials to run Paul out of town—not just out of Thessalonica, but out of Berea, too. Their complaint was that these men worshiped a king other than their earthly ruler. In our society, no one minds hearing about spirituality. People do object when we talk about Jesus as our King and the rightful ruler of all kingdoms. We cannot be afraid of speaking the truth and clearly honoring Jesus. We can expect to face opposition, but that should not deter us from speaking the truth.

Acts 17:10-12

At Berea, Paul enjoyed a most eager response from the Jewish community. The Bereans searched the Scriptures to confirm Paul's testimonial experience and anecdotal evidence against God's final authority. How exciting when someone is ready to hear the Good News of God's plan of salvation. But no one should have to simply take our word alone as the gospel truth. Fortunately, we have the Scriptures to back up every claim we make about God. As we seek God, we would do well to have the kind of attitude shown by the Bereans. We should seek God by eagerly studying his Word and making that the standard for our faith and conduct.

Acts 17:22-31

In Athens, Paul did not preach in the synagogue as he normally did upon entering a new town. Instead, he took a tour through Athens and then shared the Good News with intellectuals and philosophers in their marketplace. He began by acknowledging their belief in an unknown god. Paul described that unknown god as the Creator of all that is, and our future judge. Thanks to Jesus and his messengers, we can know God personally (John 1:18; 1 John 1:1-3). We don't have to look to some unknown god. We can trust in the powerful, loving, and personal God who revealed himself in Jesus Christ.

Acts 18:1-9

Perhaps Paul was discouraged because his Athens ministry had resulted in very few converts. That might explain the discouragement he felt in Corinth and account for the direct encouragement he received from God while there. We all go through hard times in life. However, if we continually seek God and surrender to his will, he will be there to encourage us when times get tough. God doesn't help us along to a certain point just to leave us to be destroyed.

Acts 18:24-28

Apollos was very well educated, both in philosophy and in the Scriptures, and was a skilled orator. Yet after hearing him speak in the synagogue, Priscilla and Aquila realized that, as gifted as he was, he still needed to know more about Jesus Christ. They invited him home and explained the gospel to him, filling him in on the things he didn't yet know or understand. We may know people who seem to have it all together, yet they are missing an essential element to a healthy life—a true understanding of and relationship with God. Their giftedness need not deter us from sharing the truth with them. We may find that they sense a need for God and are ready to respond to our message.

Acts 19:11-20

The people of Ephesus were in bondage to their fear of the spiritual realm, and the seven sons of Sceva made their living by allaying their fears. When they were confronted by a real demon, however, these men were powerless. The demon recognized the authority of Jesus Christ and Paul because God had specifically called them to their tasks. But the seven sons of Sceva were beaten up by the demon because he did not recognize them. The evil one is more powerful than we are, and he works in opposition to God's will. We need God's power at work in our lives so that when we encounter opposition from the evil one, we can send him fleeing. God promises that if we resist the devil, he will flee from us (see James 4:7). We dare not resist in our own strength; we need and have the power of God's Spirit.

Acts 20:1-6

Paul was accountable to, and responsible for, others. He didn't just make converts; he followed up on them. He cared for them and helped them to grow spiritually. When we share the message of hope with others, it is important to do more than just share the Good News. We need to introduce others into a community of believers where they can grow and be nurtured in their newfound faith. Paul's entourage pulled together as a team for the sake of the common welfare of growing believers. So we also can join hands with other believers.

Acts 20:7-12

Eutychus fell asleep while Paul was preaching, and he fell to his death. However, God used Paul to bring him back to life. When we know the happy outcome, this story can seem somewhat humorous—especially since we sense a kindred spirit with Eutychus. (Who among us has not fallen asleep during a sermon?) Luke recounts this event to remind us that God has the power to restore the dead to new life. God works beyond our own natural capabilities, doing what we would consider impossible. He can do the same for those of us who are dead in sin. We can find hope for restoration in this amazing story.

Acts 20:22-38

As Paul met with the Ephesian elders, he told them of his plans to return to Jerusalem. Paul sensed a clear leading by the Holy Spirit and was determined to follow it. Apparently, Paul was aware that God's plan might lead him through difficult, even fatal, circumstances. Yet this knowledge didn't slow him down at all. Following God's will is not always an easy path to follow. Sometimes it leads to loneliness and loss. Sometimes it causes conflict with our friends and family members. Even though following God's will can be hard, it is always the best way to go. Paul's example encourages us to pray for clear knowledge of God's will and the power to obey it.

Acts 21:7-9

The last recorded event involving Philip had taken place some 25 years earlier while he traveled to Caesarea (8:40). After that time, Philip not only had a continuing ministry, but he also had a godly family with four gifted daughters. Philip had instilled in them his faith in Christ and God's power for life and ministry. This indicates that Christianity, though new, had the power to transform lives permanently. Philip demonstrated the kind of perseverance and fruitfulness we can have today.

Acts 21:18-26

Paul had been accused of encouraging Jews to live a Gentile lifestyle. So James suggested that Paul participate in a special vow to show the Jews that he was still one of them. Paul's love for his brothers and sisters led him to do what he could to remove anything that might destroy the faith of a Jewish believer. Thus, Paul followed James's advice and participated in the prescribed Temple worship. Like Paul, we may need to make some personal sacrifices in order to avoid unnecessary conflicts. As we learn to give up our own rights for the sake of others, we will discover the joy that can be found only by serving God and his people.

Acts 22:1-21

In this second account of Paul's conversion (see 9:1-18), we learn one additional detail about Paul's life: He had studied under the great rabbinical scholar Gamaliel. We are impressed once again with Paul's rage against the believers prior to his conversion. But despite Paul's former prestige, he quickly admitted his helplessness when Christ appeared to him in a blinding light. Others had to lead him by the hand due to his temporary blindness. Fortunately, we don't all need such a dramatic event to force us to face our need for God. However, we must all realize that without God we cannot overcome our spiritual blindness. This momentous occasion was a crossroads for Paul. From this point on, God completely redirected the course of his life. When we surrender our lives to God, we must put aside our sinful pride and be willing to follow him anywhere he leads. Then he can redirect the course of our lives to fulfill the plans he has for us.

Acts 23:12-35

This chapter in Paul's life features the courage of a young boy. Paul's young nephew risked his life to warn his uncle of a plot against his life. With this information, the Roman commander was able to make adjustments in his plan and move Paul safely to Caesarea. A military escort accompanied Paul on his journey that very night, and a letter to the governor, Felix, won Paul another chance to speak for himself and God. Thus God providentially worked through a variety of people to move Paul one step closer to Rome. God uses people—little children and governors alike—to accomplish his divine will.

Acts 24:26-27

Felix made no decision on Paul's case. He probably was afraid that if he set Paul free, the Jews would respond with rebellion. In the end, Felix just left Paul in prison. Perhaps he hoped Paul would be able to muster a bribe to buy his release. Whatever his reason for keeping Paul, Felix allowed the apostle to languish in jail for at least two years. By the grace of God Paul endured his long stay with incredible patience and continued growing spiritually. There are times when we feel stuck, not knowing what God is doing. During these times, we need to ask God for patience. Beyond that, we can continue to practice our spiritual disciplines so that we are growing, or at least preserving our spiritual gains, regardless of our circumstances.

Acts 26:1-23

This is the third account of Paul's conversion in the book of Acts (see 9:1-18; 22:1-21). It seems that Paul had become quite skilled at sharing his testimony of how God changed his life. Before meeting Christ, Paul was a powerful enemy of the Christian faith and tried to stop its growth (26:9-11). Paul then met Jesus in a dramatic way, which led to his spiritual awakening (26:12-16) and his imprisonment. Paul went on to share his testimony before King Agrippa II, who also needed to hear the message (26:18). No person is so high or great in this earthly realm that they do not need to hear God's message of salvation.

Acts 26:19-23

Paul assured King Agrippa II that he was suffering persecution, not because he had done anything wrong, but because he was now preaching the faith he had once tried to destroy. Paul showed that what he was preaching as a Christian was really in agreement with the Old Testament Scriptures. The basic teaching of both Old and New Testaments is that God desires to deliver people from the power of sin and has done so perfectly through the work of God's anointed one—Jesus. That scriptural message of God's desire to save us is essential to all spiritual renewal.

Acts 26:24-29

Paul was so concerned about the salvation of other people that he had little time to worry about his own problems. Here he risked his life to share his testimony with a man who had the power to have him killed. This conversation with Herod Agrippa II shows Paul's burning desire to soften and reclaim even the most hardened of hearts. As it was for Paul, it can be helpful for us to get our eyes off our own afflictions and focus on the needs of others.

Acts 27:1-15

It was part of God's plan that Paul go to Rome, but his journey there was hardly a beeline. After years in prison, he was finally put on a ship bound for Rome, but he arrived there only after surviving a life-threatening storm and shipwreck. Paul had no control over the means or timing of getting to his destination. But since Paul knew God wanted him in Rome, he was confident he would eventually get there. Similarly, we can be sure that God wants us to make spiritual progress. Like Paul, we have little control over the route we will take to get there. Our faithfulness does not ensure a life without storms or shipwrecks. Yet God does guarantee that his presence and power will be right there with us and that we will arrive at our destination in the end.

Acts 27:13-26

After two storm-tossed weeks, the ship had begun to fall apart, the sailors had given up hope, and everyone was hungry and terrified. Yet Paul urged all to believe his promise from God that they would survive. The fate of 276 people—passengers and crew—hung in the balance. Paul's courageous faith was met with assurances that he would reach Rome, yet not without still more hardships. Life can be like that. We are assured by faith of a positive outcome, but it is usually attained by persevering through difficult times.

Acts 27:27-42

Paul assured the soldiers that even though the ship would be destroyed, all the passengers would reach land safely. This happened just as Paul said it would. The next day the ship was grounded on a sandbar and destroyed by the winds and waves, but not before all the passengers safely reached shore. Few of us have been given a glimpse into the future like Paul had. But we can have the same confidence in the power of God to protect us when we follow his will, walking obediently by faith.

Acts 28:1-10

Safe on the island of Malta, the ship's crew and passengers spent the winter there. If stormy seas and a shipwreck couldn't thwart God's plan for Paul, neither would the bite of a poisonous snake. Paul suffered no ill effects. While Paul was deterred from reaching Rome, he spent his time and talents helping people. To Paul, even obstacles were opportunities to serve others and share his faith. We, too, can turn our obstacles into wonderful opportunities to share our faith.

Acts 28:30-31

Even under house arrest, Paul experienced the peace and contentment that come only by following God's will. Paul used his time in prison to carry the message of salvation to people in need. The apostle's life is an example to each of us, showing the importance and benefits of persisting in our relationship with God and sharing our faith even when we are limited in some way. Regardless of our limitations, God can still use our lives if we surrender to him in the midst of our current circumstances. God can show us how we can be used where we are right now if we accept responsibility for our lives and use our talents to glorify God wherever we are.

Rom. 1:1

In this letter, Paul introduced himself as a slave of Jesus Christ. Paul was a Roman citizen, for whom a life of slavery was normally unthinkable. But Paul purposely used this word to demonstrate his humility and dependence upon God. We all need this type of humility so that we can surrender our lives to God and experience the spiritual renewal he offers.

Rom. 1:1-5

For the apostle Paul, the Good News was more than just the events of Christ's death, burial, and resurrection. It certainly included these facts, but the Good News moves beyond the amazing events of Jesus' life into our own sinful and broken lives. Here we are told that we can die to the power of sin because of what Jesus has done. Then we can be resurrected to new life! The Good News is a promise that there is power available to help us change. It is the story of God's kindness to us through Jesus Christ, no matter what we have done in the past. This Good News is for us. As we put our lives in God's hands, he will give us the power we need to change. Then, as we grow, we will experience God's joy in our lives and the desire to share the Good News with others.

Rom. 1:16-17

All of us have failed in one way or another, and we all know what shame feels like. We may be ashamed of our past failures, our bad habits, or even the sinful thoughts we hide from others. Paul tells us that the Good News of Jesus Christ is God's power to deliver us from all the shameful things in our lives. And it's for everyone! God has the power to deliver and transform us when we surrender our lives to him. The Good News is certainly nothing to be ashamed of!

Rom. 1:21-32

When we go our own way apart from God, we follow the downward path that Paul describes here. We exchange our worship of God for the worship of things and other people. We exchange our worship of the living God for a willful form of sin. If we go this far and move beyond these forms of sin, it is possible to enter a state of deep spiritual blindness where we believe lies and reject truth. This passage describes the natural consequence of pride and self-sufficiency. Whenever God reveals these attitudes in our lives, we must take it very seriously. When we confess these, God can break their power over us, allowing us to see the truth, freeing us to worship the true and living God.

Rom. 2:1-4

In the previous chapter Paul described a life that was completely given over to sin. As we read that description, it is easy to point a finger at someone else. Paul quickly corrects our tendency to do this by showing that everyone is in the same boat. We all do things that are wrong; we hide all kinds of sins and failures. Spiritual growth does not come by condemning others; it comes from honestly reflecting on our own lives, confessing our own sins, and surrendering to God.

Rom. 2:6-16

God is impartial in his judgments. He doesn't judge us merely by the way we talk, walk, or dress. He judges us by whether or not we obey his will. There is no in-group in God's eyes. The Jewish people of Paul's day believed that they had special privileges from God purely because of their lineage, but here we find that God makes the same offer to all people. If we confess our sins and seek God's forgiveness, we become his chosen people.

Rom. 2:28-29

Paul makes an important point in these verses: God is concerned that our hearts be open and obedient to him. Our outward religious activities are important only if they are a reflection of our love for God and others. We can always fake our behavior, and we can outwardly fake our relationship with God. If we just go through the motions and make no real commitment to God, we cannot make progress for long. But if we are motivated by our love for God and other people, our outward behavior will be the natural result of our inner devotion.

Rom. 3:9-10

Paul summarized his earlier discussion by concluding that "No one is righteous—not even one." No one is exempt—we are all fallen and sinful; we are all in need of salvation. If we pretend to be healthy and without defect, we only prove that we are refusing to see the truth. Spiritual renewal can begin only after we have seen this truth and admitted it. When we recognize that we are broken and helpless, God steps in and provides the power we need.

Rom. 3:20

The more we know about God's laws, God's heart, and God's claim on our lives, the clearer it becomes that we don't measure up. God's laws in the Old Testament reflect God's will for us, and following them would lead to a healthy life. But none of us can follow these ideals under our own power. As we realize this, we recognize our need for God's gracious forgiveness and his power on a daily basis to help us follow his plan for right living. God will give us the forgiveness and power we need as we continually confess where we fall short and ask for his help.

Rom. 3:21-26

This is one of the richest sections in the Bible for understanding why Jesus died on the cross. We are all made right with God through faith in Jesus Christ. Not one of us is so good that we don't need God's help; not one of us is so bad that we are beyond the reach of God's loving help. Paul says that Jesus has set us free from God's wrath against sin. Our salvation is freely given, but it was expensively purchased by God!

Rom. 3:27

Again Paul emphasized that God deals with all people on the same basis, regardless of our deeds. All must come to God through faith. This leaves us nothing to boast about; none of us can be saved by anything we could do or say. But there is no reason for us to hide from God either; there can be nothing so bad in our lives that it cannot be forgiven completely by our merciful God.

Rom. 4:1-3

Paul referred to Abraham as an example of what it means to come to God in faith. As we look at Abraham in the book of Genesis, we find a man who was set apart for God. Despite his mistakes, he could be considered a person who had it all together. But Abraham had to come to God the same way we do—through faith. He did nothing to deserve the special promises that God gave him. In the same way, we can do nothing to deserve the promises of forgiveness and redemption that God offers us. No good deed can make us deserving of God's gracious forgiveness, yet no failure is too great an obstacle for God's restoring power. When we entrust our lives to God and believe that he can help us, God then gives us the power and courage to progress in our spiritual lives.

Rom. 4:6-8

Many of us have failed desperately; we have hurt others in ways that cannot easily be repaired. What can we do with our guilt? King David was guilty of serious sins—adultery, deceit, and murder—yet when he acknowledged his guilt, confessed it to God, and experienced God's forgiveness, he found joy. Each of these steps was an act of faith, but the result was joy. Acknowledging our sin and confessing it take an act of faith, but as we do so, we will receive God's forgiveness and joy.

Rom. 4:23-25

When we believe in God and the restoration he offers in Jesus Christ, an exchange takes place. We turn our unmanageable lives over to God, including all our sin and guilt, and he gives us his goodness and forgiveness in return. When Jesus died on the cross, he took our sin and guilt away. When Jesus rose from the grave, God demonstrated his power to transform us and fill us with his goodness. As we follow God's plan for restoration, we die to our sin and failures and then rise to new and better lives.

Rom. 5:1-11

Paul used several phrases to describe our painful condition: "We were utterly helpless" (5:6); we were "sinners" (5:6, 8); and we were God's "enemies" (5:10). It was precisely when we were in this condition that God decided to solve our sin problem for us. He loved us so much that he sent his Son to die on the cross to set us free from the power of sin. We cannot be any worse than the way Paul described us here, so God's love and acceptance of us can never be negated by our failures. With a Savior like that, we can confidently surrender our lives to him.

Rom. 5:12-13

How can we be judged for something Adam did thousands of years ago? It doesn't seem fair. Many of us find it easy to point a finger at others, blaming them for our problems. Here, Paul made it clear that Adam's failure and the failures of our ancestors should not be our primary concern. Our problems may have started with the mistakes of others, but we have all solidly aligned ourselves with Adam by repeatedly making the same mistakes. We are made of the same stuff, prone to rebel against God and his ways. We will suffer the consequences for the sins we have committed if God doesn't intervene. We don't need fairness from God; we need his mercy. And that is what God provides for all who look to him in faith.

Rom. 5:15-21

Paul had already asserted that we stand forgiven and joyful in God's grace (5:2), and here he added more punch to that reality. The essential nature of God's grace is that it rules over the presence of sin and death in our world. While Adam's failure brought on the reign of sin and death, Jesus Christ has brought the reign of life through his grace for all who are willing to receive it. Our old lives represented the rule of death through Adam. Our new lives in Jesus Christ represent the rule of God's grace, kindness, and love. As we surrender our lives to God, we can begin to receive the wonderful lives that he offers.

Rom. 6:1-3

If God loves to forgive, why not sin to give him added opportunities to forgive us? We may not admit it, but we act on this principle all too often. Paul's response to our use of this excuse for sin is an emphatic no. Such an attitude presumes upon God's grace and makes light of the tremendous cost of our salvation. It is unthinkable that we would continue to allow sin to be our master when we have surrendered our lives to God.

Rom. 6:2-11

Paul examined how we can receive new life through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. He traced the stages of Jesus' life: (1) His earthly body that was subject to death; (2) his death, burial, and resurrection; and (3) his resurrection body that was no longer under the power of death. Next, Paul showed how our own lives can be parallel to that of Jesus: (1) We begin under the mastery of sin and death; (2) we identify with Jesus' death, burial, and resurrection; (3) we receive new lives, free from the power of sin and death. God has the power to take people headed for destruction and set them on the road to new life.

Rom. 6:12-14

Paul recognized that temptation would be an ongoing reality, so he gave us this warning: "Do not give in." The temptations we experience are extensions of the sinful natures that exist in each of us. Though we cannot overcome our sinful natures alone, we can ask God to help us. We are to reckon our sinful natures as crucified with Christ. As we call on the Lord, we have access to the Holy Spirit, who will help us overcome the powerful temptations in our lives.

Rom. 6:19-22

It is impossible to be neutral when dealing with the spiritual realm. We all have a master—either sin or God. Making sin our master may seem fun for a while, but it will lead only to a life that is painfully out of control. When we surrender our lives to God, we affirm that God is our master. This is the only way we can hope to experience restoration of our lives. At first God's way may look harder than the way of sin, but in time we will discover that God's way is the only way to a joyful and meaningful life.

Rom. 7:13

Paul didn't want to leave us with the impression that God's laws are bad. God's laws were meant to lead us to a meaningful life in close fellowship with our gracious God. The real problem is our inability to live up to the standards God has set. By nature we are flawed and inclined toward sin. We don't set out to become enslaved to sin, but if we follow the dictates of our sinful natures, that is what eventually happens. We can be thankful that God has made a provision for our weaknesses, solving the sin problem through the finished work of Jesus Christ. Now, if we surrender our lives to God, we can experience his transforming power. He will provide us with the help we need to break free of slavery to our old natures and be ruled by the Holy Spirit.

Rom. 7:14-17

In these verses, Paul described a struggle all of us can identify with. We long to do what is good, healthy, and right, but we end up committing the same old sins. As we honestly reflect on our lives, we admit our failures and seek to change, but we still may fall back into our old habits once again. We are not alone in this process—many people make this mistake. But we must not allow this struggle to discourage us. We need to continue to confess our sins to God, even if we’ve confessed the same sin numerous times. God promises to forgive us and cleanse us from all unrighteousness (see 1 John 1:9). We never become so spiritual that we can stop confessing our sins. It would also be wise to establish some relationships with people who will hold us accountable and help us set some limits for ourselves in order to guard against sin. Our tendency to fall back into the same old sins will be lessened as God transforms us through this process.

Rom. 7:18-20

Paul recognized the power of sin in his life and admitted how helpless he was against it. When we admit that we don’t have power to overcome the sin that entangles us, we will have made a significant step in the right direction. Only then will we be ready to accept the help that God offers; and only with God’s power will we be able to overcome the temptations we face.

Rom. 8:1

This is one of the great affirmations of Scripture. We will never be condemned by God for our sins because Jesus Christ has paid the price once and for all. When we decide to surrender our lives to God, we can be confident that we will not be condemned by him. If we have accepted God’s offer of forgiveness in Christ, there is “no condemnation.”

Rom. 8:2-4

Once we recognize how helpless we are to fight our own sinful natures, the next step is to look outside ourselves to God for the power we need. The life-giving Spirit that Paul mentioned here is the Holy Spirit. He was present at the creation of the world (Genesis 1-2) and is available to help us as we allow God to re-create our lives according to his design. We cannot overcome the sins that entangle us by ourselves, but God is more than able to help us. He sent his Son and destroyed the power of sin through his death and resurrection. Now we can find the power to obey God's plan through the Holy Spirit, who is always with us.

Rom. 8:5-6

Paul puts people in two categories—those who let themselves be controlled by their self-serving “lower natures” and those who follow after the Holy Spirit. Once we have made the decision to surrender our lives to God, it is a daily decision to consciously choose to follow his way. We need to continually seek God, surrender our lives to him, honestly reflect on our lives in order to see the truth, speak the truth, accept responsibility for our lives, confess our sins, let go of the past, allow God to redirect our course, and continue growing spiritually.

Rom. 8:9-11

Either we have the Spirit of God living in us, or we don't. How does the Spirit of God come to live within us? By our act of faith in surrendering our lives to God and by our acceptance of the work of Christ on our behalf. Can we feel the Spirit of God within us? Sometimes, but we can know he is there whether we feel his presence or not. God gave us the Holy Spirit when we turned our lives over to him. We receive the same Holy Spirit who raised Jesus from the dead. God will put his power to work within us to bring about our spiritual renewal and transformation.

Rom. 8:26-28

Prayer is one of the ways we draw closer to God and preserve our spiritual gains. Paul assures us that the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit is at work within us as we pray. We are not left alone to work out our problems. As we entrust our lives to God, he directs the events of our lives, even the painful ones, for our good. He can turn even our mistakes into the means for our growth and blessing.

Rom. 8:31-39

Our security is based on God's unshakable love for us. The love God has for us is not just an emotion, but an actual fact. God proved his love for us by willingly sending his Son to suffer and die. So why would he hold back any lesser gift? In fact, there is nothing in the whole universe that can separate us from God's love! What more could God say to us to make us more secure in his love?

Rom. 9:25-26

God specializes in loving those who are unlovely and undeserving. The fact is, not one of us deserves God's love, and those of us who think we deserve it are refusing to see the truth. God's love is bestowed on all who admit their need and respond to his love for them. Sometimes those who are despised by society are the first to admit their need for God. That is why such people often have the most dramatic stories of how God has transformed their lives. No one is innocent of wrongdoing; yet no sin is too great for God to forgive. Thus, those who have admitted their failures are better off than "respectable" people who are refusing to see the truth about their need for God. Admitting that we have failed and that we need God is essential. We must not allow pride and social standing to keep us from admitting our need for God at any point in our spiritual growth process.

Rom. 10:8-15

Our salvation comes by trusting Jesus Christ; there is nothing we can do to earn it. God accepts us because of what Christ has done on our behalf, no matter how great our successes or failures. We have no reason to hide our mistakes from God; he wants to relieve us of the burdens we carry. He invites us to surrender our lives to him and receive his forgiveness.

Rom. 11:1-10

Paul asked, "Has God rejected his own people, the nation of Israel?" The apostle answered his own question: "Of course not!" Even though a majority of Jews had rejected Jesus' messianic claims, there was still hope for them. It is never too late to surrender our lives to God and experience his healing power and grace. As long as we have breath, we can still ask for God's help and forgiveness. Even though this is true, however, an extended period of spiritual blindness is always costly. During our years of refusing to see the truth we may cause great pain to others and to ourselves. The longer we wait, the more difficult it will be to confess our sins, accept responsibility for what we have done, and ask God to change us. The time to seek God and redirect the course of our lives is now!

Rom. 11:33-36

After sketching out the broad contours of God's plan for us, Paul could only fall on his knees in worship of God's majesty. God's plan, wisdom, knowledge, and ways are all so far beyond ours that we have only one option: to humbly give him the praise he deserves! For those of us who recognize how limited and helpless we are, the fact that God's power and wisdom are great can be an encouragement, especially since he loves us and wants to help us.

Rom. 12:1-2

Here we are called to offer our bodies to God as living sacrifices. We are exhorted to make the decision to lay our lives on the altar before God so he can use us for his work. We are called to follow God's plan, utilizing the power he offers. As we do this, we will become a showcase to others of what God's power can do. And as we grow, we will discover the joy and meaning that can be experienced when we offer our lives to God.

Rom. 12:3

This verse is a call to honesty and true humility. We are to honestly reflect on our lives, making an assessment of both our strengths and weaknesses. This will teach us humility as we uncover our faults and confess them to God. It will also help us develop a grateful attitude toward God as we discover the many gifts he has given us.

Rom. 12:4-8

God has an important role for each of us. We are all given special gifts for building up the body of believers. Each of us can be used by God to accomplish something significant. As we surrender our lives to God as living sacrifices, we should further seek him to see how we can use our gifts. We start by using the talents, resources, and abilities we already know we have. As we serve others in this way, God will further reveal our spiritual gifts so that we can continue to bless others.

Rom. 12:9-21

We are called to let love govern all our attitudes and actions. We are called to love even those we consider to be our enemies. We have all been wronged by others. God's love allows us to forgive them and seek reconciliation. All of us have hurt others. Love calls us to ask for their forgiveness and do what we can to make up for the trouble and pain we have caused. Often we need to make a special effort to reach out to immediate family members—parents, siblings, children, a spouse. Love sometimes calls us to swallow our pride and admit our wrongs to others. When we do, our relationships can be healed by God, and our own spiritual condition can be improved.

Rom. 13:1-7

Paul pointed out that government exists because God allows it to exist. Therefore, we are told to submit to the government as we would submit to God himself. We may wonder how God could want us to submit to authorities who do not always act with perfect justice. Elsewhere in Scripture we find that there is a place for civil disobedience (see Acts 4:13-22). Sometimes we need to resist evil, even if it is sanctioned by the governing authorities. But we are called to support and obey authorities that seek to uphold justice. When governing authorities stand in direct contradiction to God's will, we need to seek the support of others and try to change the situation.

Rom. 13:8-10

Spiritual progress can take place only as we learn to love others. Love is not just an emotion we feel; it is an attitude of unselfish concern for others. If we love God and the people around us, we will treat others with respect. We would never harm them, steal from them, or deprive them to satisfy our own selfish desires. Love is the opposite of selfishness. As we continue to reflect honestly on our lives, we can use love as the standard by which we judge our behavior. Do we act with the best interests of others in mind? If we measure all our actions against the measuring stick of love and correct them when they do not exemplify love, we will experience true spiritual progress.

Rom. 13:12-14

When we surrender our lives to God, we are given new identities; we become children of the light. People who live in the light are awake—their eyes are open. They are not in the darkness of spiritual blindness. In other words, they have the ability to see and admit the truth about themselves. One way we can make sure we are walking in the light is to continually take in God's Word and examine our lives in its light. This will keep our eyes open to the truth.

Rom. 14:1-4

We may find it easy to judge others who are still struggling spiritually. We might even be tempted to show them how “strong” we are by participating in activities that would cause them to stumble, tempt them to sin, or offend their consciences. Even if we have progressed spiritually to the point that certain circumstances no longer trouble us, we still need to be sensitive to the fact that our friends may be led astray by our activities. Our love for others will lead us to avoid activities that might lead to their downfall. The more mature we are, the more responsible we will be to respond to others in a loving way.

Rom. 14:10-12

At times we may be tempted to point out the failures of others instead of looking critically at our own lives. But it isn't our primary responsibility to straighten out other people's lives. Besides, the job of straightening out our own lives is more than enough to keep us busy, at least in the initial stages. If we spend our time pointing the finger at others, we will never make progress ourselves.

Rom. 14:22-23

At times, we may be tempted to do things that are not necessarily wrong but will lead us toward a fall. We know such activities are dangerous, but it is hard to turn away, especially if our friends are involved. We need to learn that when we feel something is wrong for us, it is wrong for us. It may not be wrong for someone else, but that is not our concern. We are responsible for our own lives. We must accept this responsibility, which includes keeping our own consciences clean. We must not only avoid sin, but we must also avoid the path that leads toward sin. This is where the people who know us can help, by holding us accountable not to follow the paths that have led us to sin in the past.

Rom. 15:1-6

God wants us to show consideration for others. Our spiritual pursuits should never cause us to be selfish. Rather, true spiritual growth will be characterized by our willingness to take others into account and show care for them. Christ, who is our highest spiritual example, came to serve others, not himself. We, too, must learn to be patient with one another. This does not come naturally. Therefore, we must seek God and ask him to help us develop the attitude of Christ when dealing with others. This will motivate us to nurture our personal relationships, showing consideration and deference toward others.

1 Cor. 1:2

Corinth was a giant cultural melting pot with a great diversity of ethnic groups, religions, intellectual perspectives, and moral standards. It had a reputation for being fiercely independent and was as decadent as any city in the known world. Idolatry flourished, and there were more than a dozen pagan temples that at one time had employed at least a thousand religious prostitutes. The new believers in this city had to deal with many deep-rooted habits and attitudes as they sought to nurture their new lives in Christ. The world of Corinth was not unlike much of the world today.

1 Cor. 1:4-9

Although there were problems among the Corinthian believers, Paul began his letter to them on a positive note. He understood that confronting others about their failures is more effective when we approach them diplomatically. We need to gain a hearing by recognizing the good things in the lives of those we need to confront. In this way, we show that we are concerned about them and value them as people.

1 Cor. 1:18-19

Some of the Corinthian believers followed the human wisdom of the day, which called the idea of salvation in Christ into question. It seemed too simple! How could God forgive us freely through what Christ did on the cross? Surely we need to do something special or know something special to be saved! Paul made it clear that we need nothing but willing hearts to receive God's power and forgiveness. We have no power or ability that can overcome the power of sin in our lives. In fact, a life of self-sufficiency is ultimately self-destructive. When we surrender our lives to God, we accept his way—the way of the cross. Only then can we experience his power in our lives.

1 Cor. 1:26-31

Through a series of illustrations Paul pointed out that God's plan for our redemption doesn't utilize our human wisdom, strength, or skill. And we don't have to be famous or rich to receive God's forgiveness and power. Self-sufficient people may have a hard time accepting this. We want to feel worthy of our salvation. But until we can admit that we need God's help to change, we will not have the power to redirect the course of our lives.

1 Cor. 2:1-5

Many times when we seek to help others, we overwhelm them with a series of complicated explanations and instructions. Paul realized that doing this would only confuse the Corinthians, making them think that salvation was dependent on some kind of special wisdom or knowledge. So he brought them the plain message of the gospel—there is nothing we can do to save ourselves; God has done everything necessary for our deliverance. Paul kept the message simple. As we share God's message with others, we, too, need to keep things simple and trust the power of the Holy Spirit to work in the lives of the people we are trying to help.

1 Cor. 2:7

God has had a good plan for us from the beginning of time. If we ask him to work in our lives, that plan will come about. No matter how many mistakes we have made, God can still turn things around so they work out according to his plan. Our part is to surrender our lives to him and seek to follow his will as he reveals it to us. No matter what we have done in the past, God still loves us and can work his restoration within us.

1 Cor. 2:9-10

When we feel as if we have lost our direction, we may blame God or feel that somehow he is making things worse. Paul reminded the Corinthians that God had wonderful things planned for them, things even more wonderful than they could imagine. This message is for us, too. If we surrender our lives to God, he can build new lives for us that are beyond our wildest dreams.

1 Cor. 2:11-12

Some of us may wonder how we could ever know God's will for our lives. Here we find that we can know God's mind and heart because he has placed his Holy Spirit within us to communicate these things to us. Often the Holy Spirit uses God's Word, the Bible, to communicate with us. What a privilege! God's presence in our lives will guide us in the way he wants us to go.

1 Cor. 2:14-15

Even our ability to see the truth is a gift from God. That is why we must begin our quest for spiritual renewal by seeking God and surrendering to him. When we do this, we receive the Holy Spirit. In turn, it is the Holy Spirit who reveals God's truth and helps us understand God's Word. The person who will not surrender to God has no access to the understanding that only the Holy Spirit can give.

1 Cor. 3:1-4

Part of becoming mature is realizing that following our own desires only leads down a dead-end street. We remain "infants" as long as we demand our own way and are always divisive. We should examine our lives to see if this characterizes our relationships. If so, we need to confess our sin and ask God to help us grow up.

1 Cor. 3:5-6

Each person has a part to play in accomplishing God's work on earth. No one person is all important, and no one is unimportant. We must beware of elevating some individuals and tearing down others who work together to do God's will. Our focus should be to elevate God and show respect for all those who do his work. We, too, should do our part, whether it is planting, watering, or harvesting, to accomplish God's overall plan.

1 Cor. 3:18-20

It is possible for our intelligence to get in the way of our spiritual progress. As we analyze what God calls us to do, we may find it somewhat foolish or demeaning. Sometimes following God's plan will not make perfect sense to us. We might even find it embarrassing at times. Regardless of how well we understand or how comfortable we feel, God's way is best. It's fine to try to understand, but we must do so with the intention of following God's will even if it doesn't make perfect sense to us.

1 Cor. 4:17

Paul sent Timothy to remind the Corinthian believers of what Paul had taught them. The apostle realized that they needed someone to hold them accountable to the truth they had been taught and to encourage them to persevere in their faith. One of the best ways to protect ourselves from sinful behavior is to be accountable to someone else. Mentors and those who hold us accountable to obey God's Word are there to help us. Through remaining accountable to one another, we develop the kind of faithfulness that is essential to spiritual growth.

1 Cor. 5:1-5

We face many of the same forms of sexual immorality that the Corinthians faced. Like the people of Corinth, we tend to put on a blindfold and tell ourselves that everything is all right. Ignoring problems associated with illicit sexual activity can build barriers between ourselves and others. In time, we even grow distant from God. Such refusal to admit the truth allows the problems in our churches and communities to fester until individuals and families are torn apart. We need to open our eyes to the problems around us and confront them together as a community, just as Paul advised the Corinthians to do.

1 Cor. 5:6-8

Paul called the Corinthian believers to remove the unrepentant sinner from among their fellowship. If they didn't do this, his destructive activities would eat away at their church fellowship like a cancer. Notice that when Paul called the Corinthians to excommunicate this unrepentant sinner, he also reminded them to involve themselves in wholesome activities. Not only are we to disassociate with believers who refuse to repent of sin, we are to pull away from our own destructive activities and relationships. We need to involve ourselves in wholesome activities and build relationships with people who will encourage us with sincerity and truth.

1 Cor. 5:9-13

Paul warned his people to avoid close relationships with Christians who were refusing to see the truth about their sin. But he didn't mean they were to totally isolate themselves from unbelievers. They were still to share the Good News with people who needed to hear the message. We, too, need to reach out to unbelievers, so that they can see Christ in us and repent of their sin.

1 Cor. 6:1-6

Taking someone to court, as painful as it may be, is often the easy way out of a conflict. Instead of working our problems out, we take them to an impartial judge. Though this can be helpful at times, dealing with conflict in such an indirect way usually leads to separation rather than reconciliation. Paul warned the Corinthian believers not to go to unbelieving judges to settle their disputes. If we claim to follow Christ, we need to try to resolve conflicts with other believers within the church whenever possible. We can do this through the help of the Holy Spirit. This way we testify to the world that in Christ true harmony can be found.

1 Cor. 6:12

Paul told the Corinthian believers to avoid involvement in activities that would be likely to seduce them back into their old ways of life. Many of our old activities and relationships are not wrong in themselves, but staying involved in these things will naturally lead us toward a downfall. If this is the case, these activities are not good for us. We need to avoid anything that might stop or slow our spiritual growth.

1 Cor. 6:18-20

Sexual sin affects us like no other sin. It isn't that it is the heaviest on some imaginary sin scale, but rather, that its effects are broad and devastating. In sexual sin, we sin not only against ourselves but also against other people and against God. Our bodies are the dwelling place of God's Holy Spirit, and they belong to God. This is one more reason for taking care of our bodies and seeking new life in Christ.

1 Cor. 7:2-5

Marriage is the place for sexual expression and fulfillment. Our bodies don't belong to us; they belong to God. But here Paul is saying that they also belong to our spouses. If we seek sexual fulfillment outside of marriage, we will find ourselves in the trap of selfish pleasure seeking. If we belong to God and to our spouses, we have the potential to act in ways to bring them great joy. Our challenge is to not seek only our personal gratification. As we keep our sexuality within the bounds of marriage, we can discover the joy that comes from living faithfully with another person and before God.

1 Cor. 7:8-9

If we are single, we may feel that our spiritual growth would be easier if we had the help of a spouse. If we are married, we may think we could focus more on spiritual growth if we were unmarried. Whether we are single or married, there are difficulties that we will have to deal with. When we find ourselves wishing we were in a different state, we are usually wanting to avoid the responsibilities of our present situation. We would be wise to seek ways to improve the situation we are in rather than abandon it for something else. Abandoning a relationship or desperately grasping at a new one will never solve our problems.

1 Cor. 7:10-15

Many of us have been hurt by divorce, either as participants or as children of divorced parents. Paul began his words on the subject with a firm reminder of God's command not to divorce. Yet he then recognizes that there are situations in which divorce is a legitimate option. The principle that comes from the command and supports Paul's suggestions is found here: God wants us to live in harmony with one another. When we are not experiencing harmony, we need to examine our lives to see if there is anything we can do to change. If, after making appropriate changes, we still face significant problems, we may need to help our spouse go through a similar process. Often a marriage counselor is needed to facilitate this process. Divorce is an option only when one of the partners refuses to remain faithful to his or her marriage commitment.

1 Cor. 7:20-24

The Roman world was filled with oppressed people, many of whom had been taken as children to a foreign land as slaves. Some of these slaves came to believe in Christ, and naturally, they yearned for their freedom. They would have been tempted to think they could be better Christians if only they were free. It is easy for us to fall into the same trap. We may look at others and think that different circumstances would make our lives easier. Instead of seeking new situations, we should seek a new relationship with God in our current situations. Once we have surrendered our lives to God, we have a new power at work within us—regardless of our outward circumstances.

1 Cor. 8:1-3

True spirituality is not evidenced by how much we know but by how well we love others. Therefore, we should not reflect on our lives to see how much we know or how much we know as compared to others. Rather, our personal reflection should consider how we are demonstrating love in our everyday lives.

1 Cor. 8:10-13

We are allowed to exercise our personal freedom until it causes others to stumble in their faith. We can try to justify our actions, but love is the only principle that will guide our lives properly. When we love, our freedom to do certain things will not be as important as our relationships with others. We will learn to put their needs before our own desires. Love is to be the measuring stick for our behavior.

1 Cor. 9:4-12

Paul set himself up as a model for what he had just said about giving up personal freedom in order to show love toward others. Paul had all the rights we have, but he willingly gave them up because of his relationship with Jesus Christ and his desire to help others. We may feel that we have certain freedoms and rights, but if we desire to build up the church, we may have to give up some of those rights in order to help our brothers and sisters in Christ.

1 Cor. 9:15-18

Paul gave up his right to be paid for his work in the ministry, choosing instead to work to support himself. The point wasn't whether or not he should have been paid. He was illustrating the principle that when something is important, we may have to give up some of our rights and freedoms to accomplish it. If we hope to make spiritual progress, our relationship with Jesus Christ needs to take a central place in our lives. We may need to give up some of our possessions, activities, and sinful relationships in order to achieve the freedom that we long for.

1 Cor. 9:19-23

Paul left us with some helpful hints about how to share God's message with others. He shows us that if we want to communicate, we must first take the time to understand the other person. Paul listened to his audience and found common ground with them before he took steps to help them change. As we seek to help others, we begin by gaining their confidence. We don't need to be good at winning arguments; we need to be good at listening and showing that we care. Paul listened to the needs of people and then presented his message in a way that met their specific needs. We can do the same as we carry the message of hope to hurting people.

1 Cor. 9:24-27

Developing spiritually is like training for a title bout in the boxing ring or getting ready for a marathon. These activities require a great deal of endurance and strict discipline for those who want to win. Paul makes it clear that growing in our relationship with God requires discipline and perseverance. We need to give up sinful activities that hold us back and press on to follow God's will for us.

1 Cor. 10:1-13

Paul had just used himself as an example of the disciplined, vigilant athlete; here he used the history of Israel to show us what not to be like. Israel's lack of self-discipline and vigilance against temptation led them into sin. They were overconfident, and that attitude led to a self-destructive pride that we must avoid. Notice that Paul held up Israel's failures as a warning to us. If we follow their example, we will suffer the same painful consequences that they did.

1 Cor. 10:23-33

Paul sought to balance his argument here, for it is easy to become too legalistic when pursuing spiritual growth. The balance can be found by exercising our freedom in Christ while being willing to give up any of our rights that might cause another to fall. If our actions are governed by our love for God and for those around us, we are on the right track.

1 Cor. 11:17-22

Paul spent some time here trying to solve a problem in the Corinthian church. Apparently some of the wealthier believers looked down on the poorer members and refused to share from their abundance at the Communion meal. Paul made it clear that attitudes of superiority are extremely destructive. There may be people in our church or community who we feel are below us, but this kind of attitude is sinful. In God's eyes, one person is no better than another. We are all broken by sin and need God's transforming power. Our material well-being or educational level does not make us better people. When we recognize this and humbly share our failures with others, we will be able to make spiritual progress.

1 Cor. 12:4-11

Each of us is given a special gift from God for the purpose of building up the church. When we "put ourselves down" and don't make use of our gifts, we are rejecting what God has given us. A vital aspect of our spiritual growth and development is to discover and use our spiritual gifts. We each have a part to play in the body of Christ so that his people can be blessed and can bless others.

1 Cor. 12:12-26

When we become proud of our gifts and accomplishments, we invariably end up hurting ourselves and others. All of us are gifted in one way or another, and our gifts ultimately come from God. If we do not recognize this truth, we will tend to take credit for our successes and flaunt them before others. When we have an accurate view of ourselves, we will give God the credit for the gifts he has given us and be thankful.

1 Cor. 12:31-13:3

Paul reminded the Corinthians that there is something greater than any of the gifts of the Spirit: love. He began by showing them that all their deeds, talents, and spiritual gifts amounted to nothing if they didn't love one another. Selfless love is necessary to make all our spiritual exercises worthwhile.

1 Cor. 13:4-7

Many people define love as an emotion and stop there. But Paul defined love as a commitment to act in a certain way toward others. We may not be able to conjure up the emotions and feelings of love, but we can certainly practice the behaviors he listed in these verses. The apostle knew that when we behave in loving ways, feelings of love soon follow.

1 Cor. 13:11-13

Spiritual growth is never complete in this life. We are still like children, needing to grow and mature. Only when we see God face to face will we be complete and whole. Paul shares this truth, not to discourage us, but to give us hope that someday we will be made perfect.

1 Cor. 14:1-12

In these verses, Paul returned to the subject of spiritual gifts. He warned us not to use our gifts to build ourselves up. All spiritual gifts are just that—gifts. They are given to us by God to be used to build others up and encourage them in their spiritual growth. Using our gifts for our own purposes shows that we have forgotten the one who gave the gifts in the first place—God.

1 Cor. 15:10

Paul recognized that without God's grace, he never would have accomplished the things he did. Our spiritual progress also must be accompanied by our recognition of God's help. When we fail to give God the credit for what he has done in our lives, we deny the truth of God's grace. Notice, however, that Paul also recognized his own hard work in the process. Our own spiritual growth is based on the grace of God and his desire to help us, but we still have a part in the equation: We have to work hard! Spiritual growth takes a combination of God's gracious power and our faithful participation.

1 Cor. 15:12-20

Some of the Corinthians had begun to question the hope of our being resurrected at Christ's return. So Paul reemphasized the importance of the Resurrection and the hope it offers to all of us, even those who are already dead. The greatest expression of God's power was raising Jesus from the grave. If God can do that, then he has the power to do anything! If God did not raise Jesus from the grave, however, then our God is powerless, and we are lost. Paul affirmed the truth that Jesus did rise from the dead and, in so doing, also affirmed the fact that we have access to the greatest power in the universe—God himself.

1 Cor. 15:29-34

If death is the end of everything, then a selfish, pleasure-seeking lifestyle may be a justifiable alternative. But Paul reminds us that our hope leads to an existence beyond the grave. It is this truth about the Resurrection that motivates us to make right choices and leave behind our old way of life. If we do things God's way, we have an eternity of joy and peace to look forward to. If we decide to do things our own way, we face an eternity of suffering.

1 Cor. 15:35-58

Sometimes our fear of death can motivate us to seek God and surrender to him. Yet our fear of death can also lead us to despair. It can bring out the best and the worst in us. Paul reminds us of a fact that can remove our fear of death: Jesus Christ has conquered death. His resurrection conquered death and sin. When we have the resurrection power of Jesus Christ at work within us, we can have confidence that we will live even after we die.

1 Cor. 16:5-18

Throughout this letter, Paul encouraged the Corinthians in their spiritual growth. In closing, Paul revealed his love for them and his trust in them by making personal requests. There is always a balance between caring for the hurts and needs of others and being able to ask for what we need as well. Healthy relationships are characterized by this kind of balanced give-and-take.

2 Cor. 1:1-7

Not only is God the God of peace, but he is also the God of comfort. Jesus Christ suffered greatly and unjustly when he went to the cross. He fully understands and identifies with our suffering, and he knows the kind of comfort we need. He is worthy of our trust and is able to help us through our struggles.

2 Cor. 1:8-10

Paul wrote of his own recent need for comfort from God (see 1:3-7). Apparently, Paul and his missionary group had been almost killed as they ministered in the Roman province of Asia, now southwestern Turkey. Yet even though Paul and his companions thought the end had come, God delivered them. Many of us have experienced God's delivering power in our own lives. Even when everything seems to be coming apart, God can rescue us from what appears to be sure destruction.

2 Cor. 1:11

It is essential that we learn to encourage others. That is exactly what Paul was asking the Corinthians to do when he requested their prayers. By interceding in prayer for the needs of the apostle and his companions, the Corinthian believers would be helping and strengthening them from a distance. Because of our own weaknesses, we sometimes are unable to help some of the people we care about. If they are involved in lifestyles that can lead us back into sin, we need to keep our distance. But this does not mean that we should forget about them. We can help them by praying that they will turn from their sin and seek God. He has the power to do for them what we may not be able to do through direct contact.

2 Cor. 1:23-2:4

For all of his strength of personality, Paul was not insensitive to the pain of his readers. In this case, the apostle knew that the strong rebuke he needed to give them would be devastating. He truly wanted to be positive, but he concluded that there was no way to avoid confronting them about their responsibilities before God and others. Sometimes we need to be comforted; other times we need to be confronted. The apostle Paul recognized that this was a time for honest confrontation. When we confront others about their failures, we must make sure that we are seeking their best, just as Paul did.

2 Cor. 2:5-11

A problem in the Corinthian church (probably the one described in 1 Corinthians 5:1-11) was the basis for Paul's rebuke here. When the troublemaker in question repented of his sin and honestly faced the consequences of his behavior, the Corinthian believers refused to forgive him. Paul pointed out how cruel it was to withhold forgiveness. The apostle explained that through their lack of forgiveness they were actually playing right into Satan's hands by discouraging the repentant party. We need to make sure that when others repent of their failures, we do our part to encourage the process of restoration and healing. Most of us have experienced the pain of being rejected, even after admitting our mistakes and trying to change. We should avoid causing someone else the same kind of pain.

2 Cor. 2:14-17

Paul shows us here that sharing our faith is a natural outworking of God's grace in our lives. As God transforms us, giving us victory over our sins, we begin to reflect his grace in our lives. The fragrance of God's transforming work will be readily evident to others. We don't have to be wonderful speakers to share the Good News. Our humble message passed along by word and deed may be all the encouragement someone needs to encourage them to turn to God.

2 Cor. 3:4-5

In his letters, Paul frequently comes across as a very confident person. He explains here, however, that his confidence is not so much self-confidence, as it is a "God-inspired" confidence. If we trust our competent God to work in and through us, we can know with confidence that the resources are available to overcome any problem we might face. The most healthy foundation for self-esteem is the knowledge that we are made in God's image (see Genesis 1:26-27) and that we are competent because of Christ's work on our behalf.

2 Cor. 3:6-16

Paul's contrast between the old covenant (the law of Moses) and the new covenant (salvation through Jesus Christ) is instructive. The glory of the law, as well as the glow on Moses' face from when he met God on Mount Sinai, was substantial. But it faded. Each time Moses met with God, the glory of God was refreshed in his life. Even so, our experience of “meeting” God is not a once-in-a-lifetime experience. We must continually go back to God’s Word and seek God’s face. Then his glory will be refreshed in our lives as well.

2 Cor. 3:17-18

The glory of God is seen in the new covenant as well as the old. But rather than being reflected on the outside, as with Moses’ face, the glory of the new covenant is a transformation from the inside out. This glory shines through the lives of all who trust Jesus Christ and whose lives are filled with the Holy Spirit. While our “glow” is not a physical manifestation, God changes us from glory to glory by his grace. The further we progress in our relationship with God, the more visible God’s glory becomes in our lives.

2 Cor. 4:3-4

If we are not willing to recognize the sin in our lives, we refuse to see the truth and cannot accept the gift of forgiveness that God offers us through a relationship with Jesus Christ. As we reflect honestly on our lives, God will help us see where we need to change. Then we can confess our sin and trust Jesus to forgive us and empower us to make the needed changes.

2 Cor. 4:8-11

Hard times tend to either crush and disillusion us or challenge and stimulate us. It is hard for us to keep going when the going gets tough. But it can be a real encouragement to know that God is with us in the midst of the trials we face and that he can use even our weaknesses for his glory. In fact, as others see God's work in our lives, they may gain the courage to face and conquer their own sins and areas of weakness with God's powerful help.

2 Cor. 4:16-18

When we surrender our lives to God, two opposite and somewhat confusing processes are simultaneously at work. On the one hand, physical deterioration and eventual death are inevitable, as are the distressing trials that accompany them. On the other hand, the glorious inner growth is preparing us day by day for the overwhelming glory and blessing we will experience in the presence of God throughout eternity. We may have to wait awhile for God's eternal blessings. But if we trust God to help us in this life of decay and death, we can be sure of his blessings in the future.

2 Cor. 5:1-5

Paul reminded his readers that their weak bodies would someday be replaced by glorious new ones. To many of us, the aging process is a depressing reality, one we'd like to avoid. The fact that we pay great sums of money for cosmetic surgery, hair coloring, and the like is evidence of that. But there is a comforting side to aging if we trust Jesus Christ for our salvation. Before long, we will "turn in" our present physical bodies and receive glorified eternal bodies. The Holy Spirit's presence in our lives is the guarantee that we are drawing ever closer to that point.

2 Cor. 5:6-9

The fact that God is preparing better bodies and a better place of residence for us beyond this life cannot be proven scientifically. There is strong unseen spiritual evidence, but it must be accepted by faith (see Hebrews 11:1). Such faith always pleases God, and it also helps us overcome our great fear of death, which is just the doorway to our eternal life with God (see John 14:2-3). It is important that we surrender our lives to God and seek to do his will. Knowing that God wants to give us something special after this life motivates us to put our lives in his hands right now.

2 Cor. 5:10-11

Consequences and motives are both major issues. Consequences for selfish and destructive behavior reach even beyond the boundaries of this life. All of us will have to stand before God's judgment seat and receive his piercing evaluation. For those of us who have believed in Jesus Christ for salvation, this judgment will also include the giving of rewards. Understanding that our actions and commitments do have eternal consequences can help us to think twice before we act and can motivate us to do things according to God's plan.

2 Cor. 5:17

The new life we experience in Jesus Christ is so far-reaching and complete that it can be said we become brand-new people through him. That does not mean that our old thought patterns and bad habits will automatically vanish. But it does mean that from God's point of view we have been forgiven— we are new creatures in his sight. And through the power of God's Holy Spirit, we have all the power necessary for a complete transformation in every area of our lives.

2 Cor. 5:18-21

One of the great needs we all have is the reconciliation of fractured relationships. At the human level, this is very difficult to do. But in the case of our broken relationship with God, he has already met us more than halfway by offering us reconciliation through Jesus Christ. God's work of reconciliation is even more profound since God committed none of the wrongs in our relationship with him. By accepting the forgiveness he offers, we can have our relationship with God restored. We are also called to follow God and to offer the gift of forgiveness to others. And if the gift of forgiveness is offered by someone else, we can humbly accept it. In this way we can begin the process of rebuilding our relationships and making restitution to the people we have wronged.

2 Cor. 6:3-4

Paul sought to live in such a way that no one would be offended or kept away from God on his account. He was a model for other believers to look up to and follow. Some of us who have been walking in faith for a while may have grown tired of playing this role. We may have found it exhausting to be a model for others. We feel the burden of numerous expectations. As a result, some of us may have quit trying to help others. If this is the case, somewhere along the line we stopped letting God work through us and started working for God. As we grow spiritually, the responsibility to help others will always be there, but the power to do so must always come from God. The apostle Paul took this responsibility very seriously and acted out of concern for the well-being of others, but he also confessed his personal weakness and reliance on God's strength.

2 Cor. 6:8-10

When we live for God and follow his plan for our lives, we will find that others typically react to us in one of two ways. Some honor us as genuine and support what we are trying to do; others will malign and dishonor us. If we are trying to impress others to bolster our self-esteem, we will be devastated when people react negatively. This may lead us to give up on what we have started. Paul received his self-esteem from his relationship with God and did not need to be honored by others, and we should do the same.

2 Cor. 6:11-13

Paul went the extra mile to reconcile his relationship with the Corinthians. Having defended his sincerity toward them earlier (see 1:12-23), he once again pledged his honest affection to his readers, challenging them to do the same for him. In strained relationships, it is often the case that one party childishly withholds affection to punish another. This only leads to deeper alienation and loss. We may not be able to control how another person acts in a broken relationship, but we can control how we act. We should never be the one to withhold forgiveness. We can be like Paul, extending the invitation of restoration to others, humbly and without reservation.

2 Cor. 6:14-18

Sometimes the spiritual changes we make can upset some of our previous friendships. Some of our old friends may be uncomfortable with us because they feel guilty about their own sins. Others may feel threatened by the changes we are making. If we find that a friend or associate undermines our relationship with God, we need to be careful of such relationships. This does not mean we do not reach out to unbelievers; it only means that we do not become too close to people who will lead us away from God and the lives he calls us to live. Our primary relationships need to be with unselfish, godly people who will support our spiritual growth.

2 Cor. 7:8-10

Paul had apparently written a short letter between 1 and 2 Corinthians that was not included among the New Testament books. From his mention of the letter in these verses, it must have been quite sharp in tone. He admits that he had mixed feelings about sending that letter. But because of the Corinthians' positive response to his discipline, all his regrets had vanished. Whenever we confront others, we are taking a calculated risk that might lead to either healing or alienation. When we do confront people about their problems, we must do so with humility and love and entrust the situation to God. If we do this, God will work things out according to his perfect will.

2 Cor. 7:11-13

When we admit our failures to God and others and do what we can to follow God's will, wonderful changes take place in our lives. In these verses, we see that such repentance produces fruit in three ways. First, it purifies and revitalizes our lives and emotions in a remarkable way (7:11). Next, it renews our relationship with God (7:12). Finally, it has an amazing effect for good on our relationships with other people, both those we have wronged (7:12) and onlookers who are wonderfully encouraged by the refreshing changes that have taken place (7:13).

2 Cor. 7:15

For all the mistakes the Corinthians made in their relationship with Paul, they did do one thing right. They were willing to listen when Titus presented Paul's version of some earlier events that they had misinterpreted. This teachability and lack of defensiveness drew great admiration and love from both Titus and Paul. A willingness to listen and be teachable is necessary for spiritual growth.

2 Cor. 8:9

The perfect model for graciously helping others is Jesus Christ. He became a lowly human being and died the death of a criminal on the cross to conquer sin and death. He gave up his heavenly glory and willingly suffered on our behalf (see Philippians 2:6-8). Thus, besides enriching our lives spiritually, Christ can also strongly identify with the pain and temptation we have suffered (see Hebrews 4:15). He is available and able to help us. As we receive his help, we can then reach out a helping hand to others in need.

2 Cor. 8:10-12

It is much easier to start something than to finish it. Thus, the principle of perseverance is a crucial one for our ongoing spiritual development. In this case, the Corinthians had enthusiastically started a relief fund for the Jerusalem church but then had failed to follow through on their commitment. So Paul confronted them and encouraged them to persevere in this worthy task. Once we have committed ourselves to spiritual growth, we need to follow through and persevere.

2 Cor. 9:6-9

The more spiritual seeds we plant by generously helping others, the greater will be our harvest of spiritual fruit. God never forces us to give; he wants us to give with willing hearts. This shows that God is not only interested in what we do; he is also interested in the attitudes and motives behind our actions. Everyone has something to give: time, talents, finances, or just a listening ear. The way that we give and the amount that we give will show our true spiritual condition. It will also determine how much comes back to us from God.

2 Cor. 10:13-15

Paul set limits on his ministry based on his understanding of God's will for him. No one is called to do everything. When we know what God has called us to do, we will know what we do not need to do. We must concentrate our limited energy on focused priorities that reflect God's will. Paul was sensitive to God's will for his life, and he was confident that his leadership over the Corinthian church was a part of that plan. We still need to discover, however, what activities he might want us to be involved in on a daily basis. Insight concerning God's will for us is likely to come through our study of the Scriptures, the help of godly friends, or the guidance we receive from the Holy Spirit.

2 Cor. 11:2-3

Paul was worried that the Corinthian believers would replace their faith in Jesus with a false faith, and he was concerned for good reason. Corinth was a cosmopolitan city, and numerous religions and cults were practiced there. Paul also was concerned because rejecting Christ would lead to painful consequences. It would be as if the believers had rejected the abundant life offered by Jesus Christ and had settled for a life of ultimate disaster. We also live in a world of multiple religions and spiritual paths. Only Jesus Christ paid the price for our sins and rose from the dead to prove it. Our surrender to God is like that of a bride to her husband. Surrendering our lives to God excludes our surrendering to other gods or philosophies that oppose Jesus Christ.

2 Cor. 11:13-15

The Corinthian believers had apparently rejected Paul's teachings to follow a number of false teachers who had twisted the Christian message. These false leaders were probably Judaizers who taught that salvation came through a combination of faith in Christ and adherence to the Jewish law (see 11:22). Paul made it clear in all of his letters that salvation is a free gift, paid for by the sacrificial work of Jesus Christ. Sometimes we are tempted to follow the same heresy. We want to earn our salvation by working hard. Most of us who have tried this approach, however, have had to admit that we are powerless over our sinful natures. This is what Paul preached. Without God, we are helpless against the power of sin. But with his help, no problem is too great to overcome.

2 Cor. 11:23-29

Paul demonstrated his commitment to Jesus Christ by listing a number of the tremendous hardships he had suffered. If nothing else, such ongoing mistreatment, deprivation, and ministry responsibility revealed his perseverance. Paul was definitely no fair-weather minister or friend. Let us seek to imitate Paul and his faithful commitment to Christ.

2 Cor. 11:30; 12:1-10

Paul's "boasting" was not intended to make him look better than he really was. He spoke this way to establish the truth about his person and apostolic authority. Even though the apostle told of his incredible visit to heaven (12:1-4), he quickly balanced the scales by admitting his own weaknesses (11:30; 12:5). He also recounted how he sensed God's grace at work even through his chronic physical suffering and spiritual warfare (12:9-10). Paul made an honest assessment of his life, recognizing both his strengths and weaknesses. Then he accepted and received the powerful help that God offers to all who look to him. Paul is a good model for us to follow. As we make an honest assessment of our lives and learn to depend upon God's infinite resources, we will make significant progress.

2 Cor. 12:19-21

Everything that Paul said to the Corinthians, both negative and positive, was intended for their good. Paul was concerned that they mature in their faith, and he did what he could to encourage their spiritual growth. The demands he made on the Corinthians were motivated by his love and concern for them. Many of us have come to realize that we often communicate with others for selfish reasons. When we compliment people, sometimes we are looking for something in return rather than trying to build them up. When we criticize others, we are seeking to destroy rather than correct. As we reflect honestly on our lives, we need to be aware of our tendency to use others for our own ends. As we seek to restore our damaged relationships, the apostle Paul is an excellent model to follow.

2 Cor. 13:2-3

Paul had warned the Corinthians at an earlier time that discipline would be forthcoming if they did not face their sins. Here he gave them an additional warning because he had been away from Corinth for longer than he had intended. He wanted to make sure that the people knew his warning was not hollow.

Paul would indeed follow through forcefully and hold the Corinthian believers accountable to their commitments to God. We all need someone like Paul in our lives: a godly person who can hold us accountable to follow God's will.

2 Cor. 13:5-6

Paul urged the Corinthian believers to engage in serious self-examination. He wanted them to assess the nature of their commitment to God by looking closely at their own lives. We need to do the same if we hope to uncover the problems that tear down our relationships with others. As we admit our failures to God, he will help us make spiritual progress and restore broken relationships.

2 Cor. 13:11

As Paul closed this letter to the Corinthians, he left them with some worthy applications and goals to pursue. In essence, he admonished the people to open their minds and hearts to personal change and the healing of their relationships. Such spiritual growth and interpersonal harmony can be fueled by faith in God, the ultimate source of healing love and peace. As modern readers of this letter, we, too, can benefit by acting on Paul's wise advice.

Gal. 1:1-5

In his greeting, Paul introduced the main themes of his letter: his God-given apostolic authority, and clear teachings about the fatherhood of God and the delivering power of Jesus Christ. The good news to us is that God is to be regarded as a loving Father. When we surrender our lives to him, he is able through his Son, Jesus, to help us overcome our sinfulness.

Gal. 1:7-10

The Galatians obviously faced a choice between what they thought were two gospels. However, Paul quickly pointed out that their choice was really between the true gospel he preached and the false gospel preached by his opponents. The choice we face as we look for a way to deal with our past sins and failures is just as clear. There are some who say we can just ignore our sins and not deal with them at all. Others offer us a legalistic system in which we work to effect our own salvation by adhering to a set of rules or going through some ritual. These represent false gospels. True spiritual renewal comes when we repent of our sins and receive God's forgiveness through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. That opens the way to a relationship with God in which the Holy Spirit empowers us to triumph over sin as he transforms our lives.

Gal. 1:11-24

As Paul looked back on his conversion experience, he recalled how he had once been an extremely zealous Jew. He had actively worked to defend his faith against the threat of Christianity. But then, by grace, God in Jesus Christ reached out and radically transformed him. Paul came to recognize that all his religious activities were ultimately fruitless; through them, he could never be delivered from the power of sin in his life. Only God could forgive his past failings and give him the power to start over again. If we have tried to overcome our sinful natures through religious activity, hard work, or some ritual, we already know what it means to fail. But if we have surrendered our lives to God and learned to live by his power, we know the secret of victory. God's power through Jesus Christ is the only means to true change.

Gal. 2:1-10

In this letter, Paul wanted to present a clear argument against the teachings of the Judaizers. These people recognized that God's work through Jesus Christ was important, but they also believed that people were required to follow the Jewish laws to obtain salvation. For them, salvation was based on actions, not solely on God's gracious gift. Paul wanted the Galatians to realize that not one of us is able to follow God's laws adequately on our own. He taught that Christ alone has the power to release us from sin and its destructive consequences. Most of us have already discovered that we lack the power to overcome sin on our own. We know that we need God's power to overcome our sinful nature. Paul's message of grace is a source of hope for us as we look to God to help us overcome sin in our lives.

Gal. 2:11-14

The apostle Peter, a Jewish Christian, recognized that salvation is a free gift of grace. So, while in Antioch, he freely associated with the Gentile Christians there, despite the fact that they had not fulfilled the Jewish law of circumcision. When other Jewish Christian leaders arrived there, however, Peter pulled back in his relationships with the Gentile believers. He was influenced by his Jewish peers and began to act as if obeying the Jewish laws was necessary for salvation. Paul confronted Peter about his prejudice, and the problem was resolved. Like Peter, we need to listen to others when they point out our wrong behavior. Then we can ask God to help us change.

Gal. 2:20-21

What a wonderful assurance! Christ himself lives in us! This is a paradox: We are crucified with him; nevertheless, we still live in the flesh. In the spiritual realm, our old natures died with Christ, and we have new natures. And yet, in the natural realm, we still struggle with our bodies of flesh that crave sin. We cannot make our flesh change, but by faith in Christ we can operate above the level of our sinful flesh. We can allow Jesus Christ himself to live in us and through us, empowering us to live holy lives by the power of the Holy Spirit. By faith we can live according to our new natures.

Gal. 3:1-14

Paul appealed to the physical evidence the Galatians had experienced when they, upon believing in Christ, received the Holy Spirit. We become true sons of Abraham, as spoken of here in the Bible, when we receive the redemption available to us through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. The evidence of becoming Abraham's sons and daughters is not circumcision, but the presence of the Holy Spirit in our lives (3:14). We can be sure of the Holy Spirit's presence when we begin to see changes in our lives. Knowing God and being in a right relationship with him enables us to know his will and to follow it. But trying to follow God's laws in our human strength will never bring us into a right relationship with him.

Gal. 3:15-29

God's relationship with us is not based on our keeping the law but on the promises made to Abraham to bless all humanity through his offspring Jesus Christ. The law shows us that we are sinners deserving punishment and are in need of a Savior. Following the law is not the solution to the sin problem; the law is a measuring stick that reveals the sin problem. Not one of us is capable of true and complete obedience. Despite our helplessness, though, God desires to bless us, not curse us. His blessings come when we trust in his promises, not when we perform according to his perfect standards. Knowing that God loves us enough to pay for our sins can give us courage to honestly reflect on our lives. Jesus Christ has paid for our sins, therefore we have nothing to fear. We can openly confess our sins to God and trust in his forgiveness. When we do, he will set us free from their destructive power.

Gal. 3:26-29

When we surrender our lives to God in Jesus Christ, we become God's children. What an amazing truth! We are given a place in God's family! He has a plan for us, and like any parent, he wants to help us succeed. Faith in Christ is all we need to enter into this privileged status. Each of us is important to God, and he is concerned enough to help us overcome our sins and help us fulfill his plan for our lives.

Gal. 4:8-11

If we are not willing to trust and obey God in Jesus Christ, we soon become enslaved to something else. We can become enslaved to any number of things: drugs, alcohol, sexual activity, work, or even religious rituals. But these can never solve our problems. In fact, depending on anything other than God himself leads to even deeper problems. Only God can offer us the power to be delivered from bondage to build new lives. Turning to him for help is really the only valid option we have if we are to live freely.

Gal. 4:17-20

Paul was trying to help the Galatians experience the new life that God offers in Jesus Christ. The false teachers were trying to lead the people back into bondage under the Jewish law. Paul wanted to help the Galatians without asking anything in return. The false teachers offered only lies and demanded a position of authority in return. There is a distinct contrast between Paul's attitudes and actions and those of the false teachers. We need to know the source of the spiritual teachings to which we subscribe. Every teacher must be tested as to whether or not he or she agrees with God's Word, as revealed in the Bible. If the teaching does not agree with God's Word, the teaching must be rejected.

Gal. 5:1-12

The Galatians faced the same basic choice that all of us face. Should we choose a life of power and freedom in Christ or a life of slavery through useless solutions? If we make a bad choice, we risk being cut off from the deliverance available to God's people. There is no deliverance from the power of sin except through Christ and his powerful presence in our lives.

Gal. 5:16-21

Very often, God's will for us stands in direct opposition to our natural desires. We must see this truth and be willing to turn away from following our own selfish desires and redirect our course back to doing God's will as revealed in the Bible. Here we find a whole list of destructive behaviors that flow out of a self-centered life. When we turn our lives over to God, however, we allow his Spirit to help us control the desires that lead us to sin. More and more God's desires become our own desires. Considering the facts, submitting our lives to God's will is the best choice we can make.

Gal. 5:22-24

These characteristics are a product of the Holy Spirit's work in a life submitted to God and his plan. Just as a tree bears fruit by means of God's silent work behind the scenes, we produce this fruit of the Spirit by means of God's power alone. Our part is to surrender our lives to him. When the Holy Spirit begins to bear this fruit in our lives, sin loses its power. With joy and peace we overcome the pain of our broken past. With love, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and gentleness we restore our relationships and make restitution. With patience we persevere through the difficult times. With self-control we stand against temptation. God's Spirit can supply everything we need for fruitful lives.

Gal. 6:1-3

Paul told the Galatians to share their burdens with one another. He knew that this would bring healing to hurting people and provide opportunities for the believers to help one another. Since Paul knew some would be too proud to admit their problems, he jotted a special note to encourage everyone's participation. We all need to admit our problems. As we do this, the burden of our sins will be lightened. With mutual encouragement and accountability, we will be able to share our burdens, lighten the burdens of others, and move on toward a productive future.

Gal. 6:7-10

We will always harvest what we have planted. In other words, sins have painful consequences. We might be able to fool ourselves for a while into thinking that certain activities and relationships are all right. But when the consequences catch up with us, there will be no denying the facts. We need to take this warning seriously and take steps to change now. We don't have to wait to bear the consequences of sin before we act. Using God's Word as a measuring stick, we can reflect honestly on our lives and make the necessary adjustments, redirecting our course before it's too late.

Gal. 6:11-18

In these concluding verses, Paul recapped his major arguments with a closing emotional appeal to stand firm against false teachers who try to attract people away from the liberating message of the gospel. Admitting that we are helpless to overcome our sins and accepting God's help are responsible decisions. Rather than humiliate us, God bestows dignity and healing on us when we stand firm in our faith.

Eph. 1:3-6

Paul reminds us that God is sovereign over all the details of our lives. God has a special plan for us, and that plan includes adopting us into his family. We have already realized that doing things our way leads to painful consequences. With this in mind, we can be motivated to submit to God's perfect will for our lives. God wants only what is best for us. It is his will for us to find new life in him.

Eph. 1:11-12

Some of us may wonder how we can know God's will for our lives. While there are details we may never know in advance, God's Word points us in the right direction. There are many things that God desires for all of us, and these are revealed in Scripture. Here we find that God wants us to experience an intimate relationship with him in Christ. In this relationship, God will delight in us, and we will praise him in return. This is an amazing truth. God wants to have a close relationship with us, no matter who we are or what we have done. Because of what God has done for us in Jesus Christ, we can live lives of praise, sharing the Good News with others in need.

Eph. 1:13-14

The Holy Spirit dwelling in us guarantees God's plan for our salvation. Just as an official marks a document as being genuine, so the Holy Spirit's work within us guarantees our identity as one of God's adopted children. This is all made possible by Jesus Christ and his saving work on our behalf. It becomes a reality in our lives when we place our faith in him. Our knowledge of God's concern for us and the help he offers gives us a reason for hope as we seek to overcome our problems and sins. When we trust God, we become part of the powerful solution he has provided to deal with the sin problem in our world.

Eph. 2:1-10

In these verses, Paul affirms two essential truths. He begins by recognizing that we are fallen creatures, without the power necessary to stand against our tendency toward sin and failure. Paul then recognizes God's wealth of mercy and love, and he reminds us that even though we are far from God and enslaved by sin, God graciously reaches out to us. God wants to forgive us and give us the power to rebuild our lives. Through the work of Jesus Christ, God has already conquered the power of sin and death. When we admit that we need God's help and ask him to act on our behalf, God's power is made available to us to overcome our problems and sins.

Eph. 2:14-19

Through Jesus Christ, the barrier between God and his sinful creatures has been removed. But Christ's work of reconciliation does not stop there. He can also remove the obstacles that alienate us from other people. In Christ, we can have peace both with God and with others. Some of us may feel that our relationships could never be salvaged. But realizing that Christ can give us the power to live at peace with others gives us new hope. While we are not guaranteed that others will seek to be reconciled with us, we can be open to this possibility and free ourselves from bitterness toward them.

Eph. 3:1-13

In these verses one truth stands out: God accepts all of us through faith. Our race, reputation, and position have no bearing on God's forgiveness. Paul wrote these words to convince the believers of their oneness in Christ. Apparently some of the Jewish believers claimed superiority because of their relationship to God in the Old Testament Scriptures. Paul refuted their view by reminding them that our relationship with God is based on our trust in Jesus Christ. It has nothing to do with our personal history or position in society. If we seek God's forgiveness, he will accept us and help us make a new start. When we come into his family, we are all equals in God's eyes and should treat each other as such.

Eph. 3:14-21

For the church to function effectively, it must be driven by God's dynamic and unlimited love. Paul prayed that his friends might be deeply anchored in and strengthened by God's love. As we begin to discover how much God loves us, we will become confident that anything is possible with God. In fact, God is able to do far more in and through us than we could ever imagine! If we trust God and are grounded in his love, we will discover his restoration and healing in our lives and relationships.

Eph. 4:1-6

Even though God's plan for us is centered on his sovereign purposes and power, we have important responsibilities as well. What we believe about God is crucial, but so is the manner in which we live. Our spiritual growth will be hindered if we allow stubborn pride to prevent us from honestly reflecting on our lives and admitting our sins. However, if we humble ourselves and trust God to help us, his Holy Spirit will transform our lives with love and patience. When God asks us to live a certain way, he provides the power we need to succeed.

Eph. 4:7-16

We have been gifted in ways that make us necessary to others. Others have been gifted in ways that make them necessary to us. Some of us have special gifts for teaching others about God. Others of us may have the gift of caring for hurting people. Whatever gifts we might have, they are important for the emotional and spiritual growth of others. Since God has a purpose for each of us, it is important that we strive to know him better through prayer and meditation on his Word. As we seek him, he will show us what our gifts are and how we can use them to help others. As we share our gifts and receive the benefits of other people's gifts, we will find the body of Christ growing stronger and healthier.

Eph. 4:31-32

Spiritual renewal involves committing ourselves to getting to know God better through prayer and meditation on his Word. In examining our lives, we realize just how demanding God's standards for righteous living are, but since it is God's grace that helps us conform to his will, we need not despair. As we obey him, he will teach us humility and help us forgive the people who have hurt us. God is in the business of healing our relationships. When we do things his way, we are well on the way to reconciling with our alienated friends and building a solid foundation for further spiritual growth.

Eph. 5:1-7

God wants us to follow his will for our lives. Some of us may wonder how we can know what God wants us to do. Here we see that God wants us to be like Jesus Christ. As we look at his life, we can see how God would like us to think and act. We are to love our enemies, just as Jesus did. We are to avoid sexual impurity, greed, and obscene speech since they stand counter to the character of God. As difficult as imitating Christ might sound, anything is possible with God's powerful help.

Eph. 5:21-33

Paul tells us that the home should be a place where love and mutual submission are exhibited. Husbands and wives need to show love to each other and be sensitive to each other's needs. As they do this, they reflect the loving relationship that God has established between Christ and the Christian community. The painful consequences of our sinful patterns are most deeply felt by our close family members. Any time we selfishly seek to meet our own needs, we will neglect or hurt the people we are responsible to love and support. Rebuilding damaged family relationships may be one of the most important tasks we face with God's help. As we admit the nature of our wrongs and seek to make up with our loved ones, we can begin to reestablish a family atmosphere characterized by love and mutual submission.

Eph. 6:1-4

In these verses, Paul directed both parents and children to show love toward one another. Children are to show due respect to their parents. The widespread disrespect shown toward parents today leads to deep emotional scars both in parents and children. Paul also warned parents to treat their children with love and respect. Through ridicule and neglect parents can create resentment that may stay with their children for life. Whether we are a parent or a child who has failed, we need to admit our failures and seek to make restitution wherever possible.

Eph. 6:10-13

While we may be firmly grounded in sound doctrine and accept our responsibility to live godly lives, we need to be aware of the fierce, invisible warfare being waged against us. Our spiritual struggles could be the result of a direct attack by a spiritual enemy. As we surrender our lives to God, he will stand with us in the battle. When we understand that our battle is not of this world, we will realize our need to depend on God's power instead of our own.

Eph. 6:13-20

Notice that each piece of our spiritual armor (except the sword) is defensive in nature. We need to make sure that each piece of the armor of God is operative in our lives. Truth, righteousness, faith, and prayer will protect us against the assault of hostile spiritual forces. The forces arrayed against us are powerful, but the weapons God gives us are adequate for our defense. Notice that a part of our armor—the shoes—enables us to share the Good News as we move forward in our spiritual lives.

Phil. 1:3-11

Paul told the Philippians about how he had been praying for them. This would have been a great encouragement to those early believers. Our spiritual awakening will lead us to feel a growing concern for people in need. As we share the message of hope with others, we may also make prayer for their progress a part of our service to them. Our commitment to pray for other people struggling with sin will have a significant impact on their spiritual growth. As we let them know we are behind them, not only will they grow in their faith, but we also will experience the encouragement we need to persevere.

Phil. 1:12-14

In retrospect, Paul could see that the events of his life, both good and bad, had been allowed by God to help him spread the Good News. If we take an honest look at our lives, we will probably find the same thing to be true. Through our pain we gain the perspective needed to share the message of hope with others. As with Paul, our painful past and God's power to redeem our lives opens doors to serve God and others in new ways.

Phil. 1:19-24

If we belong to God, we cannot lose. Whether we live or die, we know we will win in the end. But while we live, we need to persevere in our faith so that we can make spiritual gains. Paul's primary motivation for persevering was his deep concern for others who still needed to hear the Good News of God's loving power. We, too, will have to face death one day. However, if we persevere in our faith, we can be useful to God until the day he takes us to be with him. There is always a reason to live. God still wants to use us to save the lives of others.

Phil. 2:1-4

We are never an island unto ourselves; we are a part of a whole, a member of Christ's body. If we are part of a loving community, when others hurt, we hurt; when we hurt, others hurt. We have a responsibility to learn to live out our faith. As we grow, we move beyond a self-centered focus and learn to be available to others also. As we learn to love others, they will learn to love us. As we connect with others, we develop mutually accountable relationships that help the entire body of Christ.

Phil. 2:5-11

Paul set Jesus Christ up as an ideal model for our humility in service. Our thoughts, attitudes, and actions are to become more and more like those exhibited by Christ during his earthly life. His willingness to humble himself is a great example for us. As we reflect honestly on our lives, we can be humble enough to admit our faults. Then we can begin to change our sinful habits. If we can follow Jesus Christ in humility, learning to admit our failures without hesitation, we can look forward to spiritual growth.

Phil. 2:12-18

Here we are reminded that obedience to God's plan is one of the requirements for spiritual growth. Some of us may wonder how we are supposed to succeed at doing what God wants us to do. How can we be perfect? We have already admitted that we are powerless over the pull of our sinful natures. But God not only asks us to live a godly life; he also provides us with the power to do it (2:13). He is working in our lives, helping us to obey him. As we get to know God by reading the Bible and spending time with him in prayer, he can begin to transform us from the inside out.

Phil. 2:25-28

Being a believer in Christ is not always easy. As Epaphroditus clearly demonstrated, we need stamina to do the work and a servant's attitude to succeed in the spiritual battles we face. We must be willing to give ourselves to the cause of Christ, choosing to put the needs of others before our personal comforts. As we serve others, we build meaningful relationships and a strong foundation for continued spiritual growth. By helping others, we have helped ourselves and helped the cause of Christ.

Phil. 3:2-3

The world is filled with deceivers. The false teachers Paul mentioned demanded that Gentile Christians obey the Jewish law of circumcision in order to be saved. The apostle stood against this claim, reminding the Philippians that only God through Jesus Christ could bring them the deliverance they sought. While few people today are saying that circumcision is necessary for salvation, many religions and spiritual paths require various works to appease God. This is no more correct today than it was in Paul's time. Our salvation was completely paid for in Christ; it is by his grace that we are saved.

Phil. 3:4-11

In these verses, Paul carefully reflected on his past life. Looking at all his credentials—including his religious activities—he found nothing that earned him favor with God. It was only his faith in Jesus Christ that made him right with God. By means of Paul's personal illustration, we are urged to reflect honestly on our heritage and accomplishments but not to trust in them to save us. Trying hard and even living a good life will not pay for our sins. Jesus will!

Phil. 3:17-21

We must be careful to choose godly role models. On the human level, we need to pattern our lives after those who, despite difficulties, have been successful in living their entire lives for Christ. There are those who spend all their efforts living only for themselves, enslaved by destructive habits and sins. We should not follow the example of such people. We should follow the example of those who live today in the light of eternity, looking forward to the return of Christ. This hope will help us look forward with great expectation.

Phil. 4:1-3

Since we know with certainty what our ultimate destiny will be, we can have confidence to face the hardships of life. Paul set a good example for how we grow spiritually and encourage others in their growth. To encourage these two Christian women to reestablish their formerly harmonious relationship, he complimented them on their previous service to God. He was assuming that they were humble enough to take criticism and change for the better. If we are truly concerned about our brothers and sisters in the church, we will hold them accountable and encourage them to continue following God's way.

Phil. 4:4-9

True happiness can be found in any situation of life when we recognize that God is at work. Because Christ is with us and his return is certain, we can act calmly in the face of painful and difficult situations. Peace comes when we focus on those things that provide lasting value to our lives. The more we commit ourselves to knowing God's will through prayer and the study of his Word, the better prepared we are to help ourselves and others grow spiritually.

Phil. 4:12-13

Life has its seasons of plenty and want, even for those who are totally devoted to God. In all situations, God wants to teach us how to be content. The secret to contentment, Paul found, was doing everything through the strength of Christ. We would do well to look past the demands or needs of the situation to the abundant strength of Christ.

Phil. 4:15-20

Paul's relationship with the Philippian believers was characterized by mutual respect and sharing. These are important qualities in any strong relationship and should characterize our relationships. Paul was a great Christian leader, respected by thousands of believers in the early church. Many in his position would have had a hard time accepting the help the Philippians offered and might have tried to go it alone. It is sometimes difficult to accept the help offered by others. Perhaps we feel they really don't understand us or are just trying to manipulate us, doing things that make them feel good about themselves. We need to follow Paul's example. He joyfully received the help offered by the Philippian believers and, as a result, was able to stand firm through some tough, lonely times.

Col. 1:11-14

As always, Paul was careful to point out that our strength and power come from God, not from ourselves. Only God's power at work in our lives can give us the ability to make spiritual progress.

Col. 1:15-17

These verses describe God in Jesus Christ. As the Creator of our world, he has the means to rebuild our lives no matter how broken they are. In fact, the entire universe would dissolve if he stopped holding it together. Even people who seem to have things under control could not exist a moment longer if it weren't for the power of God expended on their behalf. We all need God's power and depend on it, whether we realize it or not. God is our infinite power source, and he provides all the power we need to transform our lives.

Col. 1:28-29

An essential part of rebuilding our lives is sharing the message of Jesus Christ with others. We were far away from God, yet he provided not only the solution to our problem but also the power to change. That is news worth sharing! We may be afraid to do this at first, but the Holy Spirit can give us the courage we need to share this with others.

Col. 2:6-7

The same faith that we exercised when we surrendered our lives to God is to be used daily as we continue growing spiritually. It is not enough to be planted; we must be rooted deeply in Christ. We must find our strength in him so that we will grow and mature in our faith.

Col. 2:11-15

The same power that raised Christ from the dead is able to help us overcome our sinfulness. Since he has authority over every other power, including the power of evil in our lives, Jesus can set us free. Our freedom is not just from the bondage of the past but also from the spiritual bondage of our old sinful natures. In Christ, we can experience the life of peace and joy that God intends for us.

Col. 2:20-23

Legalism is not the answer to the problem of sin. Perhaps we have tried to create rules for ourselves in order to break free from our bondage. We may have told ourselves, “We just need to try harder.” But Paul tells us that will never work by itself because it looks to our own strength. It leads us away from the only adequate power source—God in Jesus Christ. He is the only one with the power to transform us and help us rebuild our lives.

Col. 3:1-3

Paul isn’t urging us to deny the harsh realities of life; he is simply reminding us of where our focus should be. When our eyes are on Christ, we see the matters of this life from a different perspective. We realize that there is hope, even when everything seems dark and hopeless. When we learn to see with an eternal perspective, the struggles of life don't disappear; rather, they are seen in the proper light. They no longer have the terrifying power that they once did. When we keep our eyes on Christ and his promises, no obstacle is too great for us to overcome.

Col. 3:12-13

Paul urges us to cultivate our relationships with love, forgiveness, and peace. We need to seek forgiveness from those we have hurt and to forgive those who have hurt us. Paul tells us to be gentle and not to hold grudges. As we seek to make peace, our actions are to be governed by the principle of selfless love.

Col. 4:2-3

Paul encouraged the Colossian believers to persevere in prayer. This is good advice for us, too. As we pray, we are reminded to keep our eyes on God. As we make prayer a daily priority, we are reminded to thank God for his help, and we become increasingly aware of his activity in our lives. When we are feeling weak, we can still come to God in prayer. He will then empower us to "keep at it." As we turn to God in prayer, we embrace the power sufficient to meet our needs and preserve our spiritual gains.

1 Thes. 1:2-3

Paul is thankful for the Thessalonian believers and their love for each other, their faith put into practice, and their hope in Christ. The triad of faith, love, and hope is a summary of the Christian life (see 1 Corinthians 13:13). Faith in an all-powerful God is demonstrated by living one day at a time. Love is shown as principles of truth are demonstrated through sacrificial service to others. Hope carries us through the hard times as we depend upon God.

1 Thes. 1:4-6

The Thessalonians were examples of faithful citizens of God's Kingdom. They had gained freedom from idolatry because they believed in Jesus Christ and experienced his transforming power in their lives. His power makes all the difference! When we surrender our lives to God, he can redeem us and make us shining examples of his love and grace.

1 Thes. 1:7-9

The Thessalonian believers had experienced a spiritual awakening through belief in Jesus Christ. As they imitated his ways, despite the persecution it brought them, they became examples that led many in the surrounding area to experience the healing offered by God in Jesus Christ. We, too, should be changed in ways that others can see, and we should share our faith in Christ. We can allow this to be the natural outflow of our experience of salvation. We can give hope to others by sharing our story. As we do so, we will not only inspire hope in others; we will also experience personal encouragement as we recall all the great things God has done in our lives.

1 Thes. 2:3-12

Paul did not minister in Thessalonica to secure personal gain. Yet to discredit Paul, his enemies charged him of that very thing. The apostle recalled his ministry among them, showing that he had gained nothing materially from it. His work among the Thessalonians had been motivated by the apostle's sincere love and empathy. We are called to share the message of hope to others. But before getting involved in the lives of others, we need to examine our motives. Are we helping them for reasons of personal gain or because we are sincerely concerned about them?

1 Thes. 2:19-20

Paul had discovered the message of hope in the gospel of Jesus Christ. As he grew in the faith, he joyfully began to share it with others. Notice that Paul's ministry not only helped the Thessalonians, but it also helped Paul. As Paul saw the Thessalonians grow spiritually, he experienced incredible joy in his own life. Just as their sorrow had been his sorrow, their victory became his victory. The Thessalonians became Paul's "reward and crown" and "pride and joy." The common bond that we share with others in Christ can be a source of great encouragement as we see how they are inspired and changed by what we share with them.

1 Thes. 3:1-4

Paul made it clear that we are to expect troubles. When we surrender our lives to God, we cannot expect everything to go smoothly. God never promised to miraculously remove all of our problems. In most cases, God stands with us as we accept reality and face our problems, giving us strength to confront each new challenge as it arises. Realizing that we will always face difficulties in this life can help us to survive the hard times. As we face reality in a fallen world, we can count on God's presence with us.

1 Thes. 3:6-8

Timothy returned with good news from Thessalonica. The spiritual well-being of the Thessalonians was a great encouragement to Paul, and it helped him make it through his own tough times. Our relationships with others who share our faith are an essential source of shared mutual help. When we are down, the successes of others can lift us up. When we are up, our joy can lift others out of their despair. As we share our lives with one another, we will build each other up and provide the needed encouragement to preserve spiritual gains in our lives and theirs.

1 Thes. 3:11-13

Paul concluded this portion of his letter with a short prayer for the Thessalonian believers. Paul prayed that these spiritually transformed people would continue to mature before God. He requested that their new lives and love for God would flow out to others. Paul's prayer for these believers can be a model for us as we seek to encourage others in their spiritual growth. We can continually lift others to God in prayer and then rejoice as we see God working his transformation in their lives.

1 Thes. 4:3-8

The Bible paints a clear picture of what God wants us to be like. Here we are given a list of characteristics we will exemplify if we are following God's will. This positive list is then followed by a list of things we should not be involved in. Passages like this can serve as measuring sticks for us as we reflect honestly on our lives. If we don't measure up to God's ideals, we can admit our failures to him and ask him to redirect the course of our lives. As we surrender our lives to him, he will help us change, and we will see positive characteristics growing in us.

1 Thes. 4:13-18

Apparently the Thessalonian believers wondered what would happen to the Christians who had already died. They were afraid that believers who died before Jesus returned would lose the opportunity of sharing in Christ's glorious reign. Paul explained that Christians who had died would be raised and would share in the fellowship and reign of Jesus in God's Kingdom. All of us believers have this hope in our future as well. We will all have a special part to play when Christ returns. It doesn't matter whether we are dead or alive at his return; God has a plan that includes us.

1 Thes. 5:1-11

Paul warns us of a day when God will hold all people accountable for their attitudes and actions. Since this time will come unexpectedly, we need to stay alert and ready at all times. This is especially important for those of us who tend to procrastinate. God wants us to act immediately whenever we see sin in our lives. He doesn't want us to delay confessing our sins or forgiving others. When God shows us where we need to change, he also offers us the power to change. There is no acceptable reason to put off doing what God calls us to do. The time to obey God is always now.

1 Thes. 5:14-28

In these verses, Paul leaves us with a collection of good teaching. If we follow these many instructions, as we can with God's help, we will be well on our way. We are called to minister to others and to actively participate in God's ongoing work on earth. This gives hope to others and preserves our own spiritual gains as well. Paul calls us to rebuild our relationships by repaying the wrongs of others with kindness. We are called to live joyful lives, to be always prayerful, to continually seek God's will. We are reminded of the gift of the Holy Spirit, God's continual helping presence. God gives us what we need to fulfill his plan for our lives. Our part is to participate in the good plan he has set out for us.

2 Thes. 1:3-4

Paul rejoiced that the Thessalonians were maturing in their faith. Notice that their hardships were an important impetus to their spiritual growth. Paul reminds us that we can learn from our hardships. Just as God used hardships to inspire growth among the Thessalonians, he does the same with us. Painful situations force us to admit that we cannot make it without God. When we realize our lack of power, we can begin to rebuild our lives on the only sure foundation—Jesus Christ.

2 Thes. 1:5-8

We often look upon difficulties as something to avoid at all cost. But we may run from painful situations only to be trapped by other serious problems. Sometimes we turn to sinful pursuits in an attempt to escape pain, only to find that our sins entangle us. We need to learn to face painful circumstances with God's help. When we turn to God to help us accept reality instead of turning to sin to distract us from reality, God can free us from the sinful habits that we may have used as an escape. Our hardships can become an impetus for our spiritual growth, not a cause for failure and further bondage to sin.

2 Thes. 1:9-10

Those in hell will be eternally separated from God's healing presence. The Thessalonians escaped such a terrible fate by surrendering their lives to God. We have an opportunity to do the same. But spiritual renewal is far more than a way to escape hell. True spiritual renewal involves making the most of our union with God and the privilege of living in his presence each day.

2 Thes. 2:3-10

Paul warned the Thessalonians of an evil power at work in our world. These new believers had experienced the work of this oppressor during their years as idol worshipers. We experience that same evil power at work in our lives at times, especially when we have given in to the desires of our sinful natures. We can rejoice that when Jesus Christ returns, he will completely overcome the evil powers in this world. And if we surrender our lives to him now, he will begin this work in our lives right away.

2 Thes. 2:15-17

Paul praised the Thessalonians for their exemplary faith and then went on to encourage them to continue to seek God, his will, and his power. Paul also reminded them to hold on to the truth they had been taught. We must do the same if we hope to make spiritual progress. If we cannot face the truth about our own lives, we cannot even begin the process. We need to recognize that we are dependent on God's help to survive and grow spiritually. Recognizing this truth is foundational to spiritual growth.

2 Thes. 3:1-2

Paul drew his readers into his life and ministry by asking them to pray for him. He didn't set himself above them but rather shared how he needed their prayers, just as he needed the power of God for continued safety. Paul shows us how his own survival was tied to the spiritual growth of others. As the Thessalonians prayed for Paul, they shared in his life. And as Paul experienced deliverance, they rejoiced and were strengthened by God's clear answers to their prayers. By involving the Thessalonians in his struggles, Paul also involved them in his victories. Our relationships with others who share our faith can provide mutual encouragement in similar ways.

2 Thes. 3:6-10

Apparently many of the Thessalonian believers, in anticipation of Christ's return, had stopped working. Their false understanding had led them to live irresponsibly. So Paul set things straight by telling these believers to get back to work. If they refused to work, they would have to face the consequences—they wouldn't be allowed to eat. Since God has promised to help us grow spiritually, we might be tempted to think we can sit idly by and watch it happen. This is not the case. We need to participate in the plan God has for us.

2 Thes. 3:11-13

Some of the Thessalonians who had stopped working had also begun to gossip about other people. This practice is extremely destructive. Not only does it breed discouragement among the people being talked about, but it also keeps us from examining our own lives as we should. Instead of reflecting honestly on our own lives, we focus on the lives of others. Paul exhorted the Thessalonians to set things straight and to live in the power of God. If they didn't, their gossiping would undermine their own spiritual growth while also discouraging others.

1 Tim. 1:3-7

Apparently the false teachers in Ephesus were claiming that certain knowledge and activities were necessary for salvation. Their teachings were causing division and pride among the believers since some of them claimed to have special knowledge. This also led the believers away from the essentials of the faith and the only source of salvation—Jesus Christ. There are many today who claim to have solutions, and many of their programs assume we can redeem and change our lives without God's help. We would be wise to heed Paul's exhortation and steer clear of people who teach such things. Only God in Jesus Christ has the power to deliver us and transform our lives.

1 Tim. 1:8-11

God's law is intended to convict us of our sins, leading us to admit our helplessness and receive his forgiveness. It is not primarily a set of rules for us to live by. It is true that spiritual growth involves acknowledging that there are healthy boundaries for our actions. But our spiritual growth will never be helped by an attempt to observe the Old Testament law, which is beyond our ability to keep in our own strength (see Acts 15:10). Attempting to find favor with God in this way will only lead to frustration and guilt, which will stymie rather than encourage our spiritual growth. We need to use the law as a means for discovering our need for Christ. Then the Holy Spirit can empower us to live as God desires.

1 Tim. 1:12-17

Paul recounted how he had once done everything he could to stop the growth of the Christian community. But God mercifully intervened in Paul's life, transforming him into one of the most dynamic leaders of the Christian church. As he shared his story, his previous status as an enemy made his message all the more powerful because the amazing changes in his life were a testimony to God's transforming power. Some of us may feel that we will never be able to make an impact on the lives of others. We may feel that we are so terrible that we are beyond the point of redemption. God can change us no matter who we are or what we have done. As we share our story of deliverance, others will receive hope as they see what God has done in our lives.

1 Tim. 1:18-20

Paul commanded Timothy to fight God's battles well. In one sense this continued his earlier thoughts about upholding God's truth against false teachers. Yet the real battle is not just in the realm of sound teaching; it includes acting in obedience to God and in keeping with his plan for our lives. Paul told Timothy to cling to his faith and to keep his conscience clear. He was to live in ways that showed God's power. Our beliefs are important, but we must go beyond just thinking the right things to doing the right things.

1 Tim. 2:1-2

Here Paul shows why prayer is essential for establishing a peaceful context for spiritual growth. Through prayer, both public and private, order and peace are promoted and strengthened. Prayer involves thanksgiving for God's blessings and intercession for others. It is one of the assets we may overlook. We can easily become so focused on our own activities that we forget to turn to God for help. Prayer is a primary means for seeing the truth and developing our relationship with God.

1 Tim. 2:3-5

God wants everyone to be saved! That is encouraging news! No matter how bad we have been or how good, no matter how badly others have treated us or how badly we have treated others, God wants everyone to come to him. All of us are separated from God by sin until we surrender our lives to Christ, the one who bridges the gulf between people and God. This is the beginning of true spiritual renewal for everyone who longs to come to God. There may be many ways that promise to bring spiritual renewal, but there is no other bridge that spans the gulf caused by sin.

1 Tim. 3:1-7

Paul described the prospective church leader as someone who has self-control and spiritual maturity. Notice Paul's emphasis upon a leader's strong record of leadership within his own family. The home is the most reliable proving ground for potential leaders. It is also the place where we can give evidence of our spiritual progress. Since our family members know us best, our true spiritual condition will become evident by how we treat them and relate to them. God can also use those closest to us to hold us accountable for continually redirecting the course of our lives in accordance with God's Word.

1 Tim. 4:1-5

Notice that one of the errors Paul warned Timothy about was a religiously motivated self-denial. What is wrong with this? Isn't it self-indulgence that gets most of us into trouble? Paul points out that the good pleasures offered by God should be enjoyed with thanksgiving and not rejected in the name of spirituality. We have probably heard of some spiritual leaders who call their followers to give up all forms of pleasure. Such deprivation leads us to a deeper hunger and can lead us to sin as we try to fill the need we created by depriving ourselves unnecessarily. God has given us many legitimate pleasures in this life, and we are free to enjoy them as he has ordained.

1 Tim. 4:7-10

Here Paul warns young Timothy not to argue about insignificant issues and tells him to focus on taking the necessary steps to grow spiritually. Spiritual growth cannot be achieved by arguing about meaningless details of the faith. We can keep spiritually fit only by staying close to God in prayer and seeking to act on what we know from his Word.

1 Tim. 4:11-16

Timothy is admonished to share the Good News of new life in Christ through both word and deed. We sometimes forget that the most effective way we share our faith is to live it out.

Nothing we could ever say can witness as powerfully to God's power as the changes people can see in our lives. Some people will always question the legitimacy of what we say, but no one can question the fact of a transformed life. The best way to share the Good News of God's transforming power is to live it. When we surrender our lives to God, we can experience the new life promised in Jesus Christ. Being changed by God is the best way to help others see God's power.

1 Tim. 5:1-2

Paul reminded Timothy to treat all people with respect. In doing so, he reminds us of the importance of healthy relationships in the Christian community. Sound doctrine, proper worship, and godly leadership are all important; we need to support these with love and respect for each other. The godly courtesy and affection requested by Paul will make the Christian community a place where healing can take place and lives can be renewed.

1 Tim. 5:3-10

Paul made it clear that the Christian community was to show special attention to the widows in their midst. Paul's directions here reflect God's Scripturewide concern for the helpless and rejected in society. But God wants us to be concerned for all his people; there is a place for everyone in his church. No matter who we are or what we have done, good or bad, we are accepted only on the basis of our faith in Jesus Christ. God reaches out to us all and calls us to be a part of his family.

1 Tim. 5:24-25

Paul called Timothy to confront his fellow church leaders who were living sinful lives. By confronting them about their failures, Timothy would save them from the consequences that continued disobedience would bring them. Sometimes we must do the same for the people we love. By holding each other accountable to God's guidelines for living, we help each other preserve spiritual gains and experience the life God has for us.

1 Tim. 6:3-10

Paul warned Timothy about those who spread false teachings among the believers. The apostle wanted to protect the gospel from the lies of money-hungry charlatans. Anyone promising spiritual renewal and salvation through any power other than God in Jesus Christ is not to be listened to. Only God can free us from sin and transform our lives, and the power he offers is free of charge.

1 Tim. 6:6-10

Paul warned Timothy about the pitfall of trusting in money. Some of us may have already experienced the emptiness of such misplaced trust. We may have thought that wealth could buy a solution to all of our problems. No amount of money can deliver us from the power of our sins. Whether we are rich or poor, the pull of our sinful natures can be overcome only when we surrender to God and seek his help.

2 Tim. 1:5

Whether we like it or not, we all learn from our parents and pass on to our children the lessons we learn. Sometimes the lessons we learn and teach are good; at times, however, they are destructive. Notice that Timothy's faith in Christ had been modeled by his mother and grandmother. As we seek to live according to God's plan, we will model transformed lives to our children. As they see the power of our vibrant faith in God, they will be likely to follow in our steps. Like Timothy's mother and grandmother, we will be able to rejoice when godly children follow our example.

2 Tim. 1:7-14

Paul told Timothy not to let his weaknesses stop him from ministering to others. His success was not based on his ability, skill, or courage; it was based on the Holy Spirit's power working in him. Likewise, we don't have the inherent strength, courage, and self-discipline we need to live the kinds of lives God calls us to live. But we do have the Holy Spirit living in us! It is his power that makes us able to live the lives and enjoy the spiritual growth God calls us to experience.

2 Tim. 1:15-18

Paul was in prison when he wrote this letter. Soon after being locked up, he was deserted by most of his friends and followers. His friend Onesiphorus, however, stood with Paul even though it was a risky thing to do. Onesiphorus's example teaches us what it means to show loyalty and love to someone in need. Like Paul, we may have been abandoned by many of our friends as we surrendered our lives to God. We may also know what Paul must have felt toward his loyal friend. We may have an Onesiphorus in our lives, too. Realizing how essential this kind of person is to our spiritual growth encourages us to take every opportunity to be loyal friends to others. This is part of helping others preserve spiritual gains.

2 Tim. 2:1-2

Notice that Paul didn't tell Timothy just to be strong; he told him to be strong in Jesus Christ. The apostle knew that Timothy could never succeed in his ministry by depending on his own strength. He needed the only power sufficient for successful living—that which comes from God. The truth that God gives us the power to live transformed lives is good news! It is something we need to pass on to others. Paul reminded Timothy that the Good News of God's transforming power should be passed from one person to the next. As each of us hears about and experiences God's power, we pass the word on to someone else. In this way others receive God's gracious help, and we discover the joy of helping others and growing in our faith.

2 Tim. 2:3-7

Spiritual growth will have its share of suffering. Progress requires that we follow principles of disciplined faith on a daily basis. Like the soldier, we need to put aside the obstacles to our spiritual growth to see the truth. Like the athlete, we need to follow the rules—God's will for our lives. Like the farmer, we need to work hard, even when nature seems to stand in the way—persevering through the tough times. If we follow these examples, we will find God at work in our lives. He will help us win life’s hard battles; he will reward us with a prize at the end of the race; and we will harvest a rich crop of blessings.

2 Tim. 2:15

Timothy was told to work hard to receive God’s approval of his work. Notice that Paul applied Timothy’s hard work to the task of understanding the Scriptures. Timothy was told to study God’s Word to discover God’s will for him in both attitude and action. Since our spiritual growth is dependent on following God’s will, we need to take time to discover how God wants us to live. By seeking God’s will through diligent study of his Word, we can better follow his instructions. Then we will be able to hear God’s commendation of our lives.

2 Tim. 2:22

Paul’s advice to Timothy is appropriate for us, too. We need to run from the places and situations that are likely to lead to temptation. We are to avoid spending time with people who will lead us to a fall. Instead, we are to spend time with people who will support our spiritual growth. This simple advice, though at times difficult to follow, can go a long way in supporting our spiritual progress. If we don’t have friends or activities that support our spiritual growth, we need to get involved in a community of godly and supportive people.

2 Tim. 3:1-9

This passage describes people who talk about spiritual things, and even attend church, but whose lives demonstrate a refusal to surrender to God. We should not be tricked by or imitate such people. Paul made it clear that these attitudes and actions have severe consequences. We can also use this list as a guide for what should not be evidenced in our lives. As we honestly reflect on our lives, we would do well to confess and turn from any of these characteristics we see. God will forgive them all. If we are surrendered to God, we will be willing for God to change any of these sinful characteristics we find in ourselves.

2 Tim. 3:14-17

Paul reminded Timothy of the wonderful resource that God has left for us—the Bible. It is the ultimate guide, along with the Holy Spirit, to help us realize what is wrong in our lives. It is the only accurate measuring stick available to help us evaluate our lives. It reveals God's will for us and shows us how to relate properly and unselfishly to God and other people. God's Word offers more than just good advice. It promises God's powerful help to all who turn to him with humble hearts. God has given us a wonderful resource in his Word. Spiritual growth can only occur when we take the time to understand and seek to obey what it says.

2 Tim. 4:1-5

Paul strongly encouraged Timothy to share the Good News of Jesus Christ with others. This is an integral part of Christian living. In fact, sharing our faith also helps us preserve our spiritual gains. By sharing our stories of how God has changed our lives, we will offer new life to many needy people. In the process, we will be reminded of God's wonderful work on our behalf and be encouraged to persevere. We will build strong relationships with others as we share our lives with them. This will lead to the healthy community life necessary to support our spiritual growth on a permanent basis.

2 Tim. 4:6-8

Paul left his young protégé with these reflections to encourage him as he faced the long struggle to live a godly life. Paul had fought hard to live for God and had suffered greatly for the sake of others. Now he could look forward to the wonderful blessings he would receive in God's presence. Giving Timothy an eternal perspective would help him approach the tough times with the hope of future blessings. We are given this same hope. We will experience painful times as we recognize our need for God's help. We will experience rejection as we seek to share with others the hope we have experienced. But God will reward our perseverance with eternal peace and joy. It all will be worth it in the end.

2 Tim. 4:11

Mark had forsaken Paul and Barnabas during their first missionary journey (see Acts 13:13). Because of Mark's failure, Paul refused to allow his participation in the second journey, resulting in the separation of Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:36-41). Though Mark had failed Paul at an earlier time, it is clear in this passage that his relationship with Paul had been restored. Mark's restoration after an earlier mistake can give hope to all who have failed or broken a commitment and wondered whether restoration was possible. Mark went on to write the Gospel of Mark, which has touched the lives of millions of people over the past twenty centuries. No matter how great our failures in the past or what commitments we've broken, God can use us in amazing ways if we are willing to surrender our lives to him.

2 Tim. 4:16-18

Paul recalled the loneliness he felt during his first Roman imprisonment. He remembered how the Lord had stayed with him even after all his human companions had forsaken him. Only God was able to bring him comfort when he was a forsaken prisoner. As we grow in our faith, God will provide healthy relationships to support our spiritual progress. However, God may also allow us to experience being forsaken by those who were once our friends. During such times, we should follow Paul's example and draw closer to God himself. In time God can help us restore broken relationships and build new ones. But the experience of being forsaken can also teach us that God's presence is real even in the lonely times.

Titus 1:4-5

Paul had planted churches on the island of Crete, and Titus was called upon to finish the work Paul had started. He was to strengthen the believers and appoint leaders to serve them. Paul recognized that Titus could not do everything alone. He probably also recognized that having a single leader is never ideal. Organizations that revolve around one person are likely to reproduce the flaws of their leaders. Having a leadership group provides balance for the weaknesses of the individuals. If a church leader tries to control everything, refusing to share responsibilities and power with others, the potential to help people can be severely limited. We need to look for spiritual leaders who share the work of ministry. Leaders who refuse to do so are not acting in obedience with God's design.

Titus 1:6-9

This list of qualifications for church leadership makes no mention of social standing, financial resources, or professional accomplishments. It is a simple list of character traits. Church leaders must be good spouses and parents; they need to have good reputations; they need to be humble, patient, self-controlled, hospitable, sensible, and just. These character traits have nothing to do with whether or not we are wealthy or poor, famous or unknown, powerful or lowly. No one can buy these character traits; no one can demand them. We can get them only by surrendering our lives to God and making his will our own.

Titus 1:10-14

Paul encouraged Titus to confront a group of legalists who denied God's grace by requiring believers to do good works to earn salvation (1:10, 14). Legalism makes our obedience to rules and traditions more important than a personal and transforming relationship with God. It assumes that we can be good under our own power, which is not true and takes us off course. But indulgence in sin also takes us off course. Anytime we see ourselves veering toward legalism or sinful indulgence, we need to confess it and allow God to redirect our course back within the bounds of grace and obedience.

Titus 2:1-5

Paul called older men and women to take special roles in the Christian community. They were to be role models for others, teaching by the way they lived. Many of us have experienced the benefits of having a godly mentor to encourage us. As we grow spiritually, we can become healthy role models to others, too. Our spiritual growth will be enhanced by having and being a godly mentor.

Titus 2:6

Paul told Titus to warn the young people in his church to think before acting. Young people often are blind to the consequences of certain activities. They often act first and think about it later. Paul here calls young Christians to "live wisely." If we think before we act, conforming our activities to God's revealed will, we will be building our lives on a solid foundation.

Titus 2:11-15

When we realize that God loves us and provides the power for us to live godly lives, we are motivated to surrender to him and seek out his will. The proper response to God's grace is right living. In the Bible, guilt and fear are never considered appropriate motivations for righteousness. We obey God because he loves us and has called us to live righteously. We don't need to fear God because of the mistakes we have made. He still loves us and will help us renew our spiritual lives when we admit our failures to him. God wants us to make spiritual progress even more than we do! This can give us hope as we work through the process.

Titus 3:3

This verse describes what we are like when enslaved by sin. We become filled with resentment, envy, and hate. These all need to be released to God. But this verse is only the dark backdrop that will magnify the beauty of the freedom God offers in the person of Jesus Christ. Our broken lives can be like black velvet against which the bright diamond of God's gracious salvation can be displayed. The darker our lives before meeting Christ, the better they will magnify God's mercy toward us. Not one of us deserves God's gracious help. He loves us simply because he chooses to, more in spite of us than because we deserve it. No matter how dark our past or the attitudes hiding within our hearts, God is willing to forgive and transform us.

Titus 3:4-8

Notice the terms used to describe God's motives for saving us: "kindness and love" (3:4), "mercy" (3:5), and "grace" (3:7). We are justified by God's grace; that is, we are declared good in God's eyes by virtue of belonging to Christ. This takes us off the performance treadmill, relieving us of the need to measure up to God's standards. Some of us have spent our lives trying to measure up. We may have carried a load of guilt for failing to live up to a list of rules. But when we surrender ourselves to God, he accepts us as we are. At the same time, he calls us to holy living, but he also provides us with the Holy Spirit, who will help us.

Phlm. 3-9

Before bringing up the problem of the runaway Onesimus, Paul took some time to establish his lines of communication with Philemon. The apostle showed an appreciation for Philemon and a real concern for his family. There are times when we are called upon to confront others about their sins or deal with some other touchy problem. As we face situations that require confrontation, we need to make sure we value the people involved and take the time to establish strong lines of communication. If we jump in too soon, they may feel we are just trying to hurt them. If we prove our love beforehand, however, they will be more likely to listen to what we have to say.

Phlm. 14-17

Onesimus and Philemon each had a responsibility. Onesimus was responsible to do what he could to make restitution to Philemon; Philemon was responsible to accept the overtures of the repentant Onesimus. They had to let go of their old resentments. If we have wronged someone else, we need to accept responsibility for that and take steps toward making restitution. It is equally important, however, that we respond with forgiveness when others harm us. Bearing a grudge against someone else is destructive not only to the person we turn away; it also will fill us with unresolved bitterness, hindering our spiritual progress.

Phlm. 18-21

With the phrase “charge it to me,” Paul was asking Philemon to reckon Onesimus’s debt against Paul’s account. Philemon was to welcome Onesimus back into his household as if Paul were the one returning. Paul intervened to help these brothers resolve the resentment and repair this broken relationship. This is a beautiful illustration of what God does for us through Jesus Christ. God reckons all our sins and failures to the account of Jesus Christ, who has paid the price through his death on the cross. Then God joyfully receives us into his family, just as if he were welcoming his own Son (see 2 Corinthians 5:21).

Heb. 1:1-2

Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God's final and most perfect revelation. Yet God the Son shaped the original creation as well. As "the Alpha and the Omega—the beginning and the end" (Revelation 1:8), he is the only Power capable of recreating and transforming us. As the heir of all the treasures of heaven and earth, Jesus Christ stands ready and able to help those who come to him with empty hands, acknowledging their sins and needs.

Heb. 1:3

There is a vast difference between the divine infinite Being (God) and a limited human being (ourselves). The only way a person can come to understand something of God's glory and power is to get to know Jesus Christ. Jesus is simultaneously both an incredibly powerful expression of God's person and the one who lovingly entered sinful human existence to redeem and renew fallen souls. When we acknowledge our inability to save ourselves, we can confess the truth that only God has the power to accomplish what we cannot. God's power is found in Jesus Christ.

Heb. 1:4-6

Largely because of their role in the Old Testament, angels were greatly esteemed by the Jews as servants of God. However, as glorious as they are, there is still no comparison between the angels and Jesus Christ. Not only is he clearly superior in his person and in the purposes he accomplished; he is also the Son of the heavenly Father (see 2 Samuel 7:14; Psalm 2:7). It is into this wonderful Father-child relationship that he draws us (2:11). Through Jesus, we have access to a Father who loves us and cares for our every need tenderly and with infinite wisdom (see Galatians 4:6; Ephesians 2:18). This is good news indeed!

Heb. 1:7-13

This cascade of quotations from several messianic psalms gives angels their due as powerful spirits but then contrasts the greater glory of Christ: his clear right to rule as messianic King, his power over the original creation and the final recreation when it occurs, and his current status of honor beside the Father.

Heb. 2:1-3

This is the first of many warning passages in Hebrews. By it, the author sought to alert the Jewish readers to the subtle danger of drifting back into their former lifestyle in Judaism. There is always the danger of falling back into old ways. We can be careful not to drift away by involving ourselves in a church where God's Word is proclaimed and by involvement in a network of relationships where we are held accountable.

Heb. 2:5-8

The writer of Hebrews applied a well-known psalm to Christ (Psalm 8:4-6), possibly because of the reference to the "son of man." In Psalm 8 itself it is not obvious that these verses are messianic (i.e., referring to Christ). Rather, they seem to refer to humanity's status: lower than the angels yet ruler of the earth. In applying these verses to Christ, the writer of Hebrews put a new twist on this. As the Son of Man, Christ was made lower than the angels for a time but now is exalted to a position of authority over all things. He went before us and now gives us hope as we look ahead to our ultimate future. No matter how difficult things are for us on this earth, our eventual destiny is to rule in heaven with Christ.

Heb. 2:8-14

Believers are on the way to an eternity with God, moving through difficult territory where Christ has already been. It was God's kindness that led Jesus to his death—because by his death he purchased salvation. It is also God's kindness that leads us through suffering. Often it is only through the refining fire of suffering that we achieve balance and true holiness. When we suffer, we can be sure that Jesus is with us, that he went before us, and that God will use our pain for his purposes.

Heb. 2:17-18

When we are depressed or struggling, we may feel that nobody cares about us or understands what we are going through. No person has ever gone to greater lengths to identify with us than Jesus Christ; though he was limitless God, he subjected himself to all our limitations. He lived in our world as a human being, and he suffered as we do—therefore he understands our pain and suffering from personal experience. He has been where we are, and he is both eager and able to help us.

Heb. 3:1

The writer of Hebrews reminded his readers that they were God's special people, set apart, chosen for heaven. Periodically we need to be reminded of who we are and where we are headed. Formerly, our past may have controlled our present. Now, because we have surrendered to Jesus Christ, our future sets the direction and tone of our lives. As often as we need to, we can affirm who we are in Christ and the glorious destiny he holds for us.

Heb. 3:2-6

Christ's superiority to Moses was underlined by comparing the positions held by each. Christ was like a builder (as Creator), while Moses was like a house the builder constructed, or even a servant—though an esteemed one—in that house. We can be encouraged by remembering that God himself is in loving control of the reconstruction of our lives. In that knowledge we can find comfort, confidence, and joy.

Heb. 3:7-13

Most of this passage is a paraphrase of Psalm 95:7-11. The writer was reminding his Jewish audience of the mistakes their ancestors had made, recalling how they had been unfaithful to God and had suffered the painful consequences. The writer used past events to show his readers that they would be held accountable to live out their faith in whatever context God placed them. These verses underline the importance of holding each other accountable to faithfully continue living out our commitments to God and each other.

Heb. 3:7–4:13

In this second and more extended warning section (see 2:1-4), the readers are cautioned to avoid the mistake made by the Israelites who received the law at Mount Sinai. In spite of all their spiritual privileges and visual awareness of God's awesome power, they still refused to exercise faith and enter the Promised Land that God graciously offered. Many of us have made similar mistakes in our spiritual journeys. Either we don't persevere, or we don't anchor our spiritual growth in Christ. The book of Hebrews, and all of Scripture, is geared toward helping us put our full trust in God as he is revealed in Jesus Christ.

Heb. 3:14-19

The writer of Hebrews confirmed the need to act immediately, as well as the necessity for his readers to accept full responsibility for their wrong actions. The urgency to act immediately is underlined here by the emphasis on "today" in Psalm 95:7. The importance of taking responsibility becomes clear as we see that Israel truly had no one to blame but themselves for the fiasco in the wilderness. Acting immediately and taking responsibility for our lives are both crucial aspects of the spiritual growth process.

Heb. 4:1-3

God is always ready and willing to fulfill his promises of freedom and rest. There is only one thing that stops him: our unbelief, or lack of faith. God wants us to receive wonderful blessings and freedom, but these can be received only by faith. Just as the Jews of Moses' day turned back from entering the Promised Land, sometimes we allow the difficulties of the present to cause us to doubt God's ability to keep his promises. It is when the going seems the hardest that we must consciously fix our minds on God's promises. Faith in Christ, not in our own efforts, is the only way to true spiritual growth.

Heb. 4:4-11

Though he is by no means presently inactive, God, in a very real sense, entered his "rest" at the end of the creation (see Genesis 2:1-3). The writer understood David's renewed offer of rest in Psalm 95 to mean that the final rest was not secured when Joshua and Israel entered the Promised Land. Our true rest is fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

Heb. 4:12-13

During hard times our faith tends to dwindle; it is easy to grow angry and harden our hearts to the truth about ourselves. There is an antidote to this problem: the Word of God, which has spiritual power to penetrate to the depths of our hearts. God knows everything about us, even the things we try to hide from ourselves. We can count on him, through his Word, to uncover the problems and show us the truth we need to see. Then it is our responsibility to respond to the truth he shows us.

Heb. 4:14-5:3

It would be terrifying to admit our failures to a perfect God if Jesus weren't our High Priest. But Jesus became a man and is able to deal gently with our weaknesses because he understands our problems. And unlike the human priests, Jesus Christ, the ultimate High Priest, has already been glorified in heaven. He suffered the same temptations we do but did not sin; he offered a sacrifice, but for the sins of the world, not his own. That combination of glory and understanding beckons us to pray confidently for God's grace and mercy on an ongoing basis. Hebrews 4:14-16 gives us the scriptural confidence that God is always willing and able to shower us with the mercy and grace we need. Our part is to continually seek God and surrender to him.

Heb. 5:4-10

Like any high priest, Jesus Christ had to be chosen for his role. But Christ's was a different priesthood than the Jewish priesthood descended from Aaron. Jesus is the final (and eternal) High Priest in the order of Melchizedek (see 7:1-21; Psalm 110:4). To prepare for that unique calling, Jesus, who was and is perfect as God, had to go through a growing and learning process (see Luke 2:52) that culminated in his death on the cross. He is the one who goes before us and has prepared the way, and he is with us in every step we take.

Heb. 5:11-13

The writer interrupted his discussion of Melchizedek (see 5:6-10; 7:1-21) in order to give a lengthy warning (5:11-6:12) about the spiritual dynamics underlying the readers' stalled growth in Christ. Having adequate time to grow and change was not a problem. But the readers (like many of us today) continued to manifest childish behavior instead of growing to spiritual adulthood. It takes time to see progress, but what is important is that growth is taking place, even if it seems slow.

Heb. 5:14

Spiritual growth, eventual maturity, and balance can happen only through application: acting on what we know to be true. We need to continue to do the right things, and the more we do them, the more they become second nature to us. Like the athlete training for physical prowess, our spiritual renewal involves moral conditioning through making right choices, which will lead to spiritual and emotional maturity.

Heb. 6:4-8

This section refers either to believers who turned from their salvation or to unbelievers who came close to salvation but then turned away. Either way, the agricultural analogy brings out the truth that if there is real spiritual life, there will be some evidence of it. Let us look for and cherish any and all signs of growth, even if they are only tiny green shoots where before there was dry, barren ground. If we are seeking to grow through faith in Christ, we can be assured that there will, in good time, be fruit.

Heb. 6:9-12

In confronting his readers regarding their spiritual lethargy (see 5:11-14), the writer's words were strong and direct, though he still chose to be positive and think the best about them. He knew from the past what positive things they were capable of doing. However, he also faced the reality of their immaturity and challenged them to persevere in spiritual growth with a patient faith. We sometimes need to hear hard words of correction and challenge. This passage is both an example of how to confront when necessary and a challenge to be open to correction from the people who love us.

Heb. 6:13-20

Abraham, the father of the Jewish nation, is a classic example of patient faith. After waiting for many years, he received his promised son, Isaac, the first of many descendants (see Genesis 12:1-3; 22:16-18). Abraham's persevering faith (see 11:8-19) was anchored in God's promises, which were based on God's unchanging nature. Like Abraham, we can trust God's promises and find absolute security in the resurrected Christ, who is our High Priest and who connects us with the living God.

Heb. 7:1-3

The discussion here returned to the consideration of Melchizedek (see 5:6-10). These ideas may have been too deep for the original readers to fully understand in their state of spiritual lethargy, but the writer thought it was crucial that they try to understand. Aspects of Melchizedek's life (see Genesis 14:18-20) were amazingly parallel to events in the life of Christ. This was to make it clear that Christ truly did qualify as a priest in Melchizedek's order (see 6:20), and, thus, as our mediator for salvation and reconciliation.

Heb. 7:4-10

This entire section argues that Abraham recognized Melchizedek as greater than himself and, thus, obviously greater than any of Abraham's descendants, including Levi and the priesthood descended from him. It also established that the priesthood Christ holds, according to the order of Melchizedek, is actually older (implying more stability) than that of Aaron. Such stability can be a great comfort to us. We may face circumstances that are constantly changing, but Christ will never change.

Heb. 7:11-19

The new priesthood of Christ was desperately needed because the Levitical priesthood and the law of Moses were incapable of producing true spiritual maturity. A better priesthood, a better law, and a better hope for living in a growing relationship with God were necessary. Christ's qualification for his High Priesthood came not through tribal descent but because of his resurrection to new life. The law of Moses could not make people right with God. Only Christ could do that. We need to look to Jesus for lasting change in our lives.

Heb. 7:20-28

The unchangeable oath of God regarding Christ's priesthood, stated prophetically in Psalm 110:4, meant that Christ's ministry was related to a better and final covenant. This sense of permanence means, among other things, that Christ will see us through to the end, that he is always available to help, and that he is always our perfect model of right living.

Heb. 8:1-6

Christ is not only a superior heavenly High Priest, but he also serves in a superior heavenly sanctuary. In fact, the earthly Tabernacle was never intended as anything but a limited copy of the ultimate heavenly sanctuary. So it doesn't matter that Christ was never recognized as a priest during his time on earth. Through the death and resurrection of Christ, the limited earthly priesthood gave way to the perfect heavenly priesthood. It is the heavenly priesthood that provides the needed resources for salvation; any other means is inadequate.

Heb. 8:7-13

Six centuries before Christ died on the cross to provide a new way for us to relate to God (see Luke 22:20), the prophet Jeremiah predicted that a "new covenant," totally unlike the Old Testament law, was needed to breach the separation between God and the human race (see Jeremiah 31:31-34). Jesus came and fulfilled this new covenant, making the old covenant obsolete. The recipients of this letter were looking for redemption through the law instead of through the living Savior. There is only one way to experience redemption and reconciliation with God—through faith in Jesus Christ.

Heb. 8:10-13

The new plan to establish our relationship with God through Jesus Christ is exciting indeed. In Christ we can receive the spiritual and emotional healing we seek: moral codes written in the heart, rather than imposed from without; a new desire and ability to obey God; a special, close relationship with God; a new fellowship with other believers; ready mercy from God, with full forgiveness of past sins and character defects. In Christ, we have all the help necessary for redemption and spiritual growth.

Heb. 9:1-10

The regulations and order of the Old Testament priesthood were striking in their beauty and powerfully symbolized the painful consequences of sin. But even though these sacrifices were effective on a short-term basis, they were not a permanent solution to the sin problem. They could not cleanse the consciences of the people. Their role was simply to provide ritual cleanness. Only the work of Christ and the Holy Spirit can clear our consciences and transform our hearts.

Heb. 9:11-15

There was absolutely no comparison between the ongoing sacrifices of the earthly Temple in Jerusalem and the sacrifice provided by Christ, our great High Priest and mediator. Christ accomplished what the Old Testament sacrificial system never could: a once-for-all, completed redemption. Trusting the work that he did is the only way to secure a clear conscience, complete forgiveness, and eternal life. Now when we put our faith in Christ, we are free to joyfully know and serve God.

Heb. 9:27-28

Hope for the future must be based on the reality of the past and present. Death (and the following judgment) is the ultimate reality of this life; even Jesus died! Yet Jesus was also resurrected and has provided redemption and freedom from judgment for those who place their trust in him. This blend of reality and hope through faith can calm our fearful hearts. We can face any sin, any hurt— even death—knowing that Christ's sacrifice is completely sufficient to provide cleansing and new life.

Heb. 10:3-10

As this section on the superiority of the new covenant (8:1-10:18) draws to a close, the writer crowns his argument by asserting that the frustrating repetition of old-covenant sacrifices has now been replaced by Christ's offer of himself in accord with the will of God (10:7, 9-10). If we reject God's offer of salvation and transformation in Jesus Christ, we are rejecting the only means available for true spiritual renewal.

Heb. 10:19-25

This climactic instructional section of Hebrews (10:19-13:25) begins with a summary of the argument for Christ's superiority, then shifts to the transformed attitudes that are necessary as a result. Since Christ is the final redemptive sacrifice and great High Priest, we can enjoy the full privileges he has secured: personal access to God through Christ without an elaborate system; full assurance of our faith and salvation; hope for what the future holds; and encouragement from other people of faith. Through Christ and a community of believers we receive everything we need for our spiritual growth.

Heb. 10:24-25

Sometimes we may find ourselves pulling away from healthy relationships or falling into unhealthy ones or negative situations that undermine our spiritual momentum. These verses remind us that accountable and encouraging relationships with other believers are crucial to our spiritual growth. No one can stand alone for long. If we run from healthy relationships, we may veer off course without the benefit of being held accountable.

Heb. 10:26-39

This was the first warning section in the application portion of the book (see 12:14-29). It summarizes the only way to a wholehearted pursuit of emotional and spiritual healing. First, we can find release by repenting of sinful patterns and receiving forgiveness. Then we can take positive steps by strengthening our right behavior and attitudes, particularly our faith in God.

Heb. 11:1-3, 39-40

Faith involves trust that God is working in the unseen spiritual realm, based upon God's past actions in the world. Those who want a vibrant spiritual life have always had to live by such faith (11:2). Amazingly, by trusting in God we can still make a place for ourselves in the "Hall of Faith." The day of induction is still in the future! Seeking approval from other people is a constant battle for some of us. We need to remember that we cannot please everyone. We will make progress only when we stop trying to please others and put our trust in God, doing what we can to follow his will and please him.

Heb. 11:5-7

Enoch was unique (along with Elijah; see 2 Kings 2) in that he did not die (11:5; see Genesis 5:21-24). Noah also played a unique role with the ark, the Flood, and a new beginning (see Genesis 6-9). These two biblical characters illustrate the utter necessity of the faith and earnest perseverance described in 11:6. As we trust and depend on God for each aspect of our lives, we can be confident that such trust pleases God and will be rewarded with his powerful help.

Heb. 11:8-19

This portion about Abraham and Sarah is the longest in the Hebrews 11 “Hall of Faith,” probably because they were the parents of the Jewish nation. Abraham’s life repeatedly demonstrated faith as, again and again, he encountered circumstances that seemed to undermine the fulfillment of God’s promises. Sometimes it seems like forever before we see any changes. At such times we can remind ourselves that even the biblical characters who are most famous for their faith had to persevere without seeing visible results. We can trust that God will come through for us even when the struggle seems to drag on forever. Abraham had to wait most of a lifetime to see God’s promises even partially fulfilled.

Heb. 11:20-31

The writer demonstrated that every key event between the life of Abraham and Israel's entrance into the Promised Land involved someone with exemplary faith (11:1, 6). God accomplishes his purposes, great and small, through the faith of his people. As we trust him with every aspect of our lives, he will accomplish his will for us. If we trust in God, nothing is impossible!

Heb. 11:32-38

Here the writer rapidly lists more people from Old Testament history who demonstrated powerful faith. Despite the brevity of this overview, it is clear that even in Old Testament times, faith was not just a strict obedience to the law of Moses. It was a heartfelt trust in our personal God. This would have shown the readers that many before them had faced difficult times and hung in there, persevering by faith (11:33-38; see 10:32-36). When we feel our faith faltering, it is good to be reminded of others who have gone before us. We may turn both to the Bible and to other Christians for real-life testimonies of how God works through faith.

Heb. 12:1-3

Here we see that many, including some very unlikely candidates, have “won” the race of faith. The author of Hebrews advises readers to forcefully cut loose from sin and focus on Christ every step of the way, knowing that Jesus has been where we are and emerged victorious (see 4:14-15). Such focused perseverance will allow us to finish the race God has given us to run and bring him glory in the process.

Heb. 12:5-10

We are reminded here that true discipline is a form of loving correction, not hateful destruction. Many of us have suffered painful consequences for our sins. We may have become angry and wondered why God allowed us to suffer so deeply. Often, the consequences we suffer for our sins are used by God for discipline. But God does not allow us to suffer because he wants revenge or because he wants to destroy us. He allows us to suffer because he loves us. Sometimes painful discipline is the only way to break through our spiritual blindness and get us to redirect the course of our lives. As we look back, we can realize that our most painful days led us to seek God and surrender to him. By allowing us to suffer, God was leading us into a vital relationship with himself.

Heb. 12:14-29

This was the last of the warning passages spaced purposefully throughout Hebrews (see 2:1-4; 3:7-4:13; 5:11-6:12; 10:26-39). In effect, it served as the climactic confrontation between writer and readers over their apparent in-process defection from Christ back to Judaism and the law of Moses. After exhorting the readers not to squander God's grace, the writer shifted to considering the huge consequences of rejecting faith in Christ and the redemption he offers. Our choices have eternal consequences! If we reject Christ, we also reject the only means for eternal salvation.

Heb. 12:15

We need to recognize our hurts and deal with them as they occur by releasing them to God and sometimes by confronting those who hurt or anger us. If we do not, we can grow angry, resentful, vengeful, or bitter. Sometimes we can't even perceive our own bitterness taking root; we need others to point it out to us. Allowing ourselves to express our bitterness out loud, recognize our feelings, and release them to God will help us somewhat. But we then need to be willing to forgive and to release the injustices and hurts in order to experience God's overwhelming forgiveness (see Matthew 18:21-35). When we hang on to our bitterness, we not only stall our own healing, but we also hurt others along the way.

Heb. 12:22-24

There is a wonderful reward waiting for those whose faith endures (see 11:1,6). The clustered references to Mount Zion, Jerusalem, angels, the firstborn children, God, mediation, and blood were intended to show that the new covenant and Christ offer the very things that the readers mistakenly sought by returning to Judaism. Again we see that spiritual renewal and its rewards are available only through faith in Jesus Christ.

Heb. 13:1-6

This section lists a series of practical commands for faithfulness in service to others, in the marriage relationship, and in attitudes toward possessions. This faithfulness is based on God's empowerment and protection. Perhaps the readers were seriously wavering in these areas, even as many professing believers waver today. If we are uncertain which behaviors and attitudes are acceptable, God's clear standards can be a great help. As we practice right living, God's presence and power are available to help us live in accordance with his Word.

Heb. 13:7, 17

At times we may have difficulty dealing with authority figures. Apparently the readers of Hebrews, in turning back to their former Judaic lifestyle, were ignoring the proper authorities in their Jewish-Christian setting. So the writer admonished his readers to imitate the faith and lifestyle of their former leaders and cooperate with their present leaders for the good of all involved. Let us remember the importance of other people, especially those who model spiritual growth for us.

Heb. 13:8, 15-16

Even if our human leaders were to fail in some way, Jesus Christ is totally consistent and trustworthy. He will always be there for us, no matter what. Christ also deserves to receive the new covenant equivalent of old covenant sacrifices: (1) praise for who he is and what he has done; (2) good works of service; and (3) sharing with others in need (see 13:2-3). These activities are essential to our ongoing spiritual growth: telling others what God has done in our lives and reaching out to people in need.

Heb. 13:20-25

The letter to the Hebrews concluded with a double benediction. The first was a summary prayer, asking for the power of Christ's resurrection to enable the readers to do

God's will and to please him. Unlike some human fathers, God the Father readily helps his children. That idea led beautifully to the final concept of the letter: grace. These last lines speak volumes to those of us who are seeking spiritual renewal: God will provide us with what we need to overcome, and he will relate to us according to the principles of grace and mercy.

Jas. 1:2-4

Difficulties and temptations are facts of life for everyone. As we face difficult times though, our attitudes can make all the difference. Here we are told to be joyful as we face difficulties and temptations. This is hardly our natural reaction to painful situations. Seeing our trials as building blocks to God's work in our lives, however, may help us change our negative attitudes toward tough times. We can have joy during these trials because through them we learn patience, an essential ingredient for spiritual growth.

Jas. 1:5

How many times have we scolded ourselves for making an unwise decision? All of us have made wrong decisions that have led to frustration and depression, ultimately affecting our relationships with God and others. James reminds us that when we ask God for wisdom, he is more than willing to give it. Since God is the source of all wisdom, unwise decisions can be drastically reduced by turning to him for guidance. We do this by studying God's Word, being taught by those who are gifted within the body of Christ, and having regular times of prayer.

Jas. 1:6-8

We see here that all truly wise decisions are rooted in a vital faith in God. Faith "is the confidence that what we hope for will actually happen; it gives us assurance about things we cannot see" (Hebrews 11:1). God wants us to make progress in spiritual growth. When we ask God to help us make a wise decision, we can make the request without a trace of doubt, fully believing that whatever we ask for in faith will be granted. God will supply the wisdom we need to make the right decisions.

Jas. 1:19-20

Who is in control of our lives? Is it God? Is it another person? Is it an overpowering emotion? The issue of control is vital to our spiritual growth. For some of us, the emotion of anger is overpowering. James advises us to learn to listen, to have self-control, and to be patient, not letting anger control our actions in any situation. Everyone feels anger; God wants us to release our anger in appropriate ways. Even when we feel out of control, he can help us to maintain our composure. He can give us the strength and wisdom to think and listen before we speak or act.

Jas. 1:22-25

As we try to make an honest personal evaluation, some of us may have nothing to measure our attitudes or actions against. We may never have had any good role models to follow. Here James reminds us that God's Word functions like a mirror in our lives. As we read it, we are given a clear picture of what God wants us to be like. It shows us where we don't measure up to God's intended plan and provides a means of spiritual reflection that is true. But James also warns us not to stop after reflecting honestly on our lives. We cannot look into God's Word only to walk away and forget what we saw there. God doesn't want us to just see the truth; he wants us to change our lives in keeping with God's commands.

Jas. 2:1-9

Being rejected by others is always a painful experience. All of us want to be accepted. Here James reminds us that Jesus intended the Christian community to graciously accept and love people whether they are wealthy and influential or poor and disenfranchised. Our Christian communities need to welcome all who are seeking God. The essential truth here is captured by Jesus' call for us to treat others just as we want them to treat us (see Matthew 7:12).

Jas. 2:14-26

Faith needs to be accompanied by action. Some of us may have found it easy to seek God's help, but when called to obey God, we refused. We all have made commitments that we failed to back up with our actions. Because this is a prevalent problem, James left us this powerful reminder: "Faith by itself isn't enough. Unless it produces good deeds, it is dead and useless" (2:17). If we believe God can help us but refuse to obey his will, we prove that our faith is dead. True faith in God expresses itself in committed action; our actions need to back up our words.

Jas. 3:1-2

We all are guilty of offending others by either our words or actions. When we have wrongfully offended someone, we need to ask forgiveness and make restitution for the wrongs we have committed. Sometimes a quiet change of behavior can be the most effective way to make restitution for our previous failures. By treating others with respect, we can slowly rebuild the trust we have destroyed and give back some of what we have taken. As we follow God's plan and obey his Word, we can learn to avoid offending others and instead encourage them with our words and deeds.

Jas. 3:3-12

The tongue is a difficult thing to control, but what it does is extremely important. Like rudders that steer ships or bits that direct horses, our tongues do much to control and shape our lives. Our speech may have been instrumental in destroying our relationships, causing a painful downward spiral in our lives. If this is the case, we need to yield our tongues to God's control. Even when we are unable to control our destructive words, God can still tame our tongues. As he transforms us from the inside out, the words we speak will soon begin to reflect the changes. God will then be able to use our words to heal our relationships and encourage others.

Jas. 4:1-4

A right relationship with God is essential to spiritual growth. We should not ask for God's blessings just to satisfy our cravings for personal comfort, ignoring the fact that seeking our own selfish pleasure is allying ourselves with God's enemies. God wants to give us an abundant life so we can pass it on to others. He blesses us so we can live according to his plan. We can experience the freedom God offers by drawing close to God and asking for his guidance and help.

Jas. 4:6-10

Most of us have a hard time modeling the attitudes of submission and humility. These attitudes are essential to spiritual growth, however, as they show a willingness to be guided by God. Satan's pride—and our adoption of it—is opposed to God's plan for godly living. And as many of us know from experience, the way of pride and selfishness leads only to confusion and strife. True contentment comes only when we submit our lives to God and follow his plan. As we admit our failures and humbly seek to do God's will, we find ourselves drawing close to God. As we draw close to God, he will renew our spiritual lives.

Jas. 4:11-12

Many Christian communities are rendered ineffective by an attitude of self-righteous criticism. People become critical of anyone who doesn't measure up to their ideals of perfection. Some of us may have experienced this kind of destructive criticism. Some of us are also guilty of criticizing others. We need to behave with healthy humility. No one is perfect except God; only he is in a position to judge others (see Romans 14:10-12). We need to focus on our own faults, including our tendency to criticize others.

Jas. 5:1-5

Some of us may wonder why we have to give up our pursuit of pleasure. We see people living for wealth and pleasure who seem to be happier than we are. Here James reminds us that a selfish lifestyle inevitably leads to painful consequences. Some of us already have experienced the pain and emptiness brought on by the selfish pursuit of pleasure. A selfish lifestyle never yields lasting joy and peace; it always leads to one kind of bondage or another. When we make God's will our own and follow his plan, we will experience freedom and become a blessing to the people around us.

Jas. 5:7-11

Even though we have surrendered our lives to God, there will be times and circumstances that test our patience. We must never forget that there will come a day when we will no longer have to wait for Christ to return, for he will have arrived. In the meantime, we are to bear our suffering patiently and be patient with each other, too.

Jas. 5:13-15

Since God has the power to heal us spiritually, emotionally, and physically, prayer is one of the most powerful tools available to us. When we pray to God, we display our faith that he can help us. Prayer is an essential part of the process of surrendering our lives to God. As we share our needs with one another and pray for one another, God will display his active presence and power in our lives.

Jas. 5:16-20

Admitting our faults to God and to a trustworthy person is essential to our spiritual growth. When we share our faults with others, we give them the opportunity to uphold us in prayer. James reminds us that confession is an important part of our personal prayer lives. God invites us to admit our faults and failures to him through prayer. When we and others bring our sins and shortcomings before God, he starts the healing process in our lives. Prayer is never a waste of time; it yields wonderful results! God responds powerfully when we display our faith by sharing our problems with him.

1 Pet. 1:1-2

As the apostle greeted his friends, he reminded them of how they stood in relation to the triune God: They were chosen by God the Father, cleansed by the blood of Jesus Christ, and renewed by the Holy Spirit, who was at work in their hearts. We, too, enjoy these privileges if we have surrendered our lives to God.

1 Pet. 1:3-6

Peter praised our Father God for the free gift of his loving grace. All who receive God's gift become his children and belong together in his family. All who trust in him share the hope of eternal life with God. This hope gives us the strength to persevere in our spiritual growth with joy, despite the difficult and painful circumstances we face.

1 Pet. 1:7

The refiner would heat up the furnace and then put in the gold he had mined in order to separate the worthless and impure dross from the precious and beautiful gold. The dross would rise to the top and be skimmed off until the refiner could look into the crucible at the liquid gold and see his image. In like manner, God uses the fiery trials and tribulations in our lives to purify and beautify our faith so that one day he will see clearly his image in us.

1 Pet. 1:8-9

Surrendering our wills and lives to God is sometimes difficult when we face trials. In the midst of our most painful trials, we may fail to see God with us. Yet Peter suggests that, strange as it may seem at the time, surrendering to God in difficult times can be a joyful experience. If we trust that God will use our trials to complete the process of purification in our lives, even the tough times can become times of celebration.

1 Pet. 1:10-13

The Good News of God's forgiveness in Christ flows from a plan that took centuries to complete. Now that it is complete, we can count on God's continuing kindness as we trust in him until Jesus returns. We don't have to wonder whether we are tricking ourselves into believing something that isn't true: Centuries of history and numerous promises stand behind the revelation of God in Jesus.

1 Pet. 1:14-17

Peter warned his readers about the temptation to give up on their faith. Peter knew what it felt like to "slip back into your old ways." Once he boldly proclaimed that he was willing to die in Jesus' defense. A few hours later he denied that he even knew Jesus (see Matthew 26:31-35, 69-75). The only way to keep from slipping back into sinful ways is to maintain awareness of our true identities: We are children of a holy God. Like children, we are weak and dependent, but the Father we depend on is strong, loving, just, and perfect.

1 Pet. 1:23-25

Peter contrasted the new life we have in Christ with the natural life our parents gave us. Even the best features of our natural life will fade and decay due to the effects of sin, but the life God gives us increases in beauty and lasts forever. God's promises to save us will never fail.

1 Pet. 2:1

Peter tells us to avoid several sinful behaviors, including deceiving others; pretending to be good when there is unacknowledged sin in our hearts; being jealous of others instead of making the best of our own situations; and speaking unkindly of others. These verses spur us to examine our hearts and continue to work toward the goals of honesty, integrity, contentment, and kindness.

1 Pet. 2:2-3

Here Peter pinpointed an insight for helping us resist sin. We can live godly lives because we have tasted of God's kindness. To the extent that we experience God's love (which often comes through our relationships with other people), we won't want to sin because we will see that it isn't good for us and doesn't satisfy our longing for God's love. This takes the focus off of improving outward behavior (which is more the result) and puts it on seeking to experience more of God's kindness. We can come to him with all our needs, and he will fill our hearts with the love we crave.

1 Pet. 2:4-6

These verses leave us with two wonderful promises upon which we can build our lives and our spiritual growth: We are acceptable to God because of Jesus, and we will never be disgraced if we trust in him. With these truths as the foundation, we can build lives that please God.

1 Pet. 2:9-10

The Christian's true identity is no longer that of a sinner but that of a holy saint. Priests are given the privilege of appearing before the Lord with requests. Because of Christ's ultimate sacrifice on the cross, we are free to come before God and need no longer offer sacrifices for sin.

1 Pet. 2:11

Sin is alluring because there is some pleasure in it. Many of us have struggled with the temptation to escape the painful realities of life by turning to the "pleasures" of sinful behavior. Yet sooner or later we will realize that these pleasures fight against the welfare of our souls. By seeing ourselves as visitors on earth, with our real homes in heaven, we can seek God to redirect the course of our lives away from sinful pursuits.

1 Pet. 2:15

The testimony of a changed life is a far better witness of God's grace than a lecture is. When hurting people see how God has brought us through difficult times and transformed our lives, they will want to know how God can change them, too.

1 Pet. 2:21-23

Peter made it clear that persevering through difficulty and pain can be the God-ordained path to maturity. God does not ask us to endure anything that he did not endure himself in Christ. Like us, Jesus was tempted to give in to sinful pleasures, to lie his way out of a dilemma, to return insult for insult, and to seek revenge, but he chose not to do so. Like Jesus, we can respond to injustice with a faith that entrusts matters into God's hands and simply seeks to obey him.

1 Pet. 2:24

Not only did Jesus serve as our example for how to deal with suffering, but he also suffered for us. He received the punishment for our sin so we wouldn't have to. Instead of facing terrible punishment, we can receive his mercy. He desires to set us free from our bondage and heal us from the devastating effects of sin in our lives.

1 Pet. 3:1-7

God's design for marriage is for the wife to respect her husband and the husband to be sensitive and loving toward his wife. Husband and wife are to receive through each other the blessings of God's loving grace and guiding truth. This sounds wonderful, but, as anyone who is married knows, it is often hard to carry out! It requires being vulnerable, resolving conflicts, and being confronted with the truth even when it hurts. Working through such difficulties is part of God's plan for helping us grow to full maturity.

1 Pet. 3:8-11

The Christian community is to be like a healthy and happy family where people share their hurts and find sympathy; they humbly express their needs and receive loving care; they forgive one another rather than plot revenge; they pray for each other; they are careful not to say things that will unnecessarily hurt others; they can be honest about who they are; they seek to do good for one another; and they try to live in peace by resolving conflicts with each other. The community Peter described is ideal for helping us grow spiritually.

1 Pet. 3:13-17

We all know what it feels like to be hurt by someone we are trying to help, or to have someone falsely accuse us of wrongdoing. People may misunderstand us and resist the changes we are trying to make. The challenge in such situations is to be patient and maintain a quiet trust in God's promises. If we persevere, God will reward us with a mature faith and a deep experience of his love.

1 Pet. 4:1-5

Here we are called to follow Christ's example of self-control, resisting the sinful pleasures that come our way and, instead, focusing our energy on living according to God's will. The sins Peter listed here can exert incredible power over us if we allow them. To break free of a sinful lifestyle, we have to cut ourselves off from past practices and sometimes even adjust our relationships. To "just say no" alone won't set us free. We also need to say "yes" to God and redirect our energy into our spiritual growth and, eventually, the spiritual growth of others.

1 Pet. 4:10-11

God has given us special and unique abilities. Sometimes we feel that out of humility we should not make use of our gifts. But this is not right. We are called to use these gifts for God's glory, allowing his generosity to flow through us. If we are careful to focus on God's glory and not our own, we will make proper use of our abilities.

1 Pet. 4:12-13

Here Peter returned to a central theme of his letter: We should not only expect to experience trials, but we should also rejoice in them. Through our difficult circumstances we receive an opportunity to share in Christ's sufferings as well as in his glory. This theme offers great hope because it affirms that our suffering has a purpose. Through it, God will draw us close and transform us into the people he intended us to be.

1 Pet. 4:14-16

We need wisdom to know the difference between suffering because of our own sin and suffering for doing what is right. When we suffer because of our own sin, we naturally feel ashamed and recognize our need to change. When we are persecuted for our Christian conduct or godly character, we can rejoice in our sufferings because we will share Christ's glory one day.

1 Pet. 4:19

Peter encourages us to rejoice in the persecution we face. We probably have been persecuted by old friends who want us to return to our old ways of life. Perhaps family members are afraid of the changes we are making and are putting obstacles in the way of our progress. As we face these trials, we can trust that God will be faithful to us and remember that he can use even our painful experiences for our good. So if we are suffering for our faith, we need to keep on doing what we know to be right. No matter what obstacles may be placed in our way, God will never desert us once we have entrusted our lives to him.

1 Pet. 5:1-4

Several qualities are necessary for a Christian leader: the willingness to care for others, a desire to serve others for their benefit, and the ability to lead by example rather than force. Jesus has provided the best example for us to follow. To become the type of leader God wants, we can submit to Christ's leadership and allow his grace, peace, and wisdom to flow through us.

1 Pet. 5:7

God cares about whatever troubles us. He is watching over us and is continually concerned for our welfare! To the extent that we truly believe this about God we will release our worries to him. However, many of us find it hard to trust God so fully. Because of our background, we may have trouble believing that anyone is that concerned about us. We may have found in the past that if we didn't worry about our problems, no one would. One way to increase our level of trust in God is to find another person further along in Christian maturity with whom we can begin to learn trust. As we are able to share our concerns with a caring person, we can consciously remind ourselves that God's concern is like our friend's, only much wider and deeper.

1 Pet. 5:8-9

Satan is lurking and prowling about in this world, seeking to devour us. We are commanded to stand firm and fight the battle, knowing that the war is already won. As we develop a community of support, we will see that we are not alone in the battle; others are fighting alongside us.

1 Pet. 5:10-11

God's promise to us when we fall down or are pushed down is that he will pick us up, set us in a good and secure place, and use the difficulty we have been through to make us stronger than ever! It is this hope that gives us the courage to persevere in our spiritual journeys.

2 Pet. 1:1-2

Peter greeted his readers by reminding them of their shared faith in Jesus Christ. Truly God is good! Experiencing God's kindness and peace depends on how well we know him. Peter reminds us that grace and peace come when we concentrate on progressively getting to know God better.

2 Pet. 1:3-4

One of the most comforting by-products of faith is the simple awareness that we possess everything we need to live full and meaningful lives. How do we experience this provision? By participating in God's nature through faith and by growing through practice into all that he has designed us to be. The past has been redeemed, the future is securely in God's hands, and today is filled with the opportunity to grow in our understanding of love, forgiveness, truth, and grace! As a parent ought to provide for a child, so God supplies all that we need, including the ability to rise above our circumstances and temptations.

2 Pet. 1:5-11

When we entrust our lives to God, we may wonder if there is any part for us to play. The apostle reminds us that God expects us to do our part in the spiritual growth process. As we seek change in our lives, we will share in God's nature and receive the ability to think new thoughts and formulate new behavior patterns.

2 Pet. 1:12-18

It is easy to remember the painful moments of life—the disappointments and the people who disappointed us. It is sometimes harder to remember the many blessings we receive in small ways each day. Here Peter reminded his readers that they could overcome the pain of past trials by focusing on the good things in life, like God's faithfulness. Peter wanted them to etch the truth of God's amazing love into their minds. We may have painful memories that we need to release to God, but as we do so, we can also reflect on the amazing love of God. As we recall the good things God has done, the painful memories will begin to fade.

2 Pet. 1:19-21

God's truth is dependable; our human perspective often is not. God's truth is not weak or questionable; it is not a theory waiting to be proven false. God's truth, instead, is certain and can be counted on. A central question is: Are we ready to believe what God says, or do we prefer the perspectives of fallible people, the messages ingrained in our minds from past events, the doubts instilled by friends who have not yet surrendered their lives to God? As we take God's Word to heart, we come to understand more and more of the truth—about ourselves, about God, and about our future in Christ.

2 Pet. 2:1-12

Here we are reminded of the consequences to be faced by those who reject God's plan and lead others away from the truth. God has provided us with the help we need to renew our lives according to his will. The consequences of a self-centered pursuit of pleasure and power are terrible. It is good to be reminded every so often of what we have been delivered from: “sudden destruction.”

2 Pet. 2:13-22

Setting of appropriate boundaries will help protect our spiritual health. People who do not have our best interests at heart are everywhere, even in the Christian community. Peter emphasized the need for discernment here. Apparently the church in Peter’s day was plagued by those who once professed faith in Christ but then “added to” the simple truth of the gospel. They advocated “freedom,” but that freedom was really only a license to become enslaved once again by sin. Setting healthy boundaries for our behavior involves knowing God’s truth and allowing neither the false teachings of others nor our own sinful inclinations to lead us astray.

2 Pet. 3:3-9

It is difficult to wait on Christ’s return, particularly during difficult times. Why doesn’t he return for us now? Why does he allow further suffering and frustration? The answer is simple yet profoundly full of love: God is patient! He wants all to come to him and discover the only true way of life. As we wait, we can trust that it is always for a good purpose.

1 Jn. 1:5-7

There is a strong contrast between the light in the Christian life and the darkness in a life given to sin. If we live in sin while claiming to be Christians, we deceive ourselves. Honest and accurate self-examination of our spiritual state requires us to live in God's light. The results of choosing to live in the light—continually acknowledging our flaws as the light reveals them—are a cleansed conscience and fulfilling relationships with other believers.

1 Jn. 1:8-10

Careful and honest reflection on God's Word and our lives normally leads to a consciousness of sin. In these verses we are assured that if we confess our sins, we will experience the forgiveness and cleansing God has provided through the blood shed by his Son, Jesus Christ. The lesson is simple: Confession must precede cleansing.

1 Jn. 2:1-2

In every situation, whatever our need, we see that we can turn to the greatest resource and advocate of all: Jesus Christ. Because he received the full force of God's anger against sin, we need not live in fear of God's displeasure for past transgressions. Trusting that Christ suffered for our sin, we can now come to the Father freely, with complete trust that we will be accepted unconditionally.

1 Jn. 2:3-6

How can we be sure that we belong to Christ? Our assurance is validated by our continuing desire to obey God's will for us. Those who claim to be saved but continually disobey God's revealed will are liars. We cannot make spiritual progress unless we are willing to submit to God and obey his Word. That means continually reflecting on our lives, promptly admitting our wrongs to others, and confessing our sins to God. As we learn to love God more and more, this will be more a joy than a burden.

1 Jn. 2:7-11

Another distinctive mark of our faith is love. Hatred toward other Christians is a sure sign that we need God to change our hearts. Light and darkness cannot exist in the same heart. Notice that the absence of love will keep us in the dark and prove a severe hindrance to spiritual progress. Love is never weak or compromising; it is a sign of emotional strength.

1 Jn. 2:15-17

The more we are wrapped up in this world and its attractions, the harder it will be to seek God. The best way to avoid entanglement with worldly values is to "feed" our spirits by seeking God through prayer and meditation on his Word. Then we will discover his will and his help in redirecting our lives.

1 Jn. 2:18-23

An important secret to spiritual growth is a commitment to right beliefs. As we rely on the Holy Spirit, we are able to recognize the spirit of antichrist. The critical doctrinal issue for John was that of the deity of Jesus Christ. One cannot genuinely profess belief in God while denying his Son. True spiritual renewal cannot take place unless we recognize Jesus as both God and man.

1 Jn. 2:24-27

Belief in Jesus as the Son of God and reliance on the Holy Spirit will guard us against being deceived by false doctrines. The quest for new, sophisticated solutions to the consequences of sin and despair only leads to new kinds of enslavement. Following Christ gives us the only perspective on ourselves and the world that leads to true freedom from sin because only the Christian faith asserts that Jesus took upon himself the penalty for our sin and gives us the power to break free.

1 Jn. 2:28-3:3

Many of us struggle with the issue of shame. John tells us that as we live in Christ, trusting him for forgiveness and walking with him consistently, we will have no reason to be ashamed at his return. We can rest assured that we are loved and acceptable because God himself has made us his children. As his children, we long to be with him and to be like him. In the meantime, the knowledge that God is coming again provides powerful motivation to live godly lives and to seek to know God better through prayer and meditation on his Word.

1 Jn. 3:4-9

As we honestly reflect on our lives, let's face the essence of sin honestly: It is breaking God's law—doing things our own way rather than God's way. Once we surrender our lives to God, he himself gives us a new nature that is no longer comfortable with sin. We still sin (1:8), but we no longer make it a practice. We know that our sin was the reason Jesus gave his life on the cross, and our desire is to please him, in accordance with our new nature. Whereas before—in our sins—we continued with little sense of wrongdoing, now we know better. This new perspective on sin shows that God is truly at work in our lives.

1 Jn. 3:10-20

Using Cain and Abel as examples, John underscored the importance of love. Having true love means being willing to make sacrifices for the ones we love. The best way to express our love for God is to show love to others. Our actions toward others, not just our words, are what count.

1 Jn. 4:1-6

Anyone who denies that Jesus was God in a human body is spreading false teaching and does not have the Holy Spirit. These people will never achieve true transformation in their lives, for the Holy Spirit is the only one who can perform this. But we who acknowledge both Christ's humanity and deity and have surrendered our lives to him have a power that is stronger than our past and our present struggles with sin.

1 Jn. 4:7-12

Our heavenly Father loves us so much that he sent his Son to save us; as we grow to be more like him, we also grow in our ability to love one another with a sacrificial love. Many of us feel our spiritual renewal would be greatly expedited if only we could see God. But no one has seen God the Father; he is seen through his people when they love one another. That is why it is so important for us to restore relationships with the people we have harmed. That is also why we need the fellowship of believers—because we need the love they have to offer.

1 Jn. 4:13-15

Assurance comes from believing that Jesus is the Son of God, because that ability to believe is proof that God himself, through the Holy Spirit, is living in us. Confession of Christ is both the evidence and the expression of a genuine faith. It is more than intellectual belief; our confession of Christ must lead us to a confession of sin and a commitment to live for God. We do this as we take responsibility for our lives and deal with our past failures and broken relationships.

1 Jn. 4:16-5:3

John spoke again about the importance of love. True Christianity is characterized by loving relationships in which there is no fear. Experiencing such relationships—first with God, then with other believers—is at the heart of spiritual renewal. We can trust God wholly, without fear, because our punishment for sin has already taken place in Christ. Where love reigns, we can be transparent with fellow believers, trusting that our honesty will not be used to hurt us. Mature Christian love delights in helping others, and it creates an environment in which we can develop accountability and a new sense of responsibility toward ourselves and toward others.

1 Jn. 5:4-5

If we believe in Jesus and live by faith, we are equipped to triumph over the negative influences of our hostile world. For those of us who trust Christ with our lives, spiritual renewal is not only possible but certain. No one or nothing can dominate where God has promised the power to overcome.

1 Jn. 5:6-13

How can we know we are living in a way that pleases God? Scripture tells us that we can look for certain evidence. Belief that Jesus is the Son of God and a life committed to obeying him are two sources of assurance. Another is the witness of the Holy Spirit, who points to Christ in our lives. God gives us a sense of rightness as we continue to maintain contact with him through prayer and study of his Word and as we obey his revealed will.

1 Jn. 5:20-21

John ends this letter by reminding us who the true God is and warning us not to let anything take God's place in our hearts. He cautions against entertaining any false ideas about God, which are at the root of all false religious systems. Spiritual renewal calls us to rid ourselves of wrong ideas about God as well as any substitutes for him. It means putting God back in his rightful place as the absolute Lord of our lives.

2 Jn. 4-6

Note the wise approach John used here: First he commended “the chosen lady” and “her children” for their faithfulness; then he exhorted them to act according to Christian love; finally he followed his exhortation with an explanation. There is a pattern here for helping others: first encouragement, next exhortation, and then explanation. Even though we are communicating truths established by the authority of God’s Word, sharing the Good News with others must still be done in a way that will communicate to people. An initial commendation will edify and build rapport; the exhortation will communicate the truth or confront a problem; and an explanation will establish the truth and build the relationship.

2 Jn. 7-9

Clear boundaries for belief and practice are essential. Many of us have been deceived and pulled into unhealthy relationships, damaging habits, or false religions. We need to be aware of the subtle lies and distortions of truth used by people who would like to deceive us. The best way to avoid being deceived is to anchor our faith in God’s Word and seek his will for us through prayer. Faith in God through Jesus Christ is the only viable means for true spiritual renewal.

2 Jn. 10-11

With heresy on the rise, John warned believers not to allow those with suspect doctrinal views to infiltrate the Christian community. He did not want new believers who had made a good beginning in the Christian faith to be led astray. We also need godly people in our lives—people like John—who can warn us away from false teachings and dangerous activities. If we don't have relationships that hold us accountable, we need to take steps to develop them. All of us are susceptible to being deceived and led astray. Building healthy relationships with wise and godly people is necessary to help us preserve spiritual gains.

3 Jn. 5-8

Here John commended Gaius for the hospitality he had shown to the Christian teachers who periodically passed through town. Hospitality is a special gift that is often overlooked. Some of us may feel as if we just aren't good at sharing our faith. We may wonder if there is any way we can encourage others. Hospitality may be one way we can show others what God has done in our lives. By quietly serving others, we will show them that we have become a new person, and they will wonder how it happened. This may open the opportunity for us to share our faith in God in a more natural way. Opening our homes to others may also give needy people a context in which to relax and explore the truth about themselves.

3 Jn. 9-10

Confrontation is a necessary part of spiritual growth, but it scares many of us. Here John deals with an individual who is hurting people in the Christian community. He warns Gaius and his fellow believers about this man and gives them the tools they need to stand against him. There may be people who actively oppose God's plans for his people. We may need to confront them about what they are doing. This can be difficult and can cause some pain, but it is necessary. God wants us to make spiritual progress; he will help us deal wisely with the people who stand in our way.

3 Jn. 11-12

Having a good role model is important to our spiritual growth.

John urged Gaius to follow good examples and to avoid imitating anyone who was doing evil. We need to develop relationships with people who will encourage us spiritually. This means that we need to put relationships that lead us back into our sins on hold for a while. It also means that we need to take concrete steps toward building relationships with people who model godly lifestyles. God will help us as we seek to build healthy relationships.

Jude 3-7

Our problems don't usually attack us head-on; they often come when we least expect them. Sometimes we are completely unaware of the dangers that certain people, ideas, or activities pose to us. Jude warned his readers about people who would try to lead them away from a true faith in Jesus Christ. These false teachers claimed that God's grace set them free to do whatever they wanted. Our society often gives us a similar message, claiming that boundaries to behavior are limiting and destructive. Most of us have discovered firsthand, however, that this teaching leads to painful bondage. We should take Jude's warning seriously. We may need to avoid people and activities that are likely to lead us back into slavery to sin.

Jude 14-16

Jude reminded his readers that the false teachers among them would suffer terrible consequences for their selfish and sinful lifestyles. We may be tempted to follow our old friends back into the "pleasures" of our old destructive habits. Jude's warning can help us to turn away from any such temptations. If we take part in sinful activities, we will be enslaved by them. If we plant seeds of righteousness by following God's will, we will receive God's blessings and help. True freedom can be found only through a vibrant relationship with God.

Jude 17-23

Jude warns us about people who might try to hinder our spiritual growth. When we expect to meet such people, we can be prepared to stand up against the temptations they put before us. By learning to recognize our weaknesses and walk humbly, following the Holy Spirit's guidance, we will be able to shun the things that tear us and others down. When we seek to encourage others, our testimony of God's work in our lives must be clear and consistent with our way of life. We can share God's message of hope by showing others the kind of selfless love that God has already shown to us. We cannot live this kind of life under our own power; we can do it only by receiving the power God offers through his Holy Spirit.

Rev. 1:1-2

The book of Revelation tells us about things that will happen in the future. It looks forward to the time of Christ's return, when our new life in Christ will be perfected. It also tells about the hard battle God will fight to restore our world from the destructive consequences of sin. Many of the symbols of this book are difficult to interpret, but one message comes through loud and clear: No matter how bad things are right now, God has a solution! Jesus Christ will return to re-create our broken and polluted world. He will give us new bodies and healed hearts. God has already started his healing in our lives through a relationship with Christ; he will complete this task when he returns to rule.

Rev. 1:4-6

Christ shed his redemptive blood on the cross in order to free us from our bondage to sin and to give us eternal life. God loved us enough to send his Son to die on our behalf. But then Jesus rose from the dead, conquering death forever! Through him, we also can rise to new life. No matter who we are or what we have done, in Christ, God has a solution for our problems. Even death has been overcome! Through Christ, we have been made citizens of his eternal Kingdom (see Philippians 3:20), and we have a glorious eternity to look forward to.

Rev. 1:7-8

The future coming of Jesus Christ will be a desperately painful moment for those who refuse to believe and follow him. The terrifying consequences will be eternal judgment (see 20:11-15). On the other hand, if we put our faith in Christ, we can rejoice in the new life his return will bring. God is “the beginning and the end.” We can have hope because God is in control of our past, present, and future.

Rev. 1:9-11

John had suffered a great deal for Christ and had persevered through it all. All the pain and exile had not embittered him toward God; in fact, the apostle still worshiped God faithfully. We are told he was worshiping when he received the visions recorded in this book. John’s example provides encouragement to persevere despite the difficulties we face. As we persevere in our spiritual growth, God can use us greatly too.

Rev. 2:1-7

Christ addressed the church in Ephesus first. It was probably responsible for planting the other churches (see Acts 19:10). Initially, the apostle commended the Ephesian believers for their perseverance through hardship. John began his communication on a positive note; then he turned to confront the more painful realities. He moved beyond his “encouraging word” to challenge his readers to repent and rekindle their love, which had waned. Confrontations are best made in the context of love. We need to begin our conversations by building others up and showing that we care. After laying the groundwork, we will be better able to communicate the more painful message.

Rev. 2:8-11

Of the remaining six churches, the church in Smyrna was the closest to Ephesus, and it was experiencing similar hardships. This small Christian community was suffering from unrelenting oppression by Satan and his evil spiritual forces. John's vision reminded the believers that their perseverance through dangerous times would be rewarded by God with new life in Jesus Christ. We also are called to persevere through the tough times. As we surrender our lives to God and follow his will, he will transform our lives. At Christ's return, we will receive new bodies and cleansed hearts—a completely new life!

Rev. 2:12-17

The church in Pergamum also had been intensely loyal to Jesus Christ through a satanic onslaught. Yet, there were some in the church who had fallen prey to sexual misconduct. Such relational and spiritual misconduct threatened to undermine, or at least neutralize, the testimony of this Christian community. Sometimes great victories can be neutralized by seemingly small sins. We need to be consistent in our walk with God, making sure that all areas of our lives are yielded to him. Even the smallest sin or bad habit can lead us off course over time. This is why we consistently need to see the truth of where we are spiritually and ask God to redirect our course back in line with his will.

Rev. 2:18-29

The church in Thyatira was commended for its acts of love, faith, patience, and service, and it was encouraged to persevere in doing them. However, there was a serious spiritual cancer growing in their midst: A self-styled prophetess whom John called Jezebel was encouraging a totally profligate lifestyle. God's harsh punishment of this woman shows us how much he wanted to protect his people from her destructive influence. This gives us some idea of how dangerous it is to have relationships with people who might try to lead us astray. We need to choose carefully the people with whom we spend time. A sinful relationship may lead us away from God and undermine our spiritual progress.

Rev. 3:1-6

The believers in Sardis were, for the most part, just going through the motions spiritually. They were warned that if they didn't make some immediate changes, they would suffer painful consequences. Fortunately, some of the believers in Sardis stood firm in their faith, and they would be rewarded accordingly. It is possible, with God's help, to stand firm even when everyone around us is falling away. We don't have to follow the crowd; we can follow God instead. As we do, he will bless us and write our names in the Book of Life.

Rev. 3:7-13

The church in Philadelphia was not strong, but it had remained obedient to God and had stood firm against satanic oppression. As a result, Christ promised the church protection from the greatest time of tribulation that would ever come upon the whole world. He encouraged them to persevere, promising that they would live forever with him in his new Jerusalem. This promise has been greatly delayed, but that doesn't make it any less secure (see 21:1–22:21). We have this same hope if we entrust our lives to God through faith in Jesus Christ.

Rev. 3:14-22

The believers in Laodicea portrayed themselves as being self-sustaining and having no needs. Christ saw their situation quite differently. To him they were spiritually blind and destitute. But worst of all, they were spiritually indifferent—lukewarm. If we cannot see the truth, we cannot move back in line with the life God wants us to live. Therefore, we must continually pray for God to heal our spiritual blindness so that we can see the truth.

Rev. 4:1-3

The apostle John was allowed to view this spectacular scene in God's heavenly throne room (4:1–5:14), but he did it as a prisoner on the island of Patmos. We also may be living in bondage, feeling hopelessly entrapped and distant from any kind of help or deliverance. But we, like John, can draw close to God even when the world around us is dark and foreboding. John's vision of heaven gave him the hope he needed to face many lonely days ahead. And the record the apostle left us can give us hope during hard times, too. Even when we are alone and helpless, God is still with us. God's grace and power are never limited by the circumstances we face.

Rev. 4:8-11

God is worthy of our continual praise. Even the great spiritual beings in heaven make praising God their primary occupation. God is greater and more powerful than anything we have to face. As we surrender our lives to him, let us also praise him for the amazing transformation he is working in us.

Rev. 5:1-7

Even in heaven there was no one worthy to open the scroll of revelation and judgment except the Lamb—Jesus Christ. He is perfect and has conquered sin and death through his death and resurrection. There are many religions and paths that claim to lead to spiritual renewal of some sort, but no leader of any of these religions or other paths is worthy to open this scroll. There is no one other than Jesus Christ who is able to give us the true spiritual renewal we seek.

Rev. 5:9-10

By shedding his blood on the cross, Jesus Christ, the Lamb, purchased our salvation (John 1:29). But God does far more than just deliver us from our destructive sins. He promises to use us to restore and maintain his world. We will be members of a Kingdom of priests for our God. As soon as we entrust our lives to God and seek to follow his will, we can begin our priestly duties. This involves sharing our story of deliverance and calling others to entrust their lives to God's care. We can play an important role in the restoration of people's lives by leading them to faith in Jesus Christ—the only one who is able to give us true spiritual renewal.

Rev. 5:11-14

In these final verses of John's description of the heavenly throne room, praise for the divine Lamb spills over from heaven to the rest of the created realm. No matter how much unbelief and rebellion dominate the earthly scene today, there will come a time when all will bow before God. We don't have to wait until Christ returns to acknowledge his lordship in our lives. We can do it today and begin to enjoy the immediate benefits of a vital relationship with God through Jesus Christ.

Rev. 6:1-8

Jesus Christ, the Lamb, begins the process of opening the scroll (see 5:1). This sets in motion the events leading to God's victory over sin and death. War, famine, and disease will be rampant during the period of the first four seals. Notice that the first steps toward God's cosmic restoration lead through painful times. Millions of people will die as God begins to deal with those who have rejected him. God often leads us through a period of pain as we suffer the consequences for our behavior. But God does this for our ultimate good. Even though he allows us to suffer for a time, he has plans for our restoration. He can use such suffering to teach us how helpless we are and how much we need him.

Rev. 6:9-11

The opening of the fifth seal reveals those who have been martyred for their service to God. They are waiting for God to avenge their unjust deaths. God tells them that they will have to wait because still other martyrs will join their number. In light of this, we can learn to trust God with any injustices that have been leveled against us.

Rev. 6:12-17

The opening of the sixth seal is followed by a huge earthquake and amazing phenomena in the sky. Leaders and military commanders will want to die, mistakenly thinking they can escape God's terrible judgment in that way. Sadly, their hearts are so hard that though they recognize God, they will not repent and turn to him in faith (see 9:20-21). Their continued refusal to surrender to God will lead to their eventual destruction. God wants to give us meaningful and joyful lives, but there will be wrath for those who rebel against him.

Rev. 7:1-3

As difficult as things will be during the period of the seals, God's protection will also be present for those who belong to him. They will be "sealed" with God's sign of ownership and protection. Perhaps this seal is similar to the identifying mark of the Holy Spirit, who is now present in the lives of all who believe in Jesus Christ (see Ephesians 1:13-14; 4:30). In each case the seal signifies an eternal relationship with God. We can begin an eternal relationship with God right now if we accept God's loving forgiveness through Jesus Christ and submit our lives to his good plan.

Rev. 7:9-14

This vast multitude from all races and nations is the harvest Christ envisioned from his great commission (see Matthew 28:19). They are truly thankful, worshiping God to show their appreciation for his great salvation. The white garments worn by this innumerable crowd speak of their purity through the blood of Christ. By surrendering our lives to God and accepting God's forgiveness in Jesus Christ, we can join this joyful throng of people who have been saved by God's wonderful grace.

Rev. 7:15-17

This majestic passage describes the heavenly relationship between Christ and his people. They will serve him constantly, and he will always protect them. All their other needs will be met by Christ, the Lamb who is also the Shepherd. In such a close and secure relationship, all the tears of painful oppression, loss, and misunderstanding will be done away with. What wonderful hope these verses offer! By trusting in Jesus Christ, we can hope for a future filled with joy and peace.

Rev. 8:1-2

The opening of the seventh, and climactic, seal on the scroll of judgment brings a short period of silence before the sounding of the seven trumpets and their horrible judgments. With such cataclysmic events foretold for the future of the earth, our spiritual inheritance takes on far greater importance. Since the earth will bear God's wrath, we do well to invest in God's Kingdom, which will never be destroyed.

Rev. 8:6-13

At the blowing of the trumpets, the people of our sinful world will suffer the terrible consequences of sin. There is a day of reckoning for all who reject God's salvation; realizing this should cause us to share our faith with urgency.

Rev. 9:1-4

As the fifth trumpet blows, a locust plague will be unleashed. Unlike regular locusts, however, these creatures will attack people, not plants. Notice that God will not allow these creatures to harm everyone—just those not protected by God's seal. We can be secure in the fact that God is able and willing to protect us when we seek him.

Rev. 9:12-21

As the sixth trumpet blows, an army will rise up and slaughter one-third of the remaining population of the world. Certainly circumstances would seem completely hopeless to most inhabitants of the earth at this point. They could either humble themselves and surrender their lives to God or continue to rebel against the only one who could save them. Sadly, we see that only a few will accept God's gracious offer of forgiveness at that late stage in history. Spiritual blindness seems to grow progressively worse the longer people resist God. When we see spiritual blindness in ourselves or others, we should pray earnestly for eyes that can see the truth.

Rev. 10:8-10

The apostle John was told to eat the scroll, much as the prophet Ezekiel had been instructed to do (see Ezekiel 2:8; 3:1-3). The scroll would be sweet in his mouth but bitter in his stomach. God's Word to us can sometimes work the same way. It contains a sweet message of deliverance for all who repent, but it also calls us to account for our selfish actions. If we are willing to abide by the wise boundaries that God has set out for us, his Word is filled with promises of joy and peace.

Rev. 11:1-13

Like John, the two witnesses described here will serve as God's prophets. During their 1,260-day ministry, they will be protected by God. They will then be killed at the hands of the tyrant from the pit. Notice that God's two prophets are treated even more despicably than Christ, who, in similar circumstances, was at least given a decent burial (see Matthew 27:57-61). In three and a half days, however, God would raise them from the dead, showing that even death cannot thwart his plans. No obstacle is so great that God has to abandon the plan he has laid out for the world and its people.

Rev. 11:15-18

The sounding of the seventh trumpet accompanies a proclamation of God's control over his Kingdom. Many among the nations of the earth have been angry with God without just cause, but now it is time for God's righteous anger to be released. Those who have surrendered themselves to God will be rewarded, while those who have turned their back on him will be judged. The same principle holds true for us. Those who reject God and his offer of salvation will have to face his terrible anger. However, we can look forward to a sure salvation by putting our faith in Christ. He endured the wrath of God against sin for all those who put their faith in him.

Rev. 12:1-17

The birth of Christ and Satan's opposition to the event are graphically depicted in this scene. Jesus the Messiah was born into this world to implement God's plan for the world's restoration. Satan had planted the destructive effects of sin into God's good creation by tempting Adam and Eve to sin. So as Jesus was born to reverse the effects of that sin, Satan did all he could to destroy the infant Savior. Thankfully, Satan was unsuccessful, and the future Ruler of the world was able to complete his earthly mission. As much as Satan desires to thwart God's plan for the world's restoration, he will not be able to do it. Just as Satan cannot thwart God's overall plan, he cannot thwart God's plan of salvation for us if we surrender our lives to him by trusting Christ to pay for our sins. As we grow spiritually, we are already experiencing the restoration that God will complete at the end of the age.

Rev. 13:1-10

Some of Satan's primary representatives are described in these verses. For a time, God will allow them free reign in the world, making life difficult for all who trust Christ for salvation. Ever since the days when Jesus Christ walked this earth, Satan has sought to lead people away from the deliverance God offers. The creatures mentioned here are an intensified form of the spirit of antichrist already active in our world. Satan wants to destroy us. Despite the power Satan wields, he cannot remove us from God's loving care. We should encourage each other with this truth when we encounter spiritual warfare.

Rev. 13:11-18

Another creature representing Satan rises from the earth. Notice that it looks like a lamb, Satan's attempt to copy the appearance of Christ, the Lamb (see 5:6). Notice also that this creature's miracles copy the amazing deeds that were performed by God's two witnesses (see 11:5-6). Satan is clearly trying to deceive people into thinking this lamb represents the true God. He is trying to sell a counterfeit in order to lead people away from the true deliverer—Jesus Christ. We need to be on guard against the counterfeit solutions that Satan puts before us. We do this by testing everything against God's Word.

Rev. 14:1-20

In these verses we see some of the blessings enjoyed by those who trust in Christ (14:1-7, 13-14); then we are shown the terrible consequences of rejecting him (14:8-11, 15-20). The deliverance that God offers us through Jesus Christ is the Good News. We are called to rejoice in God's infinite rule, praising him for his greatness and in return receiving eternal rest. If we refuse to acknowledge God's rule and insist on doing things our own way, we are headed toward complete destruction. But when we persevere in our faith in Jesus Christ, we will be rewarded by God.

Rev. 15:1–16:21

The seven angels with the flasks of God's judgment are portrayed in these chapters. After their actions, the wrath of God directed against the unbelieving world will be complete (see 6:17; 11:18). As sure as the coming of dawn, the day of reckoning will arrive. There will be a day when we have to face the truth about our lives. If we learn to see the truth now, confessing our sin and asking God to redeem us, we will not have to fear seeing the truth later.

Rev. 17:1–19:5

Just as the previous chapters portray God's judgment of those who refuse to believe in Christ, these chapters foretell God's conquest over Satan's henchmen. Even the power of Satan will be overthrown by God when the time is ripe. The devil's representatives will be called to account for the suffering they imposed on God's people. God's people will always win out in the end. To become one of his people, we need to admit our need for God and trust him to deliver us from the power of sin. That way we won't weep when the evil powers in this world are destroyed; we will rejoice instead.

Rev. 19:6–20:10

In these verses we are given a glimpse of Christ, the conquering King. He will return to deliver all those who believe in him. Though great human armies led by Satan and his followers will gather to resist, there will be no contest. Jesus Christ will ride to an overwhelming victory. Those of us who have already surrendered to God by following Jesus Christ will be riding to victory with him. We will finally see the spiritual forces of evil, who opposed our spiritual renewal, utterly destroyed. What a glorious day that will be!

Rev. 20:11-15

At the climactic white throne judgment, those who have rejected God and his ways will have to face eternal consequences. All those who have believed in Christ, however, will be shown amazing grace. Most of us expect our judgment to be based on whether we are guilty or not. At this judgment, though, everyone is guilty. The people who believe in Christ will be forgiven; the people who choose to go their own way will be judged. No matter who we are or how terrible our past, we can have our names written in the Book of Life. We cannot earn a place in that book; we can only receive it as a gift. By surrendering our lives to God in Jesus Christ and trusting him completely for our salvation, our names are recorded there. If our names are not in the Book of Life, all our attempts at so-called spiritual renewal here on earth make no difference at all.

Rev. 21:1-7

What hope this scene gives us! Ever since the first sin in the Garden of Eden, God has been working to restore his earth to its original perfection. He even sent his Son to suffer and die to overcome the power of sin and death and to begin the process of healing. It is God's plan to make old things new! By following his will for our lives, we become part of God's plan of restoration. Here we see that God will restore the earth and satisfy everyone who belongs to him. The water of life will spring forth, healing our souls from their bondage to sin. This passage shows us what it will be like when Christ returns. But by believing in Christ today, we can receive him into our lives and begin this restoration process without delay.

Rev. 21:7-8

In the final evaluation, one group will inherit great eternal blessings. The other group will suffer the second death. The judgment described here for the unrepentant ones is unspeakable. However, those of us who have truly surrendered our lives to God, trusting Jesus Christ for salvation and faithfully following him, will be called children of God. Therefore, we cannot glibly pursue spiritual growth as if it were just some way to enhance our lives. Those of us who look forward to eternal blessings must be compassionate enough to earnestly pray for those who are headed for the second death. This will also cause us to share our faith with sincere urgency.

Rev. 21:10-27

The new Jerusalem is portrayed here as the radiant bride of the Lamb (see 21:2). Notice that the eternal city has 12 gates, representing the 12 tribes of Israel (see 7:4-8), and 12 foundation stones, representing the 12 apostles of Christ. Thus, the city—the bride—represents the people of God. We as the community of faith are members of the church, the bride of Christ. What a wonderful picture of grace! No matter how many mistakes we have made in the past, God forgives us through Christ, and we are brought into an intimate relationship with God.

Rev. 22:1-5

These verses are a climax to the book of Revelation, portraying the eternal state as a new and better Garden of Eden (see Genesis 2-3). God has accomplished his desire to re-create his broken creation. God's healing power will be easily accessible, and an intimate, face-to-face relationship with God will be the norm. His presence will bring light to every dark corner, making cruelty and deception impossibilities in his new world. What can only be a dream in our present sinful world will then be eternal reality. What a source of hope this picture can be for us! No matter how bad our lives are now, there is hope for the future. If we accept the wonderful offer of salvation that God holds out to us in Jesus Christ, we will someday be a part of that blessed world.

Rev. 22:20-21

We can anchor our new lives in the certainty that Christ is coming again. By trusting him with our future, we can better deal with our past and live a more productive present. We, like the apostle John, can pray for Christ to return soon because we know for certain that his coming will be a blessing for us. This will not only give us hope to persevere during tough times; it will also enhance the growth of our personal relationship with him. As we trust in God, having the hope of meeting him face to face, we will seek to prepare ourselves to come into full union with him by growing in holiness.
